The hon. and learned Gentleman referred to providing finance for good causes and to improving the welfare state. He even went as far as to say that some of the charitable donations would aid medical research. I find it disgusting and nauseating that people such as the hon. and learned Gentleman and his Friends who, in the past 13 years, have trooped through the Lobbies consistently to attack the health service, education, housing and the poor in our society, such as pensioners and the disabled, should now raise the spectre of a lottery as a panacea for the ills of millions of people in this country.

The hon. and learned Gentleman stated in The House Magazine not only that the lottery would raise £3 billion a year, but that it would not affect the low-paid because they do not buy lottery tickets. However, experience in Ireland disproves that contention. Fund-raising for charities has attracted money from low-paid families, thus causing even more financial distress to those who seek the pot of gold.

Apart from my concern about the social consequences of the proposed lottery, I speak with a vested interest because I come from Liverpool and Littlewoods Pools is based in my constituency. I live a stone's throw from the new Vernons complex. We in Liverpool are proud of our area. We already have high unemployment as a direct consequence of the Government's policies and the system that they represent. The Bill would jeopardise the jobs of 6,000 mainly female workers in Liverpool, many of whom already face the prospect of being their families' sole bread winner. That is the prospect for an area that has been evaluated as a centre of poverty, not only by those of us who live in Liverpool, but by experts.

I hope and believe that the Bill will be defeated today and that hon. Members will not support it. There are other ways of achieving what have speciously been referred to as "good social works". Such works will not be achieved by the Conservative party, a member of which has introduced the Bill. When one looks at the social and economic conditions that prevail in this country today, one sees that such people are not philanthropists. People talk about obtaining new money by the lottery. Where will the new money come from? Reference has been made to the poll tax. This week 135,000 poverty-stricken people in Liverpool are going through the courts. Where will they find the money to fund the arts? They cannot afford to go into galleries or even the bus fares to travel there. Yet those are the people who are supposed to be enamoured of the Bill.

The record of the hon. and learned Member for Burton on health, education, housing and funding local authorities, pensioners and the poor does not attract me to him or anything that he stands for. I believe that the House will reject the Bill today and that people in my constituency will be happy about that.

Mr. Simon Burns (Chelmsford): May I first add my congratulations to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on winning the lottery of the private Members' ballot and introducing this Bill. As my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) said, it is a Bill which has reached its time and is long overdue.

In order not to cause any confusion or fall foul of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), I should—although I am not sure that I must—declare an interest. After I introduced my 10-minute Bill on a national lottery in 1988 I spent a week visiting the United States sponsored by others to see how lotteries operated in certain states.

The people of Britain enjoy a justifiably high reputation for the generosity with which they donate money earned by themselves to good causes. The Charities Aid Foundation calculated in 1985 that there were 160,000 charities in England and Wales which raised over £12·5 billion for good causes. Since that date we have seen the phenomena of Live Aid, telethons and the Wishing Well appeal for Great Ormond Street hospital. That shows beyond any reasonable doubt that we are a nation of givers. In addition to those high-profile fund-raising activities, various forms of local lotteries have been permitted under existing legislation. They were consolidated in the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976. However, they have tended to be a failure.

In 1983-84 there were 4,045 local lotteries, with ticket sales of just over £40 million. By 1987-88 there were only 1,401 local lotteries, with sales of only £21 million. Those figures show a decline of 76 and 59 per cent. respectively. The cause of that decline is not the basic idea or principle behind the lotteries but that they are too small and fail to generate enough interest or excitement. Only a national lottery can achieve that. Furthermore, because there are so many lotteries throughout the country on such small scales, they tend to dilute their own effect. Similarly, the maximum prize money laid down by legislation is so relatively small that it does not attract enough people to participate.

If a lottery is to be successful, it is crucial that excitement be generated. Far too often, the time scale between purchase of the ticket and the draw in a local lottery is far too long to generate success. That is why I believe that my hon. and learned Friend is so right to seek to get away from the legislation that is failing and introduce a single national lottery that will generate interest, excitement and sales so that we can make a success of it and make available generous amounts of money for good causes such as sport, the arts, heritage and charities.

One of the main reasons for personal opposition to lotteries is that they encourage gambling. There is a great deal of contradiction and confusion in that position. I also suspect that some people in Britain always oppose lotteries and gambling for the same reason that they would like to see alcohol and tobacco and certain activities which they consider a vice banned. It is important to make a distinction for a national lottery.

All too often many people who say that a lottery would encourage gambling and, thus, is wrong will unwittingly contribute to gambling. For example, I think that I am right in saying that every major political party represented in the House generates some of its funds, either locally or nationally, through gambling. Any hon. Member who goes to church or party political fete will probably buy a raffle ticket during his or her political career—probably quite often. That is gambling. That is a form of lottery, yet the people who buy tickets and who may be opposed to gambling will not condemn such activities.

Mr. Bellotti: The distinction that I should like the hon. Member to tackle is what the proceeds of gambles are for. In the Bill that the hon. Member put before the House in 1988, he suggested that the proceeds of his proposal should go to the national health service. Does he still hold that view? Has he not come round to the view that the Government ought to provide all the funds necessary for the health service, and that we should not have a national lottery to support it?

Mr. Burns: The hon. Gentleman is trying to tempt me down a cul-de-sac off the Bill before us. However, he is incorrect. The Government have increased national health service spending substantially in the past 12 years. Furthermore, if he read carefully the reasons behind my Bill he would realise that it was to provide additional funds. For many years the health service has benefited from additional funds raised by leagues of friends and other interested parties.

To return to the Bill, a number of people who have strong religious convictions, which I respect, condemn gambling but are happy to buy raffle tickets at a church fete and take part in gambling activities to encourage the financing of their local church, a rebuilding project, or whatever else.

Before people strongly criticise gambling they should examine their own behaviour. They should not use that as an excuse—as what they believe is a respectable front—to oppose the principle of a national lottery. If they do so, they will be failing many organisations that could genuinely benefit from the additional money generated by a national lottery.

Like many other hon. Members, I have been bombarded with data, correspondence and lobbying by the pools organisations, which have been mentioned so often in the debate. In many ways they operate as a cartel and have a monopoly on a national lottery. I fully appreciate that they are fearful of any competition and that they want to defend vigorously their self-interest by throwing up some red herrings and some genuine causes for concern about a national lottery. If such a national lottery were to be successful it might well cause some decline in their revenue, although by nowhere near the amount that they are suggesting. They are defending what is, in effect, a monopolistic national lottery.

I do not see why we should automatically accept that a national lottery will ruin the pools system. The examples of Belgium and Greece have been bandied about the House, but that argument was effectively squashed because they did not run their pools on their own football games—it is obvious that that weakens loyalty to the pools system—whereas in this country the system is based on our football leagues. So in that respect I see no reason why a lottery should be detrimental. Similarly, pools promoters who oppose a national lottery are more deserving of being described as selfish—as they have accused others of being —because they seek to protect the pools, with their link to football, at the price of depriving the rest of British sports, arts and heritage of the funding, capital and endowment funds that they so desperately need. I do not see why they should be so keen to deprive others. There is more money to be shared. The cake should be widened and shared, so that everyone can benefit.

A national lottery would be popular and fun. It would generate income to help deserving causes. I greatly hope that my hon. and learned Friend's Bill will be given a Second Reading.

Ms. Kate Hoey (Vauxhall): I am pleased to have the chance today to contribute briefly to the debate. I have always supported the concept of a national lottery and I am even more convinced now of the need for one than I was 10 years ago.

Although I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) that the Bill is unlikely to become legislation in its present form, I am delighted that it provides an opportunity for people to hear the arguments on both sides, for us to air many of the misconceptions about a national lottery and for the Home Office officials to take lots of notes. No matter what Government are in power after the general election—I know that there will be a Labour Government—at some stage next Session Home Office officials will draft a proper Bill, so I hope that they are listening hard today.

It is particularly important that we are discussing this at the beginning of 1992. No matter what is being said, other European countries will undoubtedly find a way of getting their national lottery tickets sold here. They are already coming here and each year thousands of tickets are seized by Customs and Excise. The European gambling industry is large and I believe that it will not continue to be outside the terms of the single market. That is the context in which we need to consider the debate.

In Northern Ireland it is not so much poor people buying lottery tickets from southern Ireland as people in cars queuing up and going over the border to buy lottery tickets. Other countries' lottery tickets are already being sold in the United Kingdom. [HON. MEMBERS: "Illegally."] Yes, illegally, and that will continue until gambling comes within the terms of the single market, as I am convinced that it will.

This is an enabling Bill. It does not go into detail. There are different views about the details and how a national lottery would work, but the Bill does lay down clear areas for the proceeds—sport, the arts, the heritage and small charities. Lotteries should target particular projects. I have views on how a national lottery should work. We should not follow the example of some other countries. We should have lotteries aimed at particular targets, such as to build a velodrome. That will involve not just those who want to take part in a lottery but people with a particular interest in the project who will buy a one-off ticket because they know that their money is going to a worthwhile project. We could consider all sorts of possibilities for the detail.

National lottery proceeds are not a substitute for money that should come from the state. Lottery proceeds are extra money. All the sponsors of the Bill agree on that; there is no way that the proceeds can go to anything other than what has been mentioned here without a further debate in Parliament, a complete change and a new Bill. None of the sponsors wants that. We know clearly where the proceeds should go.

Last night at a Labour party ward meeting I spent £2 on a raffle ticket. I did not win—I never do. I do not believe that buying a lottery ticket or a raffle ticket is gambling. Nor do I believe that the average member of the British public believes that it is.

To buy a lottery ticket would be totally different from gambling on the pools or on horses or dog racing. To participate in a lottery is a harmless amusement, just like a raffle, and is far removed from the compulsive world of casinos, card houses and gaming machines. It is patronising to the poor to imply that they do not have the free will to make a choice about whether to buy a lottery ticket. I accept that some people are totally opposed to gambling, but I do not believe that a lottery would extend gambling as those people fear.

We have been inundated with literature about this issue from the pools industry. I wonder how much it has spent on that? However, it has the right to lobby for its industry. It is a question of balance. I do not believe that those who have done the pools for years will suddenly stop doing so because a national lottery has been introduced. I do the pools with Zetters, not Littlewoods—I am giving Zetters a plug—and I have done so for many years. I have never won a penny, but I shall not cancel my standing order simply because a national lottery may be introduced. I do not believe that others will stop doing the pools either. It is patronising to suggest that people are so easily persuaded to change a habit of a lifetime. People should have the choice about what they want to do.

One of the good things that has come from the debate on a national lottery is that the pools industry has started to realise that perhaps it has taken too much of the profits and that not enough has gone back into football. After all, most of those who play the pools have an interest in that sport. Perhaps the pools industry will now put more money back into football in an attempt to win the argument.

Our pools industry is unique, as it is totally different from that run in any other European country. It has a long history. I do not believe that it will be affected by the introduction of a national lottery. At the most, the effects on the pools industry will be slight.

I appreciate the concerns that have been expressed by those who represent Liverpool and Glasgow about the possible loss of jobs. However, I do not believe that those jobs will be threatened, because I do not believe that people will stop doing the pools just because a lottery is introduced. The people who will buy a one-off lottery ticket will be different from those who do the pools regularly.

I am pleased that small charities are mentioned in the Bill. I appreciate the anxieties that are felt by local football clubs and sports clubs that run small-scale lotteries. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) has said, people buy a lottery ticket in those circumstances out of loyalty to their club. In essence, they are giving a donation because they do not expect to win a huge amount of money. I do not believe that that loyalty will be put at risk by the introduction of a national lottery.

The debate has been useful because it has revealed some existing prejudices. Even if the Bill does not receive its Second Reading, no one can deny that the public would like a national lottery. However, that lottery must be carefully planned and scrutinised so that it can win people's confidence.

Those who are doing the pools this weekend have nothing to fear. If a national lottery were introduced, they would still be able to do the pools. I am absolutely convinced that the pools industry and the jobs associated with it are not threatened. Today's debate marks the beginning, because this issue will not go away.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Home Department (Mr. Peter Lloyd): Rather than my commenting individually on the many good speeches that have been made in this lively debate, the House might find it more helpful if I set out the Government's position.

I congratulate my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on his good fortune in the ballot for private Members' Bills. As several hon. Members have said, it is appropriate that his success in the parliamentary lottery for legislative time should provide the opportunity to debate the introduction of a national lottery for good causes. The odds of winning a national lottery must be better than those of winning the ballot for private Members' Bills.

My hon. and learned Friend made a characteristically vigorous and full speech. I applaud his initiative in bringing the issue before the House. The Government warmly welcome the idea of a national lottery or lotteries. We recognise, as many hon. Members have, that they could raise substantial amounts of money for good causes. On the basis of experience abroad, estimates of turnover here range from £1 billion to £4 billion or more, although such comparisons should be treated with much caution. We have seen how other countries have managed to provide resources for valuable projects that would not, and probably could not, have been funded from ordinary public expenditure. Indeed, as my hon. and learned Friend said, apart from Albania, the United Kingdom is the only European country that does not have a lottery.

The first Westminster bridge in 1750 and the setting up of the British museum in 1753 were financed by lotteries. Despite such achievements, state lotteries in this country ended in 1826. However, there is no shortage of projects today that, with funds from a national lottery, could improve the quality of life in the United Kingdom.

The success of foreign lotteries provides an additional argument for having a national lottery here. It has frequently been predicted that we shall be forced to accept national lotteries from other EC countries on or soon after 1 January 1993. Indeed, that prediction has been repeated today, but the Government believe that the threat has been highly exaggerated. The programme for completion of the single market does not contain proposals for the harmonisation of gambling legislation. The European Commission is studying gambling in the single market, but no formal proposals have been made. We believe that our present prohibition on major lotteries, which applies equally to domestic and foreign ones, is compatible with EC law. By contrast, other EC countries have national lotteries, but do not allow foreign lotteries to operate in their territory.

Mr. Tracey: Will my hon. Friend confirm that between 3 million and 6 million unofficial lotteries come into this country by letter and are not stopped by Customs?

Mr. Lloyd: No, I cannot confirm that, because those that we do not catch we do not know about, but about 3 million forms have been seized by Customs in the past year.

Our policy is that controls on gambling should remain a matter for national authorities. We believe that many other countries will take a similar view. We cannot be certain of the final outcome, but it seems extremely unlikely, to put it mildly, that there will be a common market in lotteries in the foreseeable future. It is likely to become increasingly easy for individuals to participate in foreign lotteries. For example, satellite television provides new opportunities for foreign lotteries to promote themselves. Modern technology means that participation will become easier. Such developments may take a number of years to emerge, but their impact is likely to grow with time.

There are incentives for European countries to try to promote their lotteries here. Without a national lottery here, there will be incentives for people who wish to take part in other lotteries to do so. Those incentives would be considerably less if we had our major lottery in support of good causes.

Clearly my hon. and learned Friend, who is an experienced hand where private Members' legislation is concerned and a shrewd lawyer to boot, rightly recognises that there are many ways of providing and regulating national lotteries and that there are a host of practical considerations that have to be thought through and which it is not practicable to tackle in a private Member's Bill. That is why, I am sure that his Bill is deliberately designed —indeed, he said as much—as an enabling measure which provides a broad framework and leaves the Government to fill in by means of subordinate legislation not merely the gritty detail, but most of the substance.

Leaving aside for a moment whether that is a proper and desirable way for the House to bring in a measure which will have a very wide impact on a whole range of charities and businesses, the Bill nevertheless does in fact limit the range of possible options considerably more than might appear at first sight. The most important way in which it does so is by providing for a single lottery rather than opening up the opportunity for genuine charitable concerns—singly or grouped together—to run a lottery nationally, as they now do successfully locally. That is a very substantial issue with implications for many charitable interests, particularly for those who currently benefit from their local lotteries, but who feel that they may well not be high on the priority list for help from a single national lottery.

If we opt for a single lottery, decisions have, of course, to be made about who will benefit, and machinery has to be devised to share out the proceeds. The Bill proposes that arts, sports and the heritage should receive the lion's share. Charities are to get no more than 10 per cent., perhaps less. All these causes are undoubtedly worthwhile, but there are many who would argue that the proceeds should be split differently or that other good causes should be included.

One means of resolving these difficulties would be to allow a free market in major lotteries. In this way, the public could decide which good cause or causes they wanted to support. We already have a free market in small local lotteries. No charity would be excluded from the benefits of a major lottery if it could run one properly and cared to risk the considerable investment either on its own or—much more likely—in conjunction with others. While it is attractive for those reasons, I also acknowledge there are strong arguments the other way. The greater number of lotteries, at least initially, could mean that each one would have lower prizes and attract lower turnover and so raise less money in total than a single lottery. That need not, however, be the outcome. The merits of that approach, rather than the single national lottery proposed by the Bill, need further consideration and consultation before legislation is introduced which must inevitably close off one option.

Another way in which the Bill appears to limit options is that it seems to provide for the national lottery regulatory authority to run only one lottery at a time. Some countries, although they have a single authority, are able to run a number of different games at the same time. The question of the number and nature of the lotteries that may be run will affect the potential available for good causes. It would also have implications for other existing forms of gambling, particularly small lotteries.

The Bill also rules out a regulatory role for the Gaming Board for Great Britain which currently has responsibility for licensing small lotteries. I do not now claim that, if we had a single national lottery, there would necessarily be a substantial regulatory burden or that regulation must fall to the Gaming Board, but we certainly need to think carefully about, and reflect in primary legislation, where the responsibility for regulation should rest and how it should be conducted.

I mention these as areas in which, despite the care of my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton, any enabling legislation must inevitably close off some important options. He might argue that some of these difficulties, though not, I suggest, all of them, could be overcome by amending the Bill in Committee to allow even greater flexibility. But rather than leaving even more out, I suspect that there are already a number of matters which the House might feel should be included in any well-formulated primary legislation on the issue.

For example, the Bill says nothing about the maximum proportions of total turnover which can be devoted to prizes or to expenses. This is not just a matter of consumer protection. If a national lottery is to fulfil its main charitable purpose, it is crucial to ensure that a minimum proportion goes to good causes. In relation to existing charity and local authority lotteries, no more than half the turnover may be devoted to prizes and no more than 25 per cent. may be used for expenses. Those limits are laid down in primary legislation. That seems to me to be right, both because it is a major aspect of regulation, and because otherwise we could be faced with constant pressure to keep changing the proportions. Equally, there would need to be careful study of all the evidence before deciding what the proportions should be for a national lottery.

There is also the essential bread and butter question, with implications for amending existing primary legislation, as to how a national lottery would fit into the wider framework of gambling controls. Lotteries have always been regarded as the softest form of gambling. They are the only form of gambling which may be advertised quite freely, including on television and radio. By contrast, all other forms of gambling are subject to varying degrees of control on the facilities they can offer to attract customers, and on their advertising. In particular, the broadcast advertising of all betting and gaming is prohibited.

The implications for advertising controls are, therefore, one obvious area requiring study. We need to consider whether controls on the extent and nature of the advertising of a national lottery are necessary. The controls on advertising of commercial gambling will also need to be considered. Some of these are contained in primary legislation. But there may be demands for other changes. Premises used for gambling might want to sell lottery tickets, which is at present unlawful. The pools companies would want the controls on them relaxed, perhaps by making coupons available in shops, and changes in the law to permit regular jackpots.

All those points must be examined. It may well prove that no changes can be justified. I suspect that many people would take the view that a national lottery for good causes can be distinguished easily from all other commercial gambling and there might be strong opposition to a national lottery if it were allowed to lead to a significant extension of commercial gambling. But many of the points that I have mentioned would require primary legislation. They need to be considered at the same time as the introduction of a national lottery, not as an afterthought.

Mr. Lawrence: I agree with all that my hon. Friend the Minister has said, and I am grateful for his remarks. But, as he keeps repeating that there would be a need for primary legislation, does he not agree that whatever may be added to the Bill in Committee or at other points in its passage through Parliament would become primary legislation? All the suggestions that my hon. Friend has made are no reason why the Bill should not go into Committee.

Mr. Lloyd: I have also mentioned many times the need for consultation, study and the taking of evidence. The time scale and methods of a private Member's Bill do not allow for that.

The question of gambling controls leads directly to the likely effect of a national lottery on existing gambling, particularly the football pools, as we have heard this morning. The supporters of a national lottery argue that it will tap a source of new money and that the existing gambling industry will not be affected. But the huge sums which it is claimed will be raised by a national lottery must come from somewhere, and that may well be from people who spend nothing on gambling at the moment, but who will be drawn to take part in a national lottery. Equally, it would be surprising if some people did not, in the event, divert some or all of their spending on existing gambling into a new national lottery.

It is, of course, difficult to tell in advance to what extent a national lottery would reduce expenditure on existing forms of gambling. The football pools are the nearest thing we have to a national lottery and I know that their organisers are very concerned. They even say that they could eventually be driven out of business and point to other countries where the introduction of a major lottery has killed or seriously damaged the football pools. At present, the pools companies employ about 6,500 people, mainly in areas of high unemployment. Those jobs, as well as those of about 70,000 part-time pools collectors, are thus, they insist, at risk.

The evidence of surveys about the likely effect on the pools is mixed. The survey conducted for the Rothschild commissioners suggested that about 25 per cent. of regular pools participants would switch to a national lottery. More recently, opinion surveys on behalf of supporters of a national lottery have suggested that under 10 per cent. of pools participants would spend less on the pools.

The conflicting evidence about the impact of a national lottery on the pools illustrates the need for a careful examination of the issues. We should not just brush aside their concerns, but we should not accept that a national lottery must mean major difficulty, if not the end, for the pools. We need to study the evidence carefully and to give those directly affected the chance to put not only their views, but the evidence on which they base their views.

Mr. Ashton: The Government have said that football grounds will have to be all-seater—as a result of 95 people having been killed at Hillsborough—by 1994 for the first and second divisions. The money for that will have to come from the pools and the Government are now blocking their contribution. If the football pools money were to collapse, would the Government still insist on the all-seater legislation being implemented by 1994?

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman makes the assumption that legislation will be introduced which will cause the pools to collapse. The hon. Gentleman said that the money comes from the pools now, but would not come if the pools collapsed. The effect of a national lottery on the pools must be thought through and the question would have to be addressed before legislation went through the House.

To the extent that a national lottery would have an impact on the pools or, indeed, on any other form of commercial gambling, the Government must also take account of the revenue implications. In 1990-91, just over £1 billion was raised from betting and gaming duties, of which about 30 per cent. came from pool betting duty. In many countries, national lotteries are either taxed or the proceeds directly to the Exchequer. The Rothschild royal commission suggested that a national lottery should be taxed at 10 per cent. of turnover. There is certainly a strong case for taxation of a national lottery, although that, thank goodness, is ultimately a matter on which the Chancellor, rather than I, will animadvert.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): That was a Freudian slip.

Mr. Lloyd: It was not a Freudian slip. My hesitation means that I need a drink of water.

The revenue implications of a national lottery also need to be resolved before legislation is passed.

I come now to what may be one of the most important issues that need to be taken into account—the implications for existing charitable lotteries and charitable giving generally. Many European countries have long traditions of national lotteries, but weaker patterns of charitable giving than this country has. Although direct international comparisons cannot, therefore, be made, the introduction of a national lottery might affect charitable giving by individuals, estimated to be between £3·5 billion and £5 billion in 1989-90. Many national and local charities and sporting bodies promote lotteries under the current law. Such lotteries provide sums which, although small compared with the proceeds of a national lottery, are vital to the charities concerned. The Bill proposes that charities should receive no more than 10 per cent. of the proceeds of a national lottery. That may well be insufficient to compensate charities for what they might lose in revenue diverted from their existing small lotteries. Indeed, it may be impossible to ensure that all small charities that feel that they have lost out are compensated however high the percentage adopted, especially if a section of the public come to confine their charitable giving to the purchase of national lottery tickets.

The supporters of national lotteries usually claim that experience in other countries shows that small lotteries have not suffered. Ireland has been mentioned as a country in which small lotteries have thrived following the introduction of a major lottery. In fact, Ireland seems to provide clear evidence that small lotteries have lost out. Last year, a number of leading Irish charities expressed their concern that the national lottery had cut annual sales of traditional charitable lotteries by as much as 50 per cent.

In part, that may be due to an unfair balance in the rules governing the two types of lottery—national and local—but it clearly raises the question whether a national lottery here should be accompanied by changes to the existing statutory controls governing small lotteries. For example, should the monetary limits on prizes and proceeds be increased and, if so, by how much? At present, the largest lottery has a maximum single prize of £12,000 and maximum turnover of £180,000. Many other aspects of the conduct of small lotteries, including their frequency, promotion and regulation, would also require study. In some areas, change would require primary legislation to amend the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976.

Mr. Alton: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Lloyd: I shall not give way because I know that other hon. Members want to speak. I have a bit more to say and I want to limit others as little as possible.

Unless those matters are tackled at the same time as legislation on a national lottery, we shall be in danger of putting some small charitable lotteries at a severe disadvantage. It would be unfair to press ahead without proper study of the consequences for them.

I have sought to illustrate that the introduction of a national lottery is a complex matter affecting many aspects of existing primary legislation on gambling. These issues have emerged from the Government's initial study of the implications of a national lottery during the previous Session and no doubt quite a number more would need to be resolved before we could come forward with a Bill which it would be right to put before the House.

As I made clear at the outset, the Government see attractions in the concept of a national lottery and we wish to examine further the issues that it raises. In doing so, it will be important to invite the views of all interested parties, particularly the charities, large and small, and the pools companies. We shall put that work in hand immediately and announce our conclusions as soon as possible. Although I said at the start of my speech that the Government welcome the concept of a national lottery, we must, I emphasise, seek evidence from all those likely to be affected before decisions are made about how best to proceed. The drafting of the Bill has sought skilfully to avoid those issues, but, as I have indicated, they must be resolved first.

However, I have sought to underline the Government's warm interest and our firm intention to take matters forward in the way that will give everyone a chance to put his views and for the important questions to be resolved. Until that work has been completed, the Government cannot give any final commitment about the outcome.

I hope that my hon. and learned Friend and the House will agree that the course that I have indicated the Government will now take is the right way of tackling this complex subject. We recognise the need to move quickly, but there must be proper consideration and consultation first. We owe that much to those who work in the existing gambling industries. We owe it to the good causes that stand to lose, as well as to those that stand to gain from a national lottery, and we owe it to the citizens of this country, for whom a national lottery, if it comes, should not be merely an extension of gambling but, in the words of the Rothschild royal commission,

"a harmless entertainment providing a rare opportunity to improve the quality of British life".

Finally, I commend my hon. and learned Friend, not merely for his excellent speech but for providing the House with the opportunity to concentrate on the question. It will be clear from what I have said, however, that I cannot ask the House to support the Second Reading. However, it will also be clear from what I have said that, as a result of his energy and eloquence, my hon. and learned Friend has greatly added to the momentum of the cause that he is promoting.

Mr. Stuart Randall (Kingston upon Hull, West): Like other hon. Members, I congratulate the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on doing so well in the ballot and on giving us an opportunity—whether or not we agree with a national lottery—to express our views in this constructive debate. I thank the Minister for his comments, which I read as being rather cool to the whole thing. I thank him in particular for implying that there will be a need for a considerable amount of work and analysis. That makes sense, and that clarification is welcome.

The hon. and learned Member for Burton has introduced a short Bill which, as he quite rightly said, is an enabling Bill. It gives the Secretary of State the power to decide how some of the highly complex issues surrounding the introduction of a national lottery should be dealt with. In particular, the Secretary of State would be empowered to decide how a national lottery would fit in to the existing gambling structure in the United Kingdom. He would also be empowered to take all the policy decisions to make a national lottery viable.

The hon. and learned Member for Burton has introduced a "feel good" Bill. It appears to be based on the question: who would like to spend lots of money on sport, the arts, heritage and everything else? The answer to that must be that we all want to see more money spent on the arts, heritage and other things. Asking that question is easy. We must then ask how that can be achieved. Apart from a few general and obvious points, the Bill ducks the question entirely.

As I said in an intervention, no one knows what income would be generated from a national lottery. It would be misleading for the country if any of us suggested what amounts of money might be spent on good causes. We do not know how much will be spent, especially when we bear in mind the fact that the Government's policy of not stimulating demand is still extant.

I do not want to speak for long, as other hon. Members wish to participate in the debate. However, it might be useful if I were to outline at the outset the Labour party's position with regard to funding sport and the arts.

We believe that there is a need to review funding arrangements for sport and the arts. In our policy document entitled "Charter for Sport" we stated:

"We will set up a major review of sport finance and sponsorship, levy, betting and taxation to ensure that a fairer proportion of the money taken out of sport goes back into sport."

In another policy document entitled "Arts and the Media: our Cultural Future", we stated in the section on private funding:

"We will give serious consideration to the proposal to establish a national lottery for the benefit of the arts. We will set up an inquiry to examine the means by which this could be achieved with the lowest possible administrative costs, whilst safeguarding the existence of established arrangements and employment."

In practice, that means that when we form the Government in the next few months we will carry out a deep-seated review of the funding of sport and the arts and possibly other areas which will also protect the 4,630 jobs on Merseyside, the 730 jobs in Glasgow, the 640 jobs in Cardiff and the 500 jobs in London. The Labour party wants to protect the 6,500 full-time jobs in the football pools companies and the 70,000 to 100,000 part-time jobs —the collectors—associated with them. What I have referred to concerns the possible impact on jobs of the introduction of a national lottery.

Detailed answers need also to be given to questions regarding the possible loss of nearly a third of a billion pounds of revenue to the Exchequer arising from taxes on football pool stakes. If that were to happen, we would need to ask how the Treasury would be compensated. We also need answers to questions about current funding for the Football Trust, which amounts to more than £30 million per annum and which is vital to the improvement of our football stadiums, as proposed in the Taylor report following the Hillsborough disaster.

As a result of information made available to hon. Members, it is perfectly reasonable to argue that the piecemeal introduction of a national lottery could prejudice such funding. If so, where will the money come from to compensate for losses? What will be the rules for funding the Football Trust? How can we be sure that the trustees responsible for running the lottery, which essentially is a private system of funding, will be sympathetic to the Football Trust? There is nothing in the Bill which says that they should. My argument for the Football Trust applies equally to the Foundation for Sport and the Arts which receives more than £60 million per annum from the pools.

Those questions are fundamental. The reason why there are no firm answers is that the Bill is a private Member's Bill. That means that there has been no time —I agree with the Minister—for proper consultation on the matter. There is a range of unanswered questions. We do not even know whether a national lottery would be financially viable, as it can be argued that no other country offers the same variety of opportunities for gambling which would be in competition. Even more important, we have not the faintest idea of what tax regime a lottery would work under.

Successive Conservative and Labour Governments have consistently regulated gambling for two reasons—first, to limit gambling to adults and to exclude children, and, secondly, to prevent crime. The House should note that, throughout the rest of Europe, gambling is controlled by Ministers of Finance, rather than as it is in the United Kingdom, where control comes under the Home Office and Home Office Ministers. The reason for that is that we have always looked beyond the fiscal aspects of gambling and, instead, have regulated gambling in order to contain its social impact. A consequence of that consistent approach to regulation is that the United Kingdom has the lowest incidence of illegal gambling in Europe, in marked contrast to Italy, where gambling is in the firm grip of the Mafia.

Mr. David Ashby (Leicestershire, North-West): Tut, tut, an unjustified slur on a great country.

Mr. Randall: The hon. Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) is making sounds. He should talk to people at the EC Commission who feel that they cannot get reliable statistics because of that impact.

The major factor in the central control of British gambling is that we should seek only to satisfy unstimulated demand. In practice, that means that the broadcasting media may not be used for advertising and that controls are placed on the number of sales outlets. Experience shows that existing major lotteries require heavy advertising to become viable. This Bill will probably need massive advertising on television and in the press and on radio and the use of direct mailing techniques.

It should be noted that the per capita stake in the United Kingdom is likely to be higher than in most European countries apart from Spain. That is based upon the Minister's own figure of £1·12 per week, which was included in the Library briefing on the Bill. It is reasonable to conclude from the Minister's figures, in both absolute and comparative terms, that the amount of so-called new money available for a national lottery in the United Kingdom could be quite limited. Its viability will depend to a greater extent on persuading punters to place their stakes in the lottery rather than using other gambling opportunities. That could mean that the departure from the existing policy of not stimulating demand would have to be substantial.

An important question that has not been addressed is whether Parliament is now prepared to drop the system of regulation that has been so successful and whether Parliament would accept that stimulating the demand for gambling is acceptable on the ground that the money raised would be used for worthwhile causes. We do not know the answer to that question. The Labour party believes that the country should be properly consulted before any such change in policy is made.

The hon. and learned Member for Burton has tried to bypass the arguments about stimulation of demand by saying:

> "After 1992, the Government will almost certainly be unable to stop European lotteries from flooding into Britain . . . It would be absurd if British money were to be spent on good causes in Spain, Italy or Germany, but could not be spent to improve the British way of life".

The hon. and learned Gentleman is looking bewildered. I am quoting from his article The House Magazine on 13 January. At the moment, that argument is unsustainable. I shall not go into the reasons why I think that, because the Minister's answers have made that point perfectly clear.

Apart from the Minister's comments on the unlikelihood of there being any immediate competition from the EEC as a result of the single market, I suspect that it will not be in the interests of member states to promote competition between national lotteries because punters will always tend to place their stakes with the biggest lotteries because they offer the biggest prizes. Certainly competition could result in a fall in the income to the Exchequer and in the investment made in good causes in certain member states because one national lottery may be smaller than those of other member states. The biggest national lotteries will always be the most successful.

If there were to be competition between national lotteries across the EEC because of the single market, it is probable that a new British national lottery would not be able to compete with the established biggest lotteries in the EEC entirely because of the size of the prizes. If, for argument's sake, we accepted the hon. and learned Gentleman's assertion that European lotteries would flood into Britain in about 12 months, the business risks associated with a national lottery could be substantial.

I turn briefly to the effect that a national lottery could have on the football pools. Would the pools really be able to survive? If the current system of regulation and taxation were to be retained for the pools, the purpose of which has been to curtail expenditure by the public on gambling, and if a national lottery were free to operate in the way in which the hon. and learned Member for Burton envisages —in a free market—the pools would probably either collapse or be severely damaged. They would be competing in an unfair environment. They would be heavily taxed at 37·5 per cent., whereas a national lottery would be taxed at an appreciably lower rate. In addition, the pools face constraints on advertising which a national lottery would not. It is inconceivable that the football pools could survive such a skew in the competitive environment.

Mr. Ashby rose——

Mr. Randall: I apologise to the hon. Gentleman, but I do not want to give way because other hon. Members wish to speak and I should like to conclude my speech as soon as I can.

I refer now to table 1 of the booklet from the Advisory Forum on Gambling, which I am sure all hon. Members have received. It shows that gross remittances would go from about——

Mr. Lawrence: It is a pools company.

Mr. Randall: Of course it is——

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: The hon. Gentleman did not say that it was.

Mr. Randall: I am quoting the forum. It is for the hon. Lady to know that it has interests in football. I accept that it has. But notwithstanding that—[Interruption.] The hon. Lady says that we should question the figures——

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: I did not. I said—[Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order.

Mr. Randall: It is implicit in what I am saying that we should always question figures because those who produce them may have an interest.

The forum estimates that, if we started the national lottery this year, the gross remittances would fall from £866 million in 1991-92 to about £260 million in 1994-95. The duty to the Exchequer would fall from about a third of a billion pounds to £97·5 million. The donations to sport and the arts would drop considerably from just below £100 million to about £13 million. So the consequences are serious.

I have a letter from Coopers and Lybrand Europe which other hon. Members may have received. I quote from a letter from Mr. Frank McFadden to Littlewoods Pools. It says:

"I have long ago formed the opinion that the introduction of a UK national lottery would effectively kill off the football pools within a period of weeks. This closely follows the pattern with regard to Littlewoods Pools in Belgium which, following the introduction of a national lottery, survived only three weeks.

As you are aware, the UK has the largest gambling and gaming market within the European Community. In addition, however, it demonstrates a high propensity to bet, which is only exceeded by Spain, Greece and Ireland. Such propensity to bet indicates that there is a limited elasticity of demand for additional gambling and gaming products in Britain and, as a result, a successful national lottery would act as a substitute for the football pools."

I shall conclude now because I know that other hon. Members wish to speak and I do not want to hog the time. As I have already said, the Labour party is committed to reviewing the system of and arrangements for funding sport, the arts and other activities. We shall do that when we form the Government in the next few weeks. We also believe that the private Member's Bill mechanism is not appropriate for introducing a national lottery. As the Bill is a private Member's Bill, it lacks depth and has involved little or no consultation. There is no way of assessing the viability of a national lottery at this stage.

We also believe that there are serious risks that the introduction of a national lottery could seriously damage or destroy our successful football pools system, which has great integrity and is held in such high esteem by the British people. That is not to mention the huge contribution that the pools make to the Treasury. Surely the time is ripe for much more thought to be given to the whole matter.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The Standing Order on 10-minute speeches has been lifted, but if every hon. Member present is to be allowed to speak, I must ask for a voluntary restraint of five minutes.

1.37 pm

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): I will certainly abide by your ruling, Madam Deputy Speaker.

It is a great pleasure to follow the hon. Member for the great city of Kingston upon Hull, the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall). I agree with what he said about the effects that a national lottery would have on the pools industry. That is just one reason why I cannot support the Bill. I say that with some regret, because I have the highest personal regard for my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence).

I have other reasons for not supporting the Bill. First, I have an instinctive suspicion of any commercial enterprise by the state, whether actual or attempted, and a deep instinctive suspicion of a monopoly commercial enterprise by the state. Secondly, I question whether the state should encourage people to gamble. Encouragement there would be, because a national lottery would undoubtedly be widely advertised.

I am also worried about the effect that a national lottery would have on the greyhound racing industry. I make no apology for raising the subject of Walthamstow stadium, arguably one of the finest greyhound racing stadiums in Britain. I thoroughly recommend it to everyone in the House for a great evening out.

I am not opposed to gambling. That may be something to do with the fact that a few years ago I went to the races and was persuaded to put money on a horse called Dignity of Labour by Worthy Tryer out of Work Ethic. That horse threw its jockey at the first fence, missed the second fence altogether, caused a collision at the third, ran wide at the fourth and finally sauntered in last. So I have not had happy experiences and since then I have kept clear of betting at races.

I shall quote briefly from a letter sent to me by the Betting Office Licensees Association Limited—I suspect a different letter from the one sent to the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell)—which says:

"The purpose of this letter is to inform you of BOLA's concern about the proposed introduction of a national lottery. We believe that the injection of a large-scale lottery into a complex and largely mature market which already offers horse, greyhound and football betting, plus football pools, gaming machines, casinos, bingo and local lotteries, would have a detrimental effect on the existing revenue-yielding betting and gaming activities.

In BOLA's view, most damage would be done to football pool betting, but we would also expect off-course betting turnover on horse and greyhound racing to suffer, as it did in Ireland following the introduction of a national lottery in that country. Thus we would envisage the £1 billion a year generated for the Exchequer by the taxation of betting and gaming being seriously eroded."

Supporters of the Bill state that we must establish a national lottery in Britain because the introduction of the European single market after 1992 will cause a flood of foreign lottery tickets into this country and that has already been debated.

What about the consequences of a lottery for other forms of gambling? On the assumption that a national lottery consisted of a numbers-based Lotto game—probably six from 49—and that it was promoted and protected effectively as a state monopoly, which is the almost universal pattern abroad, it is possible to state with considerable accuracy what would happen to other forms of gambling, especially the British football pools industry. The effect on the fund-raising efforts of charities, sports clubs and other voluntary organisations can also be calculated.

The setting up of a national lottery will have serious consequences for jobs and for sports and the arts.

In conclusion I shall quote from a letter which I recently received from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts, which states:

"It seems a courtesy to let you know that tomorrow's list"— of grants—

"will include a sum of £300,000 awarded to the Waltham Forest Recreation Services at Forest Road, London E17 which I believe to be in your constituency. The purpose of the grant is for structural repairs at the Waltham Forest Pool and Track Leisure Centre, including access facilities for people with disabilities. The Trustees believe you will welcome this contribution to what is happening in Walthamstow."

And so I do. Jam today is better than jam tomorrow.

1.42 pm

Mrs. Audrey Wise (Preston): I have listened carefully to the debate since 9.30 am and with especial care to the promoter of the Bill, the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence), to hear where the money would come from. He did not tell us. So before he sat down, I made my only intervention this morning to ask him to tell us where the £3 billion will come from. What will people cease to spend it on in order to buy lottery tickets? Even when faced with a direct question, he did not tell us, but started to talk about figures in Germany and elsewhere. He did not tell us whether £3 billion is sloshing around, unused, in British pockets. That is a crucial question.

The hon. and learned Member for Burton did not answer, because there are only two things that he can say. Either it comes from present gambling or people will cease to spend it on something else, in which case he would have to tell us what—would it be food, mortgages, rents or clothes? He prefers not to answer that question and it has not been answered by any of the supporters of the Bill. It is a crucial question. It is important from both angles. As president of the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers and as a sponsored Member of USDAW, I am deeply worried about the job implications.

There has been mention of hon. Members being nobbled by the football pools companies. I find that a bit offensive, although in a sense I am nobbled by the work force, because it is important for all hon. Members to be concerned about jobs. As has been established, thousands of jobs are at stake, mostly the jobs of USDAW members, in areas of high unemployment. It is not only the employer who fears for the loss of trade, but the thousands of workers.

It may come as a surprise to some of my hon. Friends when I pay a compliment to the major company involved in football pools on a particular aspect of its policy. Littlewoods has an explicit policy of maintaining employment rather than making ever-higher capital investments. It would rather spend its money on paying wages than on installing machinery to force workers out. There has been no guarantee or even a hint from one of the Bill's sponsors that a national lottery would be run on those lines. Of course it would not and it could not. Littlewoods is efficient in the organisation of its work force. It is not simply a highly capital-intensive trade. That means that it is important as an employer of labour. As has been pointed out, all its workers, too, are paying taxes from which spending on all the needs of the people can be financed. Therefore, I am concerned about jobs.

One of the most outrageous arguments this morning came from the hon. and learned Member for Burton who said that the Bill would improve equality for women. He said with a straight face that the Bill would provide access for women who find filling in the football pools too complicated. Their tiny little brains do not run to that.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: My hon. and learned Friend did not.

Several Hon. Members: Yes, he did.

Mrs. Wise: Hansard will show that the promoter said that women find football pools coupons too complicated. I am adding the bit about their tiny little minds.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Mrs. Wise: No, I am not giving way to the hon. Lady. I have had experience of her before.

When the sponsors talk about the rights and position of women, let them remember that most of the jobs at stake will be women's jobs. Let them also remember that women in our society have less disposable income than men. Therefore, if the Bill encourages women to spend money on a lottery, it is even more likely to be at the expense of essential spending. Women have less of the £3 billion that is claimed to be sloshing around than anybody else.

If the £3 billion comes at the expense of the football pools, it will hit jobs in areas of high unemployment and women's jobs. On the other hand, if it comes from other sorts of spending, which will they be? There is already a recession in retailing because people do not have money to spend on food, clothing and household goods. If they choose to buy lottery tickets, there will be an even bigger recession in retailing and the other members of USDAW will be affected. Even more people will lose their jobs.

Lewis's, an important department store in my constituency, is likely to close on 1 February, not because it sells shoddy goods—it does not—but because people are short of money. The £3 billion needed to set up the national lottery is just not around.

People are facing the repossession of their homes and they have arrears in their mortgages and their rents. Thousands and thousands of summonses have been issued for poll tax arrears. However, the supporters of the Bill claim that they will get £3 billion of new money for the national lottery. Do they have a private arrangement with the Mint? That is the only way in which new money could be found; it would have to be freshly minted for the purpose. People will not receive huge wage increases so that they can contribute to a national lottery. There is not £3 billion available from ordinary people.

I accept that £3 billion could be raised from some sectors of society and I am in favour of them contributing —through taxation. However, they want to be able to say that funding for the sports and the arts can now be met without imposing any extra tax burden on them, the rich. They are looking for an easy way out and that is unacceptable.

The promoter spoke about the advantages of providing sports facilities as a means of preventing crime. The hon. and learned Gentleman painted a gloomy picture of young people with nothing to do. He said how important it was for society that sports halls, playing fields and other facilities should be provided for young people to keep them from delinquency. That is true. He also said that the national health service is important, but that a national lottery would be a strange way in which to finance it. If that is the case, why is it not also a strange way in which to finance all the things that would contribute to keeping down crime and keeping young people from committing acts of vandalism?

The Bill is a bad one. I do not believe that it can be remedied in Committee. I am not persuaded by the argument that it is an enabling Bill. I do not believe that the House should pass Bills that can then go off in all sorts of directions when they are amended in Committee. The promoter should get his Bill right when he introduces it. We do not want to pass Bills that are empty shells; that is bad legislative practice.

I oppose the Bill from a constitutional view. As a woman I oppose the Bill. As someone concerned about proper public provision I oppose the Bill. As someone with trade union interests I oppose the Bill. I am confident that the House will refrain from giving it a Second Reading.

1.52 pm

Mr. Ken Hargreaves (Hyndburn): I add my congratulations to those given to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on his success in the ballot and on choosing this particular Bill, of which I am pleased to be a sponsor.

My hon. and learned Friend reminded the House that, in Europe, only Britain and Albania have, as yet, not seen the need for the resources that a national lottery would provide. It is hard to understand why when, in all our constituencies, the need for increased resources for sports, the arts and the environment must be obvious.

In my constituency a national lottery could help to provide a new running track for the athletic club and a sports pavilion for Rhyddings county high school, whose playing field is half a mile from the school. It could also provide a lift for the civic theatre, so that the disabled and older people could see the excellent amateur and professional productions that are staged there. In common with other hon. Members, I could continue to list the various needs in my constituency. Those needs must be added to the impressive list of national projects set out by the Sports Council and the Arts Council.

If the Bill were passed it could help to provide many of those facilities. Failure to pass the Bill could lead to those new facilities being established not in Hyndburn or Burton, but in Hamburg and Barcelona. Despite the efforts of Customs officials, tickets for the German, Austrian and Canadian lotteries are being bought in this country. Many of us have received mail shots which say:

"You've been declared eligible to win up to 50 million dollars tax free, lump sum cash, in the official Canadian lottery, plus special bonus prizes too. Just think what you could do with winnings like that."

That is tempting to hon. Members with marginal seats and a general election looming. A magazine that was circulating in this country in December carried a full-page advert for the Austrian national lottery. With the increasing popularity of satellite television, people in this country will have invitations to participate in European lotteries beamed into their homes.

There is no doubt that, by one means or another, foreign lottery tickets will increasingly be bought in this country. We shall be using our money to improve facilities in countries with which we compete in sport.

Any non-United Kingdom scheme that issues promotional material here is breaking the law, but the Home Office says that it cannot prosecute foreign lotteries because they have no staff here.

A national lottery will increase jobs—not simply in running the lottery but in printing tickets and in building capital projects funded from the proceeds and in servicing those facilities when they are built.

If the advice of an opinion poll taken in November is followed, tickets for the lottery will be on sale in post offices, thereby helping to preserve jobs that could otherwise be lost in sub-post offices that are facing closure. As my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) reminded us, the Post Office—24 million people use its 20,000 outlets each week—is a superb place to sell lottery tickets. It has integrity and credibility, which will be necessary if we have a national lottery.

I understand the views of the Lotteries Council. It has said that it is not against a national lottery but opposes the Bill because it does not specifically protect its members. Small lotteries have been extremely successful in providing resources that have enabled many football clubs to survive. It is not unnatural that the Lotteries Council should wish to protect its members. At our last annual general meeting, when we discussed the £10,000 lottery being run by UK Charities Ltd., members said that, far from harming them, the new lottery had generated new interest. I believe that the same would be true with a national lottery.

The objections of the Lotteries Council, like those of the pool companies, overlook the threat from European lotteries. Can anyone say with certainty that if we do not have a national lottery the status quo will continue and that foreign lottery tickets will never be available in this country? No one can give us that guarantee, so we take a risk—a risk which we should not take.

I wish the Bill success. I hope that if the calling of the election prevents it from becoming law, the Government will include a proposal for a national lottery in our manifesto.

1.57 pm

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead): I want to explain why I have changed from supporting a national lottery to opposing it. It has been the duty of Labour Back Benchers to try to construct an agenda that leap-frogged Thatcherism rather than being part of a party that merely tried to adapt itself to Government successes after yet another general election failure.

In that context of thinking about the need for a national health service tax and the support that a national lottery could give the national health scheme, I supported that measure. Before the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) says that I am like everybody else who has spoken against the lotteries—a mere spokesman for the pools—let me say that I am critical of Littlewoods. Of course I am mindful of its good employment policies. Many of my constituents work at Littlewoods, but the way in which it has approached the issue in the past few years has been, to be gentle, lethargic rather than looking after the best interests of its members.

I thank the hon. and learned Member for Burton for giving us this opportunity. We are having a dress rehearsal of the real debate that will take place in the next Parliament, when hon. Members who are worried about aspects of a national lottery will have to advance better arguments than some that we have heard this morning.

We cannot rely on the shock-horror tactics which state that the whole of English national life will collapse if a national lottery is introduced. The public—the voters—will not believe us. We cannot rely on the arguments against more gambling—thank God we are a country in which most people believe that there should not be a group of people who put their sticky fingers into other people's private lives and dictate how they should behave or spend their money. That argument comes especially badly from the pools industry whose whole income comes from gambling.

Nor can we rely on the argument that it is bad to have a national lottery for sports facilities, for example, when we know that all the income of the pools industry—minus the prizes—goes into the pockets of the promoters. That argument does not stand up.

I am well within my five minutes so I shall tell the House why I have changed my mind. I can assure the House that it is not because in the past couple of years I have been on the receiving end of a particular campaign. Indeed, if one were trying to ensure that I did not change my mind, I should have to congratulate the organisers of that campaign. I changed my mind for one reason.

I said earlier that I was not a member of the puritan lobby which is against gambling, but I must now modify that statement. I am against one form of gambling—gambling with the jobs of some of my constituents. I thought that the hon. and learned Member for Burton was in danger of talking out the Bill because he spoke for so long, but not more than two minutes of his discourse were spent on the possible job implications.

We do not know for certain what the job implications will be. It is a gamble. The House should not take such a gamble with my constituents' livelihood especially as—as many hon. Members have explained—for many of the families involved it is their only gateway to a normal existence. For that reason—and for that reason alone—I hope that the House will reject the Bill.

2.1 pm

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Eltham): Many hon. Members have made some good points today. One of the advantages of being called late in the debate is that one does not repeat some arguments which have already been made.

I see the beginnings of something called the "Bottomley" law on detailed explanations. When a Minister gives a detailed reason why something is as it is, one can be fairly sure that the Government are likely to change their mind shortly afterwards. It has happened with such issues as compensation for haemophiliacs who contracted the HIV virus and it certainly happened when one Minister at the Department of Education and Science explained why polytechnics could never be called universities. It appears to be happening in this case.

On 13 January my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary —who I thought handled the debate very well—explained that "Government policy on all gambling, whether betting, gaming or lotteries, reflects two basic principles. The first is that controls are necessary to ensure that it is conducted honestly and fairly. The second principle is that demand for gambling should not be stimulated."—[Official Report, 13 January 1991; Vol. 201, c. 460.]

It is agreed that net spending on gambling in this country is about £3,000 million to £4,000 million a year. The gross figure is larger, but much of horserace betting is recycled—people stake relatively small sums and get a fair amount of it back, although in the end they lose. Therefore, let us work on the net figure of £3,000 million to £4,000 million a year. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) said that the Bill would roughly double that amount. It is a major step for the House to take to throw away the principle that gambling should not be stimulated.

I accept what the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) said about job losses, but, in time, that problem will have to be faced whatever happens. I also accept what the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Ms. Hoey) said about the need for substantial extra resources for particular causes. It is crazy that we have not found a way—whether through the tax system, through hypothecated income in another way or by allowing another form of market to work, or probably a combination of all three—to put cultural centres, sporting facilities, the preservation of our heritage and funding for charities on a higher level than at present. I am not arguing for voluntary giving—whether through gambling, through charitable giving or in any other way—because it is always a substitute for state funding.

However, I counsel people who do not seem to have done their homework to remember that the Irish figures quoted in the European survey show that half of the Government funding that went to culture, heritage, sport and other good causes was withdrawn when funding began to come from the lottery. It is important that people do not consider only the good points without considering the bad. I oppose the idea of the House passing the Bill, because some of those considerations have not been talked through. But I hope that one of its results will be that in the country as a whole we shall accept that it is right to produce funds on the scale of £750 million a year for a combination of sporting, cultural and heritage activities. The question is: what is the best way of doing that?

If we believe that the money should come from people's pockets, either through extra taxation or through extra spending of tax-provided funds—that is a reasonable assumption, and it is reasonable to ask what the best way of providing £750 million is—we could, for example, add an extra 25p to the retail price of cigarettes. That would raise £750 million, but the disadvantage would be that it would put 0·3 per cent. on to the retail prices index, whereas gambling, betting and lotteries are not included in the index.

Such hypothecation is better than the almost non-hypothecation involved in saying, as my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton does, that we shall raise £3 billion and then give half of it back to some winners. That does not help to do much except to make some people very rich—although I have no special objection to that. Some of the money will go in expenses and a little bit will go to sports facilities, heritage or conservation.

It is not necessarily rational, economically efficient or even dignified to say that an extra £3 billion should be spent on stimulating gambling if what we really want to do is to raise £750 million a year for causes that we accept are good and reasonable.

It would have been nice to have a debate in which we could say, "Do we need £750 million for those causes?", but instead we are faced with a National Lottery Bill.

Paragraph 13.83 of the Rothschild report, on page 231 in the chapter entitled, says:

"Finally, the whole of this chapter is predicated on the assumption that the Government will not penalise those organizations which benefit from the national lottery by withholding funds which they would otherwise have got, or reducing them if they are already being supported by the general exchequer."

I do not believe that any Government—Labour or Tory, now or in the future—when deciding how much provision to make for good causes, would ignore the other funding that those causes receive. In any particular year the Government may give permission for extra funds to be raised, but they will not go on doing that.

A table on page 232 of the Rothschild report, to which I referred earlier, shows that the vast bulk of the money raised is likely to come from people who do not support some of the causes to which the proceeds are to be dedicated. I do not believe that majority votes should always be required for good causes. Some are minority interests, but important ones should be imposed on other people by an overwhelming minority. It is not right to say that we should stimulate gambling.

I shall make one of my final points now, so as to allow others to take part in the debate. We have seen a number of examples in which a product banned from being advertised on television is assumed to be all right in news and current affairs coverage, and such coverage is manipulated by certain organisations. One of those examples is provided by the link between motor racing and alcohol. The regulations do not allow alcohol promotion on television to be associated with motor racing. But that did not stop a lager company in effect buying the British grand prix and having it broadcast by a major television channel. So much prominence was given to the name of the lager that—perhaps "scandal" is too strong a word, but it was wrong.

Given that major gambling is prohibited as a subject for television advertising, the House would probably want to give five hours to debating the single question of whether we could cheerfully accept the idea of the draw for million-pound prizes being shown on televison as a way of stimulating demand.

I do not believe that we should say to individuals in this country, "You must not do what I do not approve of." We should say, "Do we want to change the system from one of no stimulation to over stimulation?" The idea of doubling gambling in this country as a result of five-hour debate does not seem the best way in which to get £750 million a year for cultural, sporting and heritage activities.

2.10 pm

Mr. Joseph Ashton (Bassetlaw): I declare an interest as an unpaid director of Sheffield Wednesday football club. That is significant because three years ago, 95 people were killed at the Hillsborough ground—not because there was anything wrong with the ground. I do not have time to go into the details. Following those tragic deaths the Government, following Lord Taylor's report, insisted that football grounds had to become all-seater and that the bigger grounds had to comply by 1994.

There was no chance that the industry could find the money without the aid of the football pools, which are paying 70 per cent. towards the cost. It is impossible to build stands, to get planning permission and to begin work in a matter of months. It must take two or three years for that to happen. There have already been strong demonstrations about the cost. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) knows, there were riots at West Ham when the supporters protested that they would have to pay £750 each, not for the price of a season ticket, but even to be able to buy a season ticket.

The Prime Minister is a football supporter. He said that the Government would pay 2·5 per cent. of the tax on the football pools to top up the money that the clubs would get from the Football Trust. When the Tories came into office, the tax on football pools was 40 per cent. They lifted it to 42·5 per cent. To be fair to the Prime Minister, who was then Chancellor of the Exchequer, he said that they would give back the 2·5 per cent. to football to improve the grounds.

What will happen if the pools collapse? Where will the money come from to improve the grounds? Will the clubs be left with the bill? They will never be able to pay it, and they will be halfway through building the stands and halfway through the contracts when the money will suddenly dry up, if the Bill is passed. The clubs will find themselves in that position although a Lord Justice has told them that the work must be done and although the police have said that they will not police football grounds unless they are all-seater. That will be devastating for Britain's standing in world football because we shall not be able to stage the 1996 European football championships. The industry will be plunged into a trauma and it will not know the way out.

Conservative Members may say that that will not happen overnight and that there will be a gradual run-down. I do not believe that for a minute. There are 70,000 pools collectors. People no longer send in their pools entries through the post. Instead, the entries are collected by collectors who work on commission, sometimes 25 per cent. and sometimes 15 per cent. The collectors go round every Friday night. If there is a national lottery, they will naturally say to the old ladies who do the pools, "Why don't you try a lottery ticket as well as or instead of the pools?" Many who have done the pools for many years will say, "Why not? I have used birthday dates and door numbers, but they never come up. I will do the national lottery instead." There will quickly be a massive switch and the money that the Government get from tax will dry up.

The Government will have far less money to give for the improvement of football grounds. The pools will not be able to pay the 70 per cent. as has been promised. Those will be the consequences if the Bill is passed. Between now and 1994, all the football clubs will have planned, put out tenders and taken contracts. Manchester City, for example, complained to me that it made an application for the grant last July, but that the Minister for Sport is sitting on it. I do not know why he has not released the cash, because the Government continually complain that clubs are not getting a move on. Football clubs do not know where they stand on all-seater stadiums, which the Government have demanded, on which they have had little help and which will be damaged by the Bill.

The hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) should read what the Select Committee on Home Affairs, of which I am a member, said about the Horse Race Betting Levy Act 1981. Sharing out the cash from horse racing has been a shambles. Once again, the Home Office has had to step in to sort out who gets what in horse racing between the owners, the trainers, the bookies and everyone else because they can never agree on the share of the cake. That is exactly what will happen with the national lottery.

2.14 pm

Mr. Brian Wilson (Cunninghame, North): My fundamental objection to the Bill is that it defines areas of public expenditure that I believe to be very important to the richness and well-being of a society as so marginal that they can be funded outwith general taxation and the normal means of funding things that society regards as important.

I strongly agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) about the proposals advanced in the Labour party's sports document. Of course we should look at the money that comes out of sport—and, no doubt, the arts—and give as much of that money as possible back to the sources from which it comes. I also agreed with much of what the Minister said, and I followed his speech with interest. But what is proposed in the Bill is one mega state lottery, with defined areas of expenditure, and that is what I cannot agree with.

Over the past few weeks, and again today, we have heard the familiar arguments. If I hear the tale about Britain and Albania once more, I shall be tempted to go to Tirana to check the facts. There is another side to the coin, even if it is true that the only countries that do not have national lotteries are Britain and Albania. In the absence of a national lottery here, other forms of fund-raising—and lotteries in particular—have developed. That problem—if problem it is—would not be confronted in countries with long-established national lotteries, but in countries such as Ireland where the lotteries are not long-established, exactly the problems that we fear are arising.

The term "small lotteries" is perhaps confusing because some of the so-called small lotteries are very large indeed. I have received two letters of which other hon. Members may also have copies. The example of Tenovus, the cancer charity, is an important one. The charity's letter refers to the fact that the charity has a £3 million income from lotteries and that £1 million of its funds depends upon that. The House must think carefully before taking a step that could contribute—and, in the experience of other countries, would contribute—to wiping out that source of revenue, which is what would happen if that relatively large lottery were subordinated to the great national mega-lottery.

The second letter was from Rangers FC Development Fund Ltd. Anyone who takes even a passing interest in Scottish football knows that Rangers football club has a splendid stadium, funded almost exclusively from two sources—first, the lottery that the club has run for many years and, secondly, the Football Trust, referred to today as a possible source of funding that would be endangered by the process. Mr. Hugh Adam, the director of Rangers, who is responsible for the development fund, writes:

"Indeed, it is now a matter of public knowledge that very few, if any, football clubs take enough money through the gate to exist from that alone. Small lotteries are probably the most important source of off-the-field revenue."

While saying that we are acting in the name of sport, we are threatening on two fronts to remove the funding sources on which football clubs and many other sports and arts organisations now depend. I do not think that we should go into that lightly.

I came away from the British Columbia lottery presentation held in the House some months ago with two clear impressions. The first was that, in order for the British Columbia lottery to be the great success that it undoubtedly is—it offers huge prizes—all other lotteries, down to a very low level, had had to disappear to make way for it. That example is relevant. Secondly, as the gentleman who came to speak to us freely admitted, no matter how carefully one defines the causes that are to benefit from a lottery, as soon as it exists representatives of all sorts of other causes immediately come knocking at the door so that, in the end, no cause get as much as it at first expected.

I want also to refer to a letter from Dr. Moran of Chase Farm hospital in Enfield, who is the chairman of the National Council on Gambling and the adviser on gambling to the Royal College of Psychiatrists. He raised a point on which I agree with the Minister. There is a difference between a large number of lotteries offering relatively modest prizes, but raising a lot of money for many different causes, and the concept of one huge lottery on which the whole fix depends and the vast prize with all the hullabaloo surrounding it.

The professional view of Dr. Moran should not be taken lightly. He wrote:

"The existing lotteries law prescribes modest levels; this avoids stimulation and allows the smaller societies to compete with larger ones, when promoting lotteries. In large scale lotteries, the gambling element predominates over that of charitable giving."

There is no po-faced moralistic view on the matter. I have nothing against gambling or lotteries. However, the House must consider today, as no doubt it will in future, whether we want to approach the matter in a way that does not wipe out other forms of income for good causes and which does not stimulate gambling, as the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) sensibly pointed out, in order to return through gambling a relatively small proportion of the money to the people who invest in it.

The scale is enormous. The Bill's sponsors switch between minimising and maximising the scale, depending upon which market they are appealing to. By creating a national lottery of £3 billion, we will be creating something new on a level that is double the existing expenditure in the United Kingdom on the pools and bingo combined. That is an enormous enterprise. I do not believe that that money can appear out of thin air. It will either destroy other lotteries or it will be new money which will be diverted from other forms of social expenditure.

Mr. John Lee (Pendle): In the circumstances, I will be very brief. It is well known that I am a long-standing supporter of a national lottery, and I am delighted and proud to be a sponsor of the Bill. As a former Minister responsible for tourism, and as the present chairman of ALVA—the Association of Leading Visitor Attractions—I am well aware of the huge costs of maintaining the fabric of great museums, galleries, cathederals and historic houses.

For example, the British museum and the Tate, which are both ALVA members, require substantial funding. The British museum needs £80 million for conversion and refurbishment of the space that has been vacated by the British Library. The Tate needs £32 million to upgrade 21 galleries and to provide adequate visitor research facilities. Museums in Manchester could spend £20 million, and Merseyside could spend £27 million. Sports facilities are required throughout the country.

The Government and the Exchequer have a responsibility. Recent increases in spending on the arts are welcome. However, the Government must not believe that a lottery will allow them to dodge their obligations. The point that has been emphasised repeatedly today is the gap between what the Treasury under a Government of any political party is likely to contribute and what is actually needed. The difference is vast and that is where a national lottery has a role to play.

I had hoped that a national lottery would be announced in the last Budget. However, the pools companies proposed the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and, bluntly, the Treasury fell for that. In the Budget debate on 19 March last year, I described the foundation as mere petty cash compared with what a properly constituted national lottery could produce——

M20 (Junctions 3 and 5)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kirkhope.]

2.36 pm

Sir John Stanley (Tonbridge and Malling): I am aware that my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic replied to an Adjournment debate which I initiated only 14 months ago in November 1990. I make no apology for the fact that just 14 months later I am seeking his reply to a debate on the same subject. I have to tell him that the Department of Transport's handling of the widening of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5 in my constituency has been disastrous for hundreds of my constituents. I shall seek to demonstrate that it appears that it has also been a fair-sized disaster for the public purse. I shall put several specific issues to my hon. Friend, but before doing so I suggest that there is one lesson of overwhelming importance which I hope that the Department of Transport will learn from the way in which it has handled the scheme so far.

As my hon. Friend will be aware, from the moment that the Department announces its intention to widen a road, blight is instantly created. That is particularly the case if at the time of the announcement the Department does not announce how the widening scheme will be carried out. Obviously the blighting effect is particularly acute in areas where there is a substantial amount of residential property. That is the case along almost the entire length of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5.

The announcement of the intention to widen was made in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity", which was published in May 1989. One would have hoped that it would be followed quickly by a detailed description by the Department of Transport of how the widening would be conducted.

In practice, two and a half years elapsed—until October 1991—before details of the widening schemes were announced. As a result, the huge swathe of blight created instantly from May 1989 onwards along both sides of the motorway continued unabated for two and a half years and continues to a degree. As a consequence, hundreds of people have been unable to sell their houses. The consequences have been disastrous for those who have had to do so for personal, family, health, matrimonial break-up or job reasons.

I hope that the Department of Transport will accept that it has a fundamental responsibility not to announce its intention to widen until it can at the same time, or shortly thereafter, say how the scheme will be carried out.

The two-and-a-half-year gap has also had serious consequences for the public purse. In a reply of 3 December my hon. Friend said that the Department had acquired at that time a total of 227 houses for the cost of £21·9 million—a purchase price of about £100,000 for each house. He went on to say that another 59 houses were being acquired. The Department will end up with 286 houses, which will cost the taxpayer about £28 million.

I do not criticise the Department of Transport for discharging its legal obligations under the blight purchase provisions. Indeed, it would have been wrong for it not to have done so. However, if one looks at the alignment of the road and reads the further part of his answer of 3 December—to the effect that of 286 houses acquired by the Department not one will be required by the road scheme—one realises that it raises major issues of policy concerning public expenditure.

The Department has effectively spent, or is spending, about £28 million to acquire 286 houses, none of which is required for the widening scheme. That is a matter of great concern. Indeed, I am so concerned that I think it is appropriate for me to refer the use of public funds in those circumstances to the Comptroller and Auditor General. I spoke to his office this morning and he confirmed that that is an appropriate matter for me to refer to him, and I propose to do so.

I hope that the Department will not again announce an intention to widen without an immediate announcement—or as immediate as possible thereafter—as to how the scheme will be carried out.

I want to mention six matters to my hon. Friend. The first concerns the section 62 powers which were taken by the Government—and I welcome that—in the Planning Compensation Act 1991, giving new discretionary powers to the Secretary of State for Transport to acquire houses by agreement with their owners when they are seriously affected by a motorway or road scheme, regardless of any distance limit from the scheme.

I have been asking my hon. Friend for details of how those powers will be used, and I am grateful for the parliamentary reply that he gave me before the debate commenced, in which he has given an initial indication. Obviously, I shall want to examine that in the context of a number of cases. I hope that it will help one of my constituents who is in the extraordinary position of having received an offer from the Department of Transport whereby it will acquire her garage under the statutory blight provisions but not her house. I hope that the answer in my hon. Friend's letter will help her ludicrous and unfair situation as well as that of some other constituents who continue to feel that they are blighted, notwithstanding the announcement of the line of the widening scheme.

Secondly, there is the question of the continuance of the 200 m notification requirement on the planning authority for prospective purchasers. I can understand why that was necessary until the line of the widening scheme was announced, but I was dismayed to receive an answer from my hon. Friend on 18 December in which he said that the notification procedure would continue until the scheme was implemented. That will continue to blight properties well away from the widening scheme for some years to come. I urge him to reconsider his policy on notification in the context of the scheme.

My third point relates to noise from the motorway. In my view, this section of motorway—perhaps because I drive on it more than most—is as bad and as noisy a section of motorway as I have found anywhere in the country. It is of a ribbed, concrete surface which gives off more than the usual volume of noise. I hope that my hon. Friend will assure me that the opportunity of the widening scheme will be taken to bring about a significant noise reduction programme along this section of the M20, including a replacement of the existing ribbed concrete surface by a black top surface.

My fourth point relates to noise during the construction period. As I have said, this section runs almost entirely through a residential area. I hope that my hon. Friend will assure me that when construction commences strict restrictions will be placed on the contractors so that construction is limited to normal working hours and there is no weekend working.

My fifth point relates to the construction timetable. Now that the line of the widening scheme has been announced, I hope that it will be carried out as quickly as possible, not least because constituents who are facing a reduction in the value of their homes will be unable to claim injurious affection compensation until one year after the widening has been brought into operation.

The timetable of the scheme seems to have slipped steadily. I have a letter of 31 May 1989 from Mr. Springett of the Department of Transport in which he said:

"The Department hopes that the widening will be completed in time for the opening of the Channel Tunnel in 1993."

Two years later I had an answer from my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic in which he said:

"Recent experience of other widening schemes suggests that construction could start by 1995 with completion two years later."—[Official Report, 3 June 1991; Vol. 192, c. 54.]

In other words, between those two indications of timetable, which are two years apart, there has been no less than a four-year delay. If my hon. Friend's latest answer is the correct one, it means that no injurious affection compensation would become payable to my constituents until 1998.

That degree of delay is unacceptable to my constituents. More significant for my hon. Friend with his ministerial responsibilities, it is unacceptable in national transport terms. The section of motorway, particularly at junction 3 of the M20, is of great national significance. As my hon. Friend will be aware, all the channel tunnel road traffic from East Anglia, the midlands, the north, the west, the south-west and the south coast using the motorway system will converge on junction 3 and proceed from there to the channel tunnel.

If my hon. Friend continues to allow the widening scheme to delay to the extent that he appears willing to accept, there is a serious danger of a traffic shambles on this section of the M20 almost as soon as the channel tunnel opens. Therefore, I hope that my hon. Friend will look immediately at the timetable for the scheme and I urge him to bring forward the implementation date to the earliest possible, certainly well before 1995.

What about the 286 houses which are now in the Department of Transport's ownership? As I have said to my hon. Friend, and in correspondence with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State, the management of those houses has been far from satisfactory. Many of the houses have been vacant, squatters have moved in, and properties have been subject to poor maintenance and remote management from Eastbourne. Those factors have made it that much more difficult for people in the surrounding areas to sell their houses.

What is the Department's policy towards those houses? Will they be sold or will they be rented on a permanent basis, and if so, to whom? The critical thing is that the temporary nature of the occupancy of those homes must be ended as quickly as possible. We are talking about what were once settled, stable communities and they want to revert to that pattern. I hope that my right hon. and learned Friend and my hon. Friend will give the highest priority to re-establishing homes along this section of the M20 that are under permanent tenure, whether they are owned outright, rented or under shared ownership. Permanence is the key factor in bringing back stability and, I hope, a reasonable degree of tranquillity to the estates.

I am sorry to have offered my hon. Friend such a barrage of criticism of his Department. If my hon. Friend had faced, in his constituency, the dismay and distress of so many of my constituents, caused by the Department of Transport, I am confident that he would make a speech no less critical of the Department than my own.

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Christopher Chope): I acknowledge the genuine concern of my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on behalf of his constituents. No group of people can ever find it easy to tolerate a major road building scheme in their area. This particular scheme has been the subject of a lot more difficulty and delay than either I or the Department would have wished.

When the scheme was included in the 1989 White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity", it was part of the Government's expanded roads programme, which covered a large number of schemes. When one is announcing additions to the roads programme, it is impossible, even with the best will in the world, to guarantee that one knows exactly the time in which all of those additions will be built.

First, one announces an addition to the roads programme and then one must obtain the advice of consultants through competitive tender. One then considers their advice as to the best way in which to implement the proposals.

When the White Paper was published, the Department hoped that the widening of junctions 5 to 8 and of junctions 3 to 5 would be able to proceed together, according to the same timetable. That is why the letter written to my right hon. Friend's constituent at the end of May 1989 cited a certain timetable.

My right hon. Friend knows better than anyone about the complexity of widening the motorway from three lanes to four in this constrained part of the M20, which runs between built-up areas. Unfortunately, when the consultants considered the proposal it became immediately apparent that it would not be possible to deal with the widening of junctions 3 to 5 on the same time scale as that for the widening between junctions 5 and 8. That is part of the background to the delay.

My right hon. Friend regrets the expenditure incurred in purchasing many houses, but he was at the forefront in campaigning for the Government to make their arrangements sufficiently flexible to allow them to purchase those houses and thereby tackle the blight that any new road scheme causes. If the blight period had been shorter, we might have had to acquire fewer houses, but I suspect that, having acquired so many houses already, we shall now have to acquire fewer under the extended powers, to which I referred my right hon. Friend in answer earlier today.

I am not saying that if we had been able to act more quickly there would not have been so much blight or over such a long period, but I hope that my right hon. Friend will understand that there was no malice aforethought. The proposal was included in the roads programme. The original strategy was to widen the M20 in time for the opening of the channel tunnel, but, unfortunately, that did not prove possible.

[Mr. Christopher Chope]

My right hon. Friend will know that the missing link in the M20 has been completed. The widening between junctions 5 and 8 is under way and should be completed for the opening of the tunnel.

My right hon. Friend referred to the section 62 powers and welcomed the revised guidance. I understand that he has not had time to consider each case, but one of the most important features of the new guidance is that it enables the Department to acquire properties before construction. Previously, property could be acquired between when blight first occurred and when proposals were announced in detail, and there was a period between then and the start of works when it was not possible to acquire property. I hope that that gap has been filled by the new powers that we have taken in the Planning and Compensation Act 1991. We shall use the guidelines that I have announced today to implement that.

The 200 m requirement and notification is not Government policy. The Law Society and local authorities agreed that local authorities should be required to reveal the existence of proposals to widen the M20 between junctions 3 and 5 in response to searches by prospective purchasers of properties within 200 m of the scheme, until widening is implemented. I understand my right hon. Friend's concern that that might be thought to be harsh on those seeking to sell their properties, but it is done in accordance with an agreement with the Law Society, no doubt for the protection of potential purchasers. Constituents of my right hon. Friend who found out a day after they had completed that they had moved into a property within 200 m of a road widening scheme would be none too pleased that it had not been drawn to their attention beforehand. My right hon. Friend asked me to reconsider the policy, but it is not the Department's policy. I have no control over it; it is a matter between the Law Society and local authorities.

I am well aware of the noise from the road surface between junctions 3 and 5 of the M20. Part of the surface between junctions 4 and 5 was recently topped with bitumen. At the exhibition of the widening proposals held in October, some residents said that they thought that it had reduced the noise whereas others said that it had exacerbated it. That bears out the research undertaken by my Department which shows that there is a different type of noise from concrete surfaces compared with that from bitumen surfaces. The volume of the noise is similar, but the pitch is different and that may affect different people in different ways, depending where their house or property is situated.

We are talking about an on-line widening without the need to remove all the existing carriageway. If we proceed on that basis and if the existing carriageway is strong enough to take the new road, a proper surface—a bitumen surface—would be laid. The widened road would be of bitumen rather than of concrete. If, however, it proved necessary for all of the existing carriageways to be taken up and reconstructed, in accordance with its usual policy, the Department would invite competitive bids from contractors for either a concrete or bitumen-surfaced road.

I assure my right hon. Friend that whether there is ultimately a concrete or bitumen-surfaced road, the road will be constructed to a very high standard and the most modern noise attenuation measures will be included in the scheme. I cannot give any guarantees about noise during construction, because there must be a balance between the need to build a road such as this as quickly as possible and the legitimate concern of people living close to the road that they should not be disturbed by construction noise at anti-social times. We must consider that aspect in much greater detail. I cannot give any assurances today, but the Department and the contractors are well aware of the effect of construction on residents and they will deal with it as sympathetically as possible.

On the construction timetable, I share my right hon. Friend's frustration at the potential further delay before the scheme can be brought to fruition. I shall certainly inquire whether we can improve the speed of the proposed timetable, but the biggest uncertainty is that associated with the potential need for public inquiries into objections raised to compulsory purchase orders to acquire the additional land and for the necessary orders to enable the widened road to be constructed.

As my right hon. Friend knows, there is nothing certain about the way in which an inquiry will go, about the time it will take an inspector to consider the evidence or about the conclusions that he will reach. Again, I cannot give any guarantees, but when I gave my last reply to which my right hon. Friend referred, I did so taking account of the average time it takes to design a scheme, to take the detailed proposals to the necessary inquiry and to proceed beyond that.

All this is subject to the necessary resources being available, but, as my right hon. Friend said, the improvement of the road links to the channel tunnel is a very high political priority for the Government. I assure him that the road will be a high priority scheme and will be proceeded with as quickly as possible.

As my right hon. Friend knows, I have been concerned about the quality of the management of the 286 houses, and from 1 April this year there will be a new arrangement under which any new houses acquired after that date will not automatically go the housing assocation that has managed the existing houses. That is because of concerns which we have expressed openly to the housing association about the quality of management. It has improved significantly and I would be interested to hear of the extent to which my right hon. Friend thinks that it is still lower than it should be.

The Department feels that there is a need for competition to be introduced. That will lead to even higher standards of management and I hope that it will prove beneficial for my right hon. Friend's constituents. The length of time that it will take to resell the houses that we do not need must be the subject of discussion and negotiation. My right hon. Friend will understand what the impact would be if all the houses were suddenly placed on the open market, let alone the implications for the tenants now occupying them.

The first of the tenancy agreements expires in June this year. Some of them have been on a two-year basis, and some of the more recent agreements on a one-year basis. We shall have to prepare a strategy, which we shall discuss with the local council, for the future plans for the houses that we own. We do not want to own more houses than is absolutely necessary. Those houses properly belong in the private sector and the sooner they can be returned there, in an orderly fashion, the better.

I hope that I have answered some of the questions raised by my right hon. Friend, who makes no apology for having raised the subject again after some 14 months. I hope that he understands—although he might not agree with it—my explanation that the Department is very conscious of the adverse effects that such road schemes have on people living close by, and it may have erred on the side of generosity in acquiring so many houses. That was largely because my right hon. Friend was keen to encourage the Department to acquire them. Now that we have done so, we need to get rid of the ones that we do not need as soon as possible.

We wish to bring the scheme to fruition quickly so that the uncertainty, blight, noise and the other general adverse effects can be brought to an end as soon as possible.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at six minutes past Three o'clock.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the normal retirement age for the post of director of the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive; what is the age of the current occupant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The normal retirement age for the post of director of field operations is 60. The present postholder is being retained in the post for a year beyond his normal retirement date, to June 1992, to assist in the implementation and consolidation of the major reform of the field organisation.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish copies of (a) the spring 1991 review of the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the field operations division impact study 1991.

Mr. Forth: (a) The 1991 spring review was a series of meetings at which the Health and Safety Executive's senior management reviewed the performance of its divisions against plan in the 1990-91 financial year. A full account of HSE's performance is given in the Health and Safety Commission Executive annual report 1990-91, which was laid before the House on 12 December.

(b) the impact study is an internal review of the ways in which the HSE's field force could improve the impact of its work. The question of publication will be considered when the HSE and the Health and Safety Commission has considered its recommendations.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many premises are registered with the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive; how many were inspected thoroughly in 1990-91; what is the current backlog of inspections; and what proposals he has to clear the backlog.

Mr. Forth: On 28 September 1991 there were 653,397 fixed premises registered with the Health and Safety Executive's field operations division—FOD. Between 1 April 1990 and 31 March 1991, FOD inspectors made a total of 100,232 planned inspection visits to fixed premises.

At 31 March 1991, a total of 107,486 fixed premises in the field for inspection in the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991 had not received a planned inspection visit in that year. The figure includes premises which have a low inspection rating based on inspectors' judgment of risks, site standards and management control, those which have been visited for purposes other than planned inspection and those for which records are held but may no longer exist.

A reduction in the number of premises in the field for inspection and not visited continues to be an aim of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. As part of this, FOD has carried forward and developed special inspection initiatives on a local or regional basis across a range of industries.

Between 1 July and 31 December 1991, FOD is carrying out a pilot exercise to assess the feasibility of employing visiting officers to identify establishments for inspection. Two of the objectives of the exercise are to eliminate redundant records from the factory inspectorate establishment database and to provide data on establishments that make up the backlog.

Additionally, a recent study carried out by FOD has addressed the question of improving the impact of the work of the field force, including the backlog of inspections. Recommendations from the survey are currently being considered by HSE.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the factory inspectors responsible for the inspecting chemical works do not have degrees in chemistry or chemical engineering.

Mr. Forth: There are currently 56 factory inspectors responsible for the inspection of chemical plants who do not have degrees in chemistry or chemical engineering. Inspection assignments for factory inspectors are not made solely on specialist technical qualifications; detailed technical support is available to field inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive's technical specialists.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the factory inspectors in the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive are trainees.

Mr. Forth: On 1 December 1991, a total of 182 factory inspectors in the field operations division of the Health and Safety Executive were trainee inspectors.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factories registered with the factories inspectorate have not received a basic inspection for three, five, seven, nine and 11 years; and what were the figures two years ago.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 29 January 1991, Official Report, columns 782-83. To update this information would incur disproportionate cost.

Baynards House

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost in the financial year 1990-91 and what it is so far for the financial year 1991-92 for fees paid by the Health and Safety Executive for private employment agencies for the recruitment of staff at Baynards house; and if he will end such expenditure henceforth.

Mr. Forth: No fees have been paid to private employment agencies in either financial year by the Health and Safety Executive for the recruitment of staff in Baynards house.

Construction Sites

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent initiatives have been taken by the Health and Safety Commission's construction industry advisory committee in establishing new improved standards for site health and safety.

Mr. Forth: The HSC's construction industry advisory committee has taken a number of recent initiatives to promote improved standards of health and safety in the construction industry. The main initiatives are:

undertaking a comprehensive revision of guidance on the management of health and safety in construction projects. This will support forthcoming new Construction (Design and Management) Regulations which will place clear duties on clients, their professional advisers, designers, and contractors to bring about a coherent structure for managing health and safety; meeting professional institutions to encourage their greater involvement in health and safety matters, including improved training for the professions. A major conference is also planned for senior representatives of construction companies on the role of the professions under the proposed new legislation;

a review of the use of heavy building blocks to produce guidance and consideration of a weight limit for manual handling above which mechanical assistance would be required; revising guidance on the safe use of site dumpers; and publishing a long-term strategy to give its effort clear direction while remaining sufficiently flexible to respond to important immediate issues.

EC Social Action

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made by his Department of British industry managers' views of the current proposals by the European Commission for action in the social area.

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom is unique in the European Community for its wide consultation of industry on the proposals in the social area. The significant majority of responses from industry to the Department's consultation documents support the Government's view that a number of the proposed directives under the Commission's social action programme would impose damaging costs on employers, destroy flexibility and limit our international competitiveness. These views have been endorsed in many representations received from individual employers and from employer organisations.

Youth Training

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from TECs over the lack of funds to meet the responsibilities to provide youth training in line with targets set by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has regular contact with all training and enterprise councils on a variety of matters. The Government remain firmly committed to their youth training guarantee.

Disability Symbol

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of companies which have given firm commitments to the Employment Service's disability symbol for employers; and how long a company can express a firm commitment without actually using the symbol, and still remain on the list.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the staffing of training and enterprise councils in the longer term.

Mr. Howard: On 26 July 1991 I wrote to the chairmen of all TECs proposing that discussions should begin with TECs, with the relevant trade unions and with seconded staff about arrangements to secure the objective of freeing TECs to be the direct employers of their staff on terms and conditions decided by TECs.

I am writing today to TEC chairmen setting out the broad arrangements for phasing out secondments to TECs from the civil service by October 1996. These will give TECs the freedom to offer secondees employment in their TEC. Secondees in turn will be free to accept TEC employment or return to the Department when their secondment period ends. TECs will be provided with the funding to offer former secondees pension provisions broadly comparable with the principal civil service pension scheme. Subject to normal parliamentary procedures for notifying the giving of non-statutory guarantees and indemnities, I also propose to meet the costs of redundancy entitlements for past civil service employment in the event of a redundancy arising as a direct result of Government action within the first five years of the start of former secondee's employment in a TEC.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mirror Group Newspapers (Pension Fund)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement in response to the representations made to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on behalf of employees of Mirror Group Newspapers about the losses incurred by their pension fund.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have written to the right hon. Gentleman.

EC Contributions

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 39, what was the level of the United Kingdom's liability for contribution to EC funds in each year since 1973 (a) gross and (b) net, in cash terms and after adjusting for inflation, before refunds or abatement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Gross (before refunds and abatements) Current prices	Gross (before refunds and abatements) Constant[1] prices	Net (before refunds and abatements) Current prices	Net (before refunds and abatements) Constant[1] prices

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the contribution to EC funds in each year since 1986 made by each of the 12 members of the EC (a) gross and (b) net, in constant prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The gross contribution to the EC budget by each member state in constant prices for the years 1986-1990 is in the table. Details of member states' gross contributions for 1991 will be published in the "Statement on the 1992 Community Budget" early next year. Details of member states' net contributions are not published by the European Commission.

Unitary Tax

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is yet in a position to announce the outcome of the Government's review of unitary tax with the United States Treasury.

Mr. Maude: The review of unitary tax conducted jointly by the Inland Revenue and the United States Treasury has now been completed and the Government have endorsed the conclusions reached in the report. A copy of the review report, which has been published today, is being placed in the Library.

The report highlights the main points in a complicated issue. It identifies not only where progress has been made to date but also assesses the best practical means of taking matters forward.

In accordance with the report's conclusions, both Governments take this opportunity to restate their commitment to work together to secure the elimination of the worldwide combined reporting method of unitary taxation.

At present we believe that the best means of achieving this goal is to support companies litigating in United States courts against worldwide unitary tax. Both Governments will continue to give such support.

In the meantime the British Government intend to retain the legislation contained in section 812 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988. No further guarantee is contemplated as to the effective date of the legislation were it to be triggered, beyond the guarantee, previously given, that it would not apply to dividends paid on or before 31 December 1989.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action the Central Statistical Office will be taking in its assessment of the trend in retail sales and related indicators of activity to take account of the Sunday opening of many shops this December.

Mr. Maples: No action is necessary. The usual procedures for the compilation of the monthly retail sales index will ensure that Sunday sales are properly reflected.

Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1991-92 the number of (a) corporate taxpayers and (b) income taxpayers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: About 350,000 companies pay corporation tax and 25·1 million individuals pay income tax in the United Kingdom. Information for Great Britain and Northern Ireland is not separately available for 1991-92.

Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people receive (a) the married couple's allowance, (b) the additional person's allowance and (c) the widow's bereavement allowance.

Mr. Maude: In 1991-92 the numbers of individuals benefiting from the specified allowances are estimated to be about (a) 11·1 million, (b) 600,000 and (c) 140,000.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue yield from freezing the married couple's allowance, additional personal allowance and widow's bereavement allowance—but not the married couple's allowance for pensioners—(a) in the first year, (b) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, with (i) the current system of tax allowances and (ii) restricting all tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance to the basic rate.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that, at 1992-93 levels of income, freezing the married couple's allowance for taxpayers aged under 65, the additional personal allowance, and the widow's bereavement allowance in 1992-93 would yield about £140 million in the first year and £180 million in a full year with the current system of tax allowances compared with the illustrative 4 per cent. indexation shown in table 4·2 of the autumn statement 1991. If all tax allowances and reliefs except the basic personal allowance were restricted to the basic rate, the yield from freezing the specified allowances would be about £130 million in the first year and £170 million in a full year. These allowances were not increased in the 1991 Budget.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the availability of special enterprise zone capital allowances—100 per cent. initial allowances or 25 per cent. writing down allowances—where a purchaser buys an unused building in an enterprise zone.

Mr. Maude: The intention underlying the enterprise zone capital allowances legislation is that the purchaser of an unused building should be entitled to initial allowances provided that the actual construction expenditure was incurred either within 10 years of designation of the zone or under a contract entered into during that period. Contrary to the Revenue's previous view and practice recent legal advice has indicated that the purchaser is not entitled to initial allowances, where an unused building is purchased after expiry of the 10-year life of the zone. The Government therefore intend to bring forward amending provisions in the 1992 Finance Bill to ensure that allowances remain available in these circumstances. The legislation would have effect from today. In the meantime, with my approval, the Inland Revenue has today issued an extra-statutory concession under which it will continue to apply its existing practice to past and current transactions. The impact of this measure on tax receipts will be nil. It simply gives effect to the tax treatment originally intended.

The Government also intend to amend the regulations defining an enterprise zone property trust to ensure that the measures I have described feed through to the investors in these trusts. Under the existing regulations investors in EZPTs only have the benefit of enterprise zone allowances where an unused building is acquired during the lifetime of the zone. The cost to the Exchequer of aligning with other purchasers the entitlement of these investors to initial allowances is estimated at £5 million in 1992-93 and £35 million in 1993-94.

The Government intend to bring forward two further amendments to the enterprise zone legislation in the 1992 Bill, also with effect from today. The existing rule that a purchaser may only receive initial allowances where a building is sold unused, adversely affects developers who face a delay in securing a purchaser and who may want to let the building in the interim. This rule may act as a disincentive to the occupation of buildings and to business activity in enterprise zones. To mitigate that effect we intend to bring forward legislation providing that initial allowances will be available to a purchaser buying the building within two years of its first being used. The proposed provision would apply to buildings first brought into use after today. The basis for making any quantitative estimate of the effects of this extension on the yield of corporation tax in 1992-93 and 1993-94 would depend on many factors and be highly speculative. Any estimate of the total revenue effects and the impact on receipts as between individual financial years would therefore be very uncertain.

Finally, the Government propose to curtail the existing open-ended nature of relief for expenditure incurred under a contract entered into during the life of the zone. In future, it is proposed that such expenditure would only be eligible for initial allowances if it is incurred within 10 years of expiry of the zone.

These changes do not alter the Government's general policy towards enterprise zones announced by the Secretary of State for the Environment in his written answer of 17 December 1987, that there would not be a general extension of the enterprise zone experiment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Liquidations

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms in the building trade and the furniture trade have gone into liquidation in each year since 1979 inclusive; and, in each year, how many of those firms in each category were based in Tottenham or Edmonton prior to going into liquidation.

Mr. Redwood: The information on company liquidations resulting from insolvency in timber and furniture manufacturing and in construction for England and Wales is as follows. Information is not collected by location; nor is furniture collected separately from timber. No sectoral breakdown is available for voluntary liquidations.

Year	Timber and furniture manufacturing	Construction
1979	116	789
1980	211	949
1981	203	990
1982	350	1,422
1983	294	1,776
1984	382	1,831
1985	495	1,975

Year	Timber and furniture manufacturing	Construction
1986	427	1,914
1987	378	1,490
1988	242	1,471

1990	391	2,445

Car Imports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the decision of the European Commission to clarify the role and activities of car intermediaries; and how his Department plans to monitor the activities of intermediaries to ensure that the Commission's regulations are enforced.

Mr. Redwood: The Government take the view that intermediaries should be free to operate within the EC car market. Intermediaries have a role to play in helping car buyers to obtain cars at the lowest price within the Community. Enforcement of European Commission regulations is a matter for the Commission. The EC Commission found that Peugeot had breached competition rules by upholding supply from Ecosystem. This case is now a subject of an appeal to the European Court of Justice.

Christmas Paper (Recycling)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will issue guidance on the recycling of Christmas packaging paper before Christmas.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to issue guidance specifically related to the recycling of Christmas packaging paper. My Department continues to encourage recycling of materials for which there is a market. No material should be collected unless an outlet has been identified.

Leg Irons

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information his Department has about the manufacture of leg irons in Britain, and the export from Britain of these products.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The Department has no information on the manufacture of leg irons. I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave on this subject on 22 October 1991, Official Report, column 608.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 6 December, Official Report, columns 260-61, what policy considerations will govern the allocation of export credit cover for high-risk projects in vested countries to (a) the continuing Export Credits Guarantee Department or (b) NCM Credit Insurance with assistance from the Export Credits Guarantee Department under the national interest reinsurance facility; what the anticipated budget for each category of cover is for (a) the remaining months of this year and (b) the next two financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 13 December 1991]: Export credit cover for project business in the vested markets will be given only by the continuing ECGD.

NCM will provide cover in the vested markets for non-project business only. It will do this without any assistance from ECGD under the national interest reinsurance facility.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mentally Disordered Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he received on his recent visit to Wandsworth prison on the level of post-release supervision of discharged mentally disordered prisoners.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has made no recent visits to Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners at present serving sentences in Her Majesty's prisons suffer from some kind of mental disorder; what percentage of these are receiving psychiatric treatment during their sentence; and what percentage receive specialist care upon release.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information is not available in the form requested. However, Prison Service medical officers carry out medical monitoring at regular intervals within their establishments. The most up-to-date information held centrally is for September. At that time, approximately 3·5 per cent. of prisoners were receiving some form of mental health care.

Where appropriate, arrangements are made for specialist care to continue after release. Short of an order under the Mental Health Act 1983, there are no powers to make medical treatment, or attendance for treatment, compulsory.

Evening Betting

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to permit the opening of off-course bookmakers shops during the evening hours.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We issued a consultation document in October inviting the views of all interested parties on whether licensed betting offices should be open in the evenings and, if so, at what times. The Government will give careful consideration to the views received in response to that document before deciding whether to allow evening opening.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he gives to magistrates adjudicating cases of shoplifting carried out in stores during Sunday trading.

Mr. John Patten: It would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to give guidance to magistrates about the way in which they exercise their judicial discretion in cases before them.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to bring forward the necessary statutory instrument to include the offence of illegal Sunday trading within the list of offences for which a confiscation order may be made under the terms of section 71 and schedule 4 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current certified accommodation for Wandsworth prison while the two wings are closed for refurbishment.

Mrs. Rumbold: The current certified normal accommodation for Wandsworth prison is 965. This compares with a certified normal accommodation of 1,275 prior to the closure of D and K wings for refurbishment.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the reduction on a like-for-like basis, of prisoner overcrowding at Wandsworth prison based on the figures for 1980 to 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The overcrowding at Wandsworth Prison over this period is shown in the table. The average percentage occupancy is based on the relationship between the certified normal accommodation figure—that is, the capacity of the prison without overcrowding—at the end of the year and the average population throughout the year.

Year	Average percentage occupancy

Bail Hostels

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the variations between bail hostels as to regimes, curfews and emphasis on enforcement of rules, including the distinction between open and closed hostels.

Mr. John Patten: Bail hostels are not divided into "open" or "closed". All bail hostels have 24-hour staff cover and operate a night-time curfew which may in individual cases be amended by bail conditions attached by the court. Hostel rules set out what conduct is acceptable and residents are required to comply with these rules as well as the conditions attached to their bail. Residents who fail to observe the curfew or comply with the rules are liable to be brought back to the courts to determine their disposal.

The regimes of individual hostels and their policy on enforcement of curfews and hostel rules are matters for local hostel management and such information is not held centrally.

National standards for the management of approved hostels will be introduced next year to ensure that good and consistent practice is applied in all hostels throughout England and Wales.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of locating bail hostels on the crime rate in the local area;

(2) what publicly available research evidence has been produced either by, or at the instigation of, his Department on the social and economic effects of bail hostels upon the communities where they are located.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the extent to which bail hostel functions may be contracted out to private organisations in the future.

Mr. John Patten: A number of private sector organisations are already involved in the provision of new bail hostels in co-operation with probation and voluntary sector managers. For example, Greater Manchester probation service contracted with a private sector developer to deliver the new bail hostel in Oldham and Cheshire probation service are working with a housing association in the development of hostels at Sandbach and Ellesmere Port. The extent to which other bail hostel functions may be contracted out to private and voluntary sector organisations in the future is being considered following responses to the consultation paper "Partnership in Dealing with Offenders in the Community" which was issued in 1990. We hope to make an announcement early in 1992.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued to the police in co-operating with management of bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: No specific guidelines have been issued centrally, but local managers liaise with station sergeants, community constables and other police officers on such matters as breach proceedings and security systems.

Channel Tunnel (Policing)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 572-74, how many additional police posts were approved by the Kent police authority for funding for 1992-93; how many of those which he approved were for (a) channel tunnel duties and (b) motorway duties; and how many of these posts will be re-imbursed by Eurotunnel from January 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend has been asked to approve a total of 82 posts for Kent police for 1992-93. He has approved 42 posts to be funded in the normal way and 40 reimbursed posts. The 40 reimbursed posts are for the policing of the channel tunnel duties; 11 of the remaining 42 will be devoted to motorway duties. The chief constable will be able to deploy the remainder to general policing duties in Kent.

Prison Service (Review)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet received the report of Sir Raymond Lygo's review of the management of the prison service.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I received Sir Raymond Lygo's report on 12 December and am today placing copies of it, together with Sir Raymond's covering letter, in the Library. It provides a wide-ranging set of recommendations and I am extremely grateful to Sir Raymond for the speed and thoroughness with which he has completed his task. I am also grateful to Lord Rayner for the assistance which he has given.

The report acknowledges the particularly intractable problems with which the prison service has to deal, many of which are outside its control. Sir Raymond concludes, however, that it would be too easy to attribute all the problems of the service to external factors and that there are a number of fundamental managerial issues which need to be tackled. The most important of these is the relationship between the prison service and Ministers. Sir Raymond advocates a greater independence for the prison service from day-to-day ministerial oversight. This would be achieved by turning the prison service into an agency, appointing a part-time non-executive chairman of the Prisons Board, giving the board formal collective responsibility for the management of the service and establishing a supervisory board to advise me on major policy and resource issues. The post of director general would be filled by open competition.

Sir Raymond also makes a number of other important recommendations on management and personnel issues. He proposes that the prison service should recruit people from outside into some of its senior management posts; that there should be more contracting out of support services such as catering, the provision of clothing, building maintenance and possibly workshop management; that prison governors should wear uniforms; that if industrial relations in the service do not improve legislation should be introduced to restrict industrial action; and that far more work should be devolved from headquarters to local level.

A number of Sir Raymond's recommendations are in line with developments already taking place within the prison service, but, taken together, they amount to a radical programme of change both within the service and for its relationship to ministers. I am therefore inviting comments on Sir Raymond's report before reaching decisions in the spring. Copies of the report are being made available to interested organisations, including the trade unions, with an invitation to submit comments by Friday 28 February to Her Majesty's Prison Service, Room 601, Abell House, John Islip Street, London SW1P 4LH.

Category A Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now considered the report of the security audit of arrangements for holding and managing category A prisoners and the inquiry into the workings of DOC1 division in prison service headquarters, conducted by Mr. Ronald Hadfield and Mr. Gordon Lakes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes submitted their report on 1 November 1991. It covers a wide field, ranging from detailed matters of physical security to wide-ranging proposals for collecting and disseminating intelligence. I am most grateful for the thorough way in which they have completed their work.

The report is both helpful and reassuring. Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes indicate that they have found no evidence of general complacency about security standards and that governors are alert to security needs. Where they identified improvements in procedural and physical security which needed to be made, they communicated these to individual governors in the course of their inquiry. Many of their broader recommendations have already been implemented. Some, with considerable resource implications, will need to be prioritised; some involving building work will need to be phased into existing prison building and refurbishment programmes; and others will need to be the subject of consultation with prison governors and others in the prison service and, in some cases, outside.

There is only one recommendation which I have not accepted in its present form. With the aim of ensuring that attention is focused on prisoners posing the highest risk, Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes proposed that standard risk category A prisoners in dispersal prisons should be re-categorised "category B (dispersal)". While I fully support this aim, I am concerned that re-categorisation in the form recommended could give rise to operational uncertainty or confusion whenever these prisoners need to be transferred or detained outside these very secure establishments. I therefore intend to consult the governors of dispersal prisons and others to see whether the underlying aims of the recommendation can be met in another way.

As far as DOC1 division is concerned, Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes found staff there to be hard working and well motivated. They have, however, made recommendations relating to the strategic management of the division and proposals for a more systematic approach to the collation and dissemination of information and intelligence. A feasibility study into this latter proposal is already under way. All other recommendations have been accepted.

Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes have prepared a version of their report which they have advised need not be withheld on grounds of security. I have accepted that view, and have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Prison Staff (Name Badges)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the target of December 1991 for the wearing of name badges by prison staff has been achieved.

Mrs. Rumbold: Work is progressing on the commitment given in the white paper "Custody Care and Justice", to the wearing of name badges by all staff on duty in prisons. Necessary consultation with the trade unions on the detailed arrangements, and the procurement mechanisms necessary for the quantities that will be required, result in the need for a slower introduction than originally targeted.

Chelmsford Prison

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to end slopping out in Chelmsford prison; when the practice is expected to end; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Preparatory work on providing in-cell sanitation at HM prison, Chelmsford, is now in progress. The first cells with in-cell sanitation will be available early in 1992 and the programme will be completed by 1994.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners there were in Chelmsford prison on 1 December 1990 and 1 December 1991; what is the maximum number of prisoners meant to be in Chelmsford prison; and if he will make a statement on what actions are being taken to reduce overcrowding in Chelmsford prison;

(2) if he will make a statement on the number of prisoners being held in police cells at Chelmsford police station; and what actions are being taken to alleviate the situation.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information for the period in question is as follows:

	Number
Monday 3 December 1990	376
Monday 2 December 1991	389

The certified normal accommodation—that is the uncrowded capacity of the establishment—is 232 and its operational capacity is 392.

The prison service has now arranged for young men awaiting trial to be moved from Chelmsford prison and held in Rochester prison. This had removed the need for Chelmsford prisoners to be held in police cells. On 11 December, the latest date for which figures are available, there were five prisoners in Chelmsford police station who should have been held in Bedford prison.

My right hon. Friend and I regard reducing the number of prisoners in police cells as a high priority for the prison service. Every effort is being made to make the most efficient possible use of existing prison accommodation. New prison accommodation which will be provided in eight prisons which are due to open in 1992 should make a significant impact on this problem.

Television Franchises

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure those television companies which have lost their franchises continue to broadcast a full range of locally orientated programmes for the duration of their licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The ITV companies operate under contract to the Independent Television Commission until the end of 1992. It is for the ITC to consider whether the amount of local interest programming in each area is adequate.

Immigration

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar can expect answers to immigration case letters to his Department of (a) 11 March 1990, relating to Musse Kinsi Abdi (Ref.: 095413); (b) 20 November 1990 and reminders relating to Yussuf Amina Hussein (Ref.: A 444158); (c) 12 December 1990 and reminders relating to Ahmed Hassan Jama (Ref.: H 353673); (d) 21 January 1991 and reminders relating to Arraleh Abdillarhi Dualeh (Ref.: A 132858); (e) 20 December 1990 and reminders relating to Mohamoud Mohamed Adan (Ref.: M 495545); (f) 23 January 1991 and reminders, relating to Mohamoud Saleh Mohamed (No reference number); (g) 21 February 1991 and reminders, relating to Farah Kin Abdi (Ref.: 095413); (h) 20 May 1991, relating to Mohamed Ilhan Farah (Ref.: N3/1581/261/11:/89); (i) 11 September 1991, relating to Mattan Ahmed Jama (Ref.: A 419816/A 437821); and (j) 3 October 1991, relating to Arrale Abdool (Ref.: A 132858/7).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The hon. Member wrote to me on 15 November about each of these cases. I will be replying to that letter very shortly.

Television Licences

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether owners of a monochrome television receiver and a video recorder are required to pay the licence fee applicable for a colour receiver; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: While the Home Secretary still has responsibility for broadcasting policy matters, it now falls to the BBC to interpret the regulations and to determine the licensing requirements in individual cases.

However, I can confirm that a colour television licence is required for the installation or use of a video cassette recorder in conjunction with a monochrome television set.

Emergency Planning Review

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if proposals for local authorities to carry out the duties of the Royal Observer Corps outlined in his answer to the hon. Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 10 July 1991, Official Report, columns 393-96, will include extending the VHF radio network to local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities have had a statutory planning responsibility for civil defence arrangements, including communications arrangements, since 1983.

The Home Office is considering the re-allocation to local authorities of the radio equipment previously used by the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation and the Royal Observer Corps in order to improve the facilities already provided by the emergency communications network.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans exist at present for the monitoring of nuclear burst information and radiation levels; what provisions govern the issue of dose rate meters; how these functions will continue after the abolition of the Royal Observer Corps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend announced on 10 July that the arrangements for monitoring nuclear bursts and radioactive fallout in wartime must be restructured. The Royal Observer Corps has therefore stood down from its operational monitoring role at the end of September 1991.

A radiation monitoring capacity has been planned and developed by local authorities since 1983. A total of 57,000 portable dose rate meters were issued to local authorities and the police and fire service in the mid-1980s and 22,000 meters have also been issued to other Government Departments. A further 9,000 are held in store to supplement existing issues stocks as necessary.

We intend to issue further guidance, in the new year, to local authorities on the new monitoring arrangements which were outlined in my right hon. Friend's July statement.

ENERGY

Miners Pension Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps the Government are taking to ensure that the British Coal Mineworkers Pension Fund is fully protected both now and in the future, following the proposed privatisation of the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have confirmed that the pension interests of both current and past employees of British Coal will be properly safeguarded, as has been the case with previous privatisations.

Dounreay

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the present status of nuclear materials control and accountability at the Atomic Energy Authority's nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Nuclear material control and accountability at Dounreay, as at other United Kingdom nuclear establishments, are carried out in accordance with carefully specified procedures and are subject to Euratom inspection. Those procedures identified a discrepancy and an investigation of the circumstances is now under way. It would be premature to anticipate the results of that investigation, which will be reported to my Department.

Methane Generation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to encourage the generation and recovery of methane from waste not destined for combustion for electricity generation by means comparable to present regime for the encouragement of electricity generation by waste-based methane combustion provided under the renewables subsection of the non-fossil fuel levy.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's R and D programme on landfill gas provides information for both electricity generation and heat producing applications and projects of the latter kind have been supported under the programme. Future policy on renewable energy is being considered by the renewable energy advisory group under my chairmanship.

Non-fossil Fuels

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to update or alter the Electricity (Non-Fossil Fuel Sources) (England and Wales) Order 1990 SI 1990, No. 263.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no intention of updating or altering the Electricity (Non-Fossil Fuel Sources) (England and Wales) Order 1990 SI 1990, No. 263.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what his proposals are for his Department's research and development budget for renewable energy beyond the current year.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department's renewable energy research, development and demonstration programme will continue to follow the progressive development strategy published in Energy Paper 55, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House. The programme budget has risen from £20·8 million in 1990-91 to £24 million for the current year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for the encouragement of DEFBOT —design, finance, build, operate and transfer—financing for those constructors interested in developing renewable sources of energy under the non-fossil fuel order, but not interested in long-term commitments to management of non-fossil fuel plant.

Mr. Moynihan: Developers are proposing a variety of mechanisms for the construction, financing and operation of renewable energy projects which are included in orders under the non-fossil fuel obligation. Comprehensive packages including design, construction and financing may well be the best arrangements in many circumstances and are therefore welcome. We will be monitoring arrangements developers make for projects and will be able to see to what extent this route is followed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the completion of his negotiations with the European Commission regarding the extension beyond 1998 of the Renewable Subsection of the Electricity (Non-Fossil Fuel Sources) England and Wales Order 1991 and levy procedure; what consultations he has held on this with the Director-General of OFFER and the chairmen of the 12 regional electricity companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Discussions with the Commission of the European Community about the extension beyond 1998 of the non-fossil fuel obligation for renewable sources of energy have begun. The results of those discussions will be announced in due course.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to increase the funding of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom's contribution to the International Atomic Energy Agency for 1992 has already been fixed and will be paid in due course. Contributions in 1993 and 1994 will be determined by discussion with other member states and in the agency's board of governors in which the United Kingdom will play an active part.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judges

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the names and ages of all the judges of (a) the Supreme Court and (b) the crown-county courts now aged 69 years or over.

The Attorney-General: On 1 December 1991, in addition to the Lord Chancellor and the four heads of divisions, there were 27 Lords Justices, 84 High Court judges, 457 circuit judges and 231 district judges. Those aged 69 or over represented about 19 per cent. of Lords Justices, 10 per cent. of High Court judges, 9 per cent. of circuit judges and 3 per cent. of district judges.

The names of those judges, with their ages, at 1 December 1991, is as follows:

	Age

District Judge Barker	71
District Judge Vaughan	69
District Judge Radford	69
District Judge Bilmes	71

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the names, with dates of appointment, together with last possible date of retirement, of all unretired judges of the Supreme Court and crown/county courts who have already acquired sufficient years of service on the bench to qualify for the maximum appropriate judicial pension.

The Attorney-General: Judges of the Supreme Court must retire on their 75th birthday. Normally, circuit judges and district judges must retire at the end of the completed year of service in which they attain the age of 72, but may be extended in office by the Lord Chancellor, where he considers it desirable in the public interest, up to the age of 75. The last possible date of retirement for each judge is therefore 75.

Set out in the table, with their date of appointment and 75th birthday, are the judges of the Supreme Court who on 1 December 1991 had served for at least 15 years in that capacity, the condition necessary to qualify for an immediate pension on retirement of half annual salary:

	Date of appointment to Supreme Court	Date of appointment to current post	75th Birthday
Heads of Divisions
Lord Lane	30 September 1966	15 April 1980	17 July 1993
Lord Donaldson of Lymington	30 September 1966	30 September 1982	6 October 1995
Sir Stephen Brown	30 September 1975	11 January 1988	3 October 1999

District Judge Jeffreys	1 January 1971	19 September 2001
District Judge Freeman	1 September 1971	3 September 1995

Separate arrangements may apply in certain circumstances to judges who have served previously in other judicial capacities.

Ambrosia Creamery (Accident)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General if he will request the Health and Safety Executive to provide him with information about the activities of the executive in connection with the accident to Holger Subir Majhi at Ambrosia creamery, Lifton, Devon, on 28 November 1990 with a view to requesting the Director of Public Prosecutions to initiate a prosecution under his powers under section 38 of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

The Attorney-General: I have received information from the Health and Safety Executive concerning the accident to Mr. Majhi on 28 November 1990 from which I have concluded that there is no basis for referring the matter to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Magistrates (Poll Tax Briefing)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 361, what was the date of the Coventry justices' seminar; how many magistrates attended; how many magistrates who did not attend have subsequently sat on poll tax cases; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the note referred to.

The Attorney-General: The Coventry justices' seminar was held on 19 June 1991; 123 magistrates attended. The number of magistrates who did not attend but subsequently sat on community charge cases could not be obtained without disproportionate expense. Notes passed between a justices' clerk and his justices are confidential and I do not have a copy.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Achievements

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the achievements of Her Majesty's Government over the past year.

The Prime Minister: Over the past year the Government have continued to pursue policies designed to remove barriers to choice and provide opportunities for all the people of this country, to lay a sound basis for future prosperity, to play a full part in Europe and to contribute to international peace and stability.

Our firm financial policies, reaffirmed by our commitment to the exchange rate mechanism, have reduced inflation sharply and permitted interest rates to be substantially reduced. The conditions necessary for resumed growth have now been established.

We have brought forward a Bill to provide for a new council tax, to replace the community charge in financing local government spending. The Budget helped businesses, large and small. We have taken initiatives to encourage innovation in industry and improve export performance. We have initiated joint action with industry to help identify and pursue export opportunities. Its first use in Kuwait in March 1991 has already led to orders worth £480 million for the United Kingdom. We have opened up telephone services to allow consumers to benefit from more competition.

We have continued to promote wider share ownership. National Power, PowerGen and the non-nuclear electricity companies in England, Wales and Scotland, have been privatised, and a second tranche of shares in British Telecom sold to the public. One in four members of the adult population now owns shares.

We have provided more effective training opportunities and are now offering a wider range of help than ever before to assist unemployed people in obtaining new jobs.

We attach the highest priority to ensuring that everyone, whoever and wherever they are, will have access to high quality public services. The citizens charter White Paper announced a progamme of radical initiatives to improve efficiency and standards in the public services and the privatised utilities. Measures to implement the charter feature strongly in our legislative programme for 1991-92, and we have published a number of charters relating to individual public services.

In education we have taken action to raise standards and improve parental choice. The new School Teachers' Review Body for England and Wales provides the means of improving teachers' status. The development of the national curriculum will encourage concentration on basic skills. Our legislation to provide parents with more information about the performance of schools and to improve school inspection will give parents the basis on which to exercise the choices they are now able to make.

We have also introduced legislation to widen access to an expanded higher education system, to abolish the distinction between universities and other higher education institutions, and to raise the status of vocational education and of further education colleges. Spending on science by the Department of Education and Science will top £1 billion for the first time next year and will rise in real terms for the remainder of the planning period.

The Government's health policies have led to an increase in the number of patients treated, a reduction in waiting times and lists, better quality of care and greater awareness of health promotion. The consultative document "The Health of the Nation", setting out a comprehensive strategy for better health, has been warmly welcomed. Record levels of resources have been made available: spending on the NHS in 1992-93 will be nearly £36 billion, a 55 per cent. increase in real terms since 1978-79.

The NHS reforms are already yielding tangible benefits for patients. Fifty seven NHS trusts have already been established and 99 more approved for start-up in 1992. The growing enthusiasm for trust status within the NHS means that many more will follow. GP fundholding is also proving a success. The patients charter has set out patients' rights for the first time and the standards which will be set nationally and locally by the health service, including the first waiting time guarantees.

We have maintained our determined efforts in the fight against crime. We have established a royal commission on criminal justice to examine the effectiveness of the criminal justice system in securing the convictions of those guilty of criminal offences and the acquittal of the innocent.

In September we published "This Common Inheritance —The First Year Report" reporting progress on the whole range of environmental policies and concerns, and listing 400 separate measures taken during the year.

We have continued to raise standards of food safety, ensure consumers are better informed, make environmental considerations central to agricultural policy, with significant extension of environmentally sensitive areas, as well as raising standards of animal welfare in Britain and taking the lead in setting higher standards throughout Europe.

We have continued to invest record sums in the improvement of the United Kingdom's transport infrastructure, and to encourage greater private sector involvement in the provision of transport facilities.

We have introduced legislation to enable the structure of English local government to be reviewed so as better to reflect the identities and interests of local communities.

We have continued to work for the regeneration of our cities. The city challenge initiative encourages local authorities to work with their private, voluntary sector and local community partners, to regenerate key areas of their cities.

In the housing field, the new emphasis on quality of performance will further improve the renovation and management of council housing in England and Wales. We have introduced pilot rent-to-mortgage schemes, to extend tenants' opportunities to buy their homes, and brought in new arrangements to ensure that tenants are actively consulted in local authorities housing plans. A special programme of hostels and permanent housing is reducing the numbers of people sleeping rough in central London.

We have improved the position of children. We have increased child benefit, and pledged to increase it in line with inflation in the future. The Children Act, which came into effect this year, is a far reaching reform of children's rights. The new Child Support Agency, for which legislation was passed earlier this year, will improve the assessment, collection and enforcement of child maintenance. We are continuing to enhance the opportunities for disabled people to play an independent part in society. In 1991 we enacted legislation providing for two new social security benefits for disabled people.

Nineteen-ninety-one has seen momentous events internationally. The United Kingdom's contribution to the liberation of Kuwait enhanced our standing in the world, strengthened the power of the United Nations and proved again the outstanding abilities of our armed forces. We responded rapidly to the Iraqi Government's persecution of their own people, proposing the safe-haven initiative to provide an effective response to the plight of ordinary Iraqis. Building on the experience of this we launched the United Kingdom's disaster relief initiative in August to provide the capacity for an immediate informed response to disasters round the world.

The United Kingdom contributed significantly to the successful outcome of the Maastricht European Council. We have fully protected the United Kingdom's right to take its own decision at the appropriate time on a move to the final stage of economic and monetary union. On political union, we have agreed a series of pragmatic reforms, many as a result of our proposals, which will make the Community more efficient, accountable and effective internationally. The new treaty on European union will also strengthen inter-governmental co-operation outside the framework of the Community in important areas like the fight against crime.

We have continued to make steady progress towards completing the single market by the end of 1992 and to the conclusion of the GATT Uruguay round. The Government welcomed the determination confirmed at the Maastricht European Council to keep the Community open to our European neighbours who are eager for closer links and eventual membership. It was agreed that in 1992 negotiations would take place on applications from countries of the European Free Trade Area to join the Community, and, in due course, consideration would be given to the further possibility of expansion towards eastern Europe.

I chaired the successful G7 economic summit in July and the historic meeting between summit leaders and President Gorbachev of the Soviet Union. The Government vigorously denounced the attempted coup in the Soviet Union and supported President Yeltsin's courageous stand against it. I have co-ordinated the G7 programme of aid for the republics of the Soviet Union.

The Government played an important part in concluding the treaty on conventional armed forces in Europe. We have continued to make a substantial contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, participating fully in adapting the alliance, and developing a stronger European defence identity in the Western European Union. We have taken steps to restructure the armed forces to reflect the changed international situation.

We have made a determined effort to promote democracy and good government in the developing countries, as a means to improving the prospects for development and the reduction of poverty. My announcement at the Commonwealth conference in Harare in October that the United Kingdom would implement the Trinidad terms debt reduction initiative for the poorest and most indebted countries was widely and warmly welcomed. If all official creditors followed this lead, the total debt of the countries concerned would be reduced by some $17 billion. At our instigation, the European Community and the Commonwealth have taken a more positive attitude to the welcome developments in South Africa, and sporting links have now been re-established with that country.

These policies will ensure that the United Kingdom is well placed and fully prepared to meet the challenges of the 1990s.

World Memorial Day

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what contribution Her Majesty's Government intends to make to World Memorial Day on 1 January 1992.

The Prime Minister: The Government note the inauguration of World Memorial Day on 1 January 1992 by the Memorial Fund for Disaster Relief. Her Majesty's Government will continue to do all they can to promote a safer and better world which is the stated object of the fund.

Packaging

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to require Her Majesty's Stationery Office to use biodegradeable rice paper chips in place of styrofoam chips in packaging of parcels.

The Prime Minister: This question falls within the scope of the policy announced in Cm 1263; arrangements have therefore been made for the controller and chief executive of HMSO to respond direct. Copies of the letter will be placed in the House Library and with the Public Information Office.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Prime Minister what evaluation has been made of which countries have the know-how for safely dismantling nuclear weapons.

The Prime Minister: The five declared nuclear weapon states have to dismantle and reassemble their own nuclear weapons in order to maintain their stockpiles. The break-up of the Soviet Union may pose a range of problems, including the safe disposal of nuclear warheads. We are addressing these problems, in consultation with our allies and Soviet and Republic authorities.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Norris: To ask the Prime Minister if he has yet received the supplementary report from the Doctors and Dentists Review Body on pay for out-of-hours work for junior doctors.

The Prime Minister: This report has been published today and copies are in the Vote Office. I am grateful to the review body for the work they have put into preparing it.

The report recommends new rates of pay for out of hours working by hospital doctors and dentists in training, following the agreement reached earlier this year which introduced new working arrangements and set limits on contracted hours of duty for such staff.

The recommended rates of pay are:—

100 per cent. of the basic rate for full shift working 70 per cent. of the basic rate for partial shift working
50 per cent. of the basic rate for on call rota working

The recommendations, which arise from a major restructuring of working arrangements, are estimated to increase the paybill for hospital doctors and dentists in training by 5·8 per cent., given certain assumptions about the proportion of staff who will be contracted under each working pattern.

The Government have decided to accept these recommendations and we shall seek to implement them as soon as possible in order to help to deliver our objective of reducing the hours of work of hospital doctors and dentists in training. The costs of the award will be met by health authorities and boards from the resources which we have made available to them this year and which we shall be making available to them in future years.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Scientific Facilities (Germany)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the German Federal Minister of Science regarding the exchange use of large scientific facilities; and what was his response.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any formal representations on this subject from the German Federal Minister of Science.

"Your Child and the National Curriculum"

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many requests for the booklet "Your Child and the National Curriculum" have been received from schools in Cleveland; how many will be distributed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend published "Your Child and the National Curriculum"—as promised in the citizens charter—on Monday 9 December. Sample copies have been sent to all schools in England and they have been invited to order as many additional copies as they need to distribute to parents. One school in Cleveland has already put in its order. We expect many more to follow suit over the next week and in the new year.

Special Needs

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will require establishments of further education to conduct a multi-professional assessment of the needs of students with special educational needs as a basis for their education provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Colleges of further education already carry out assessments of their students' needs, seeking specialist support as necessary. These assessment processes are not prescribed.

Trafford Park Schools

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what approaches he has received regarding the establishment of independent schools in the Trafford Park area of Manchester; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: A group of people interested in establishing an independent primary school in the Trafford Park area of Manchester met members of Her Majesty's inspectorate in March this year. In November, a deputation representing the optimum schooling project, led by my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery), came to see me about applying for voluntary aided status for any such school.

No application has yet been made for registration as an independent school, neither have any proposals been made to establish a voluntary aided school.

Free School Meals

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out, by local education authority, the number of pupils taking free school meals for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Fallon: This information is available in table A15 of "Statistics of Education: Schools" 1989 and 1990 respectively, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken to make an assessment of the future capital requirements of further education colleges for new building and repairs.

Mr. Fallon: The Department keeps under regular review the capital requirements of further education colleges for new building and repairs, in the light of information from LEAs and advice from HMI. Following the establishment of the new Further Education Funding Council, subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill, we shall look to the council for advice on colleges' future capital requirements.

GCSE

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to hold further discussions with interested parties about the implementation of new GCSE syllabus following his recent announcement on coursework; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Officials of the Department and those of the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the examining groups are in close and constant contact about the implementation of my right hon. and learned Friend's recent decisions on GCSE coursework.

Science and Technology

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has made any assessment of resources needed to implement fully at primary level the national curriculum in science and in technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In determining education's share of the proposed local authority grant settlement an assessment was made of the broad range of pressures facing the education service, including the implementation of the national curriculum in primary schools. The proposed settlement allows for LEAs in England to spend £18,730 million on education in 1992-93. This represents an increase of 7·1 per cent. over last year's settlement, which was itself a 16 per cent. increase over the previous year. Within the grants for education support and training programme of support for the national curriculum in 1992-93 totalling some £176 million, £5·5 million will be earmarked specifically for training courses for primary science teachers, and £15 million will be made available for equipment.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all grant-maintained schools showing whether they were county, voluntary aided or voluntary controlled, indicating denomination where appropriate, before becoming grant maintained.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

European Football Championship

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Football Association bid for the 1996 European championship to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Atkins: On 25 November, I confirmed that I was happy for an exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall relating to the Football Association's bid to host the 1996 European championship. I understand that the exhibition is to be held on 9 March.

Degrees

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of his consultations about degree awarding powers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is today writing to all higher education institutions in the following terms:

"DEGREE AWARDING POWERS, FUTURE VALIDATION ARRANGEMENTS AND POLYTECHNIC DESIGNATIONS

1. The Department's paper "Degree Awarding Powers and University Titles" consulted on the Government's proposals concerning:

(a) criteria for the extension of degree awarding powers beyond the present polytechnics;

(b) arrangements for the Secretary of State to secure advice on whether institutions meet those criteria; and

(c) criteria for extending the university title beyond the present polytechnics.

2. This letter sets out the Government's conclusions on the first two issues in the light of comments received on the consultation paper. It also sets out the Government's views on the related issues of future validation arrangements for institutions which do not receive degree awarding powers, and on whether there should be further polytechnic designations. The Secretary of State will announce his decision on criteria for university titles shortly (although this letter confirms one of the criteria in paragraph 17 below). These conclusions are subject to the passage of the FHE Bill currently before Parliament.

Criteria for Degree Awarding Powers

3. The Government's proposal was that the criteria for taught course degrees should be those recommended by the CNAA and the Academic Audit Unit of the CVCP, and which are essentially those used by the CNAA now for the purpose of considering whether to grant institutions accredited status. The principal criterion would be that any institution seeking degree awarding power for taught courses would need to be a self-critical, cohesive academic community with a proven commitment to quality assurance supported by effective assurance and enhancement systems. Characteristics of institutions which met this general principle were that they would have:

(a) a commitment to quality assurance and a demonstrably successful system for defining objectives and safeguarding standards. The system would be sufficiently rigorous to respond to changing circumstances including changes in senior staff;

(b) systems for the identification and transmission of good practice. Staff would be exposed to developments and innovations in the work of others inside and outside the institutions;

(c) appropriate external academic and professional points of reference so that standards were judged against those of the wider academic world. This was especially important in smaller and monotechnic institutions where limited breadth or volume of work would otherwise be a significant disadvantage;

(d) suitable administrative systems supporting an institution's academic work.

4. This proposal has been unanimously welcomed. In the light of that, the Secretary of State has decided that it should be confirmed.

5. The consultation paper proposed additional criteria which would need to be met for an institution to be empowered to award its own research degrees. These were that any such institution would need to demonstrate that the arrangements for the supervision of research students and the management of their programmes, and the extent to which students were exposed to a research environment, would need to be broadly comparable with the position in universities which already have such a power.

6. In the light of a generally favourable response, the Secretary of State has decided to confirm this proposal as well. He does, however, attach considerable importance to the criteria being judged robustly. It should not be assumed that having research capability within an institution is a sufficient condition.

7. It was drawn to the Department's attention in some responses that Clause 72 of the Further and Higher Education Bill as published restricted the power of the Secretary of State to confer degree awarding powers on institutions which are to be funded by the new Higher Education Funding Councils. A Government amendment to the Bill has been tabled which extends the Secretary of State's powers so that it covers all institutions providing higher education.

Arrangements for Considering whether Institutions meet the Criteria

8. The consultation paper proposed that during the period up to the formal dissolution of the CNAA, the Government would look to the Council to advise on whether institutions validated by it meet the degree awarding criteria, and would in parallel appoint Ad Hoc Committees to look similarly at institutions which are validated by universities. This approach was widely welcomed in the responses and is now confirmed by the Secretary of State.

9. CNAA is already working on an accreditation programme. An announcement about the arrangements for the DES Ad Hoc Committees will be made early in the new year.

10. As to securing advice for the Secretary of State in the longer term after the dissolution of the CNAA, some respondents supported the proposal that the Ad Hoc Committee approach should be retained if it works well. However, others saw this as a job for the Quality Audit Unit, while some other respondents considered that the Higher Education Funding Councils should have the main responsibility. This is not a matter which requires an immediate decision and the Secretary of State will reflect further on the options with a view to reaching a decision in the spring.

The Dissolution of the CNAA and New Validation Arrangements

11. The DES intends, in line with the CNAA's Strategic Plan of October 1991, that the CNAA will continue to operate until 30 September 1992. After that date it will concentrate primarily on winding up its affairs in preparation for dissolution, which is likely to be at the end of March 1993. This means that the CNAA will not be able to register any students for taught courses or programmes of research after 1 September 1992, although it will confer awards to all successful students whose courses of study or programmes of research are completed in the 1991/92 academic year. Alternative arrangements for the making of awards and the validation of courses will therefore need to be put in place in time for the 1992-93 academic year.

12. The Secretary of State has considered carefully the representations made that the CNAA should continue in existence until all then students presently registered with it have completed their courses of study. To achieve that, the CNAA would have to continue for at least three more years. Given that its other functions will have transferred elsewhere, the Secretary of State does not consider this to be a practical proposition. The Secretary of State does not believe it would be practical to transfer the CNAA Charter to another institution.

13. Ministers accept that it will be essential for alternative arrangements to be made for those students to be able to continue on the course of study on which they enrolled, in the institution at which they enrolled and with the expectation of receiving a degree or other award at the end of that course of similar standing to the CNAA degree or award for which they initially registered. The Secretary of State expects that to be achieved through institutions not empowered to grant thier own awards entering into a validation agreement with institutions which are so empowered, and awarding their qualifications. It is for institutions which are not presently assured of receiving degree awarding powers to ensure that a suitable agreement is in place by next September.

14. There are many current examples of university validation, and there are now more potential validating institutions. The CDP and the CVCP have indicated their readiness to help in identifying suitable validating institutions in particular cases. In addition, the Open University is intending to offer a validation service for those colleges without degree awarding powers which for various reasons, do not wish to become associated with a local institution. I understand that the Open University expects this to operate broadly on CNAA lines. The Secretary of State recognises that there may be other degree awarding institutions which will also wish to offer a similar service. For its part, the CNAA has given an undertaking to assist all of the associated institutions needing to transfer validation from CNAA to another degree awarding body, whatever relationship they eventually choose.

15. Against this background, the Secretary of State is satisfied that the necessary arrangements are capable of being made within the planned timetable.

Polytechnic Designation

16. At present, an institution which meets certain student numbers criteria, and has received CNAA taught course accreditation, may apply for polytechnic designation. The Secretary of State is advised by the PCFC whether an institution meets the criteria, and if so advised would normally expect to approve the application. The White Paper announced that all polytechnics would be allowed to adopt the university title.

17. The consultation paper included proposed criteria for extending the university title beyond the present polytechnics. These included the requirement that such institutions should have the full range of degree awarding powers. Powers to award taught course degrees will not be sufficient. In the light of the Government's plans for a new framework, Ministers do no expect to approve further applications for polytechnic status."

Science Budget

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the distribution of the science budget for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have considered the Advisory Board for the Research Councils' recommendations on the distribution of the science budget, and have decided to accept the board's advice that the £1,050 million for 1992-93 should, subject to approval by Parliament of the Estimates in due course, be allocated as follows:

Allocations for 1992-93
Agricultural and Food Research Council	107·3
Economic and Social Research Council	45·1
Medical Research Council	227·6
Natural Environment Research Council	129·7
Science and Engineering Research Council	520·8
The Royal Society	17·3
The Fellowship of Engineering	1·6
ABRC (Secretariat and Science Policy Studies)	0·5
Centre for the Exploitation of Science and Technology	0·1
	[1]1,050·0

[1] Including £48 million (1992-93), £125 million (1993-94) and £154 million (1994-95) consequent on the new arrangements for funding of scientific work in higher education institutions announced on 8 November 1990, Official Report, columns 27-28.

I have also accepted the board's recommendation that for planning purposes the following indicative allocations should be adopted for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95:

	1993-94	1994-95
Agricultural and Food Research Council	110·1	119·9
Economic and Social Research Council	53·9	58·3
Medical Research Council	256·8	275·2
Natural Environment Research Council	141·0	148·6
Science and Engineering Research Council	587·0	621·7
The Royal Society	18·0	18·7
The Fellowship of Engineering	1·7	1·8
ABRC (Secretariat and Science Policy Studies)	0·5	0·6
Centre for the Exploitation of Science and Technology	0·1	0·1
Unallocated	12·0	25·4
	[1]1,181·1	[1]1,270·3

[1] Including £48 million (1992-93), £125 million (1993-94) and £154 million (1994-95) consequent on the new arrangements for funding of scientific work in higher education institutions announced on 8 November 1990, Official Report, columns 27-28.

The indicative planning figures contain an unallocated £12 million in 1993-94 and £25·4 million in 1994-95 on which I expect to receive further advice from the ABRC in due course.

The science budget for 1992-93, excluding the dual support transfer, is 25 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979-80. By 1994-95 it will be over 30 per cent. higher. This represents a significant increase in provision for science, and I hope that the scientific community at large will see it as further evidence of the importance which the Government attach to civil science in the research Councils.

I am particularly pleased that the rising profile of the science budget over the next three years will give the research councils a sound basis for their forward planning and enable them to launch a number of exciting new research initiatives. These include the MRC's neurosciences approach to human health, the AFRC's intracellular signalling in plants and animals, and the NERC's land-ocean interactions study. This increase will also enable SERC to give a substantial boost—an extra £40 million by 1994-95—to its programme of research grants to higher education establishments.

I am publishing the board's advice today. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on capital allocations for 1992-93 for voluntary-aided schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Local Education Authorities have today been informed of their allocations for capital spending by the governors of voluntary aided and special agreement schools in their areas for 1992-93. Overall grant for voluntary aided schools announced in the autumn statement rises from £131·5 million to £151·6 million, an increase of over 15 per cent. A total of £55 million has been set aside for grant aid for expenditure on external repairs, up nearly 16 per cent. on the amount set aside in 1991-92. Grant for capital spending rises from £84 million to £96·6 million, an increase of 15 per cent.

I have authorised work to start on 61 major building projects over £250,000, compared with 47 such projects in 1991-92, and 37 in 1990-91. A further 47 such projects have been put on the design list to enable detailed costed plans to be drawn up, compared with 29 such projects in 1991-92.

Eight of the projects authorised for a start are to improve technology facilities, and form part of my recently announced technology schools initiative.

I am allocating over £19 million in grant which will support £23 million of minor works improvement projects, costing less than £250,000, by formula to each LEA based on the number of pupils in voluntary aided schools in the authority. This is double the amount I was able to allocate for equivalent projects for 1991-92, and is being distributed by formula to all LEAs for the first time. I have also allocated additional funds for 35 specific minor projects to provide new school places or to achieve the removal of surplus places.

During the course of the year work has also been approved to start on a further 27 projects which have been the subject of statutory proposals approved since my statement last December.

The amount available for allocating to new improvement/replacement projects at voluntary aided schools in 1992-93 is up no less than 114 per cent. on the equivalent figure last year, at £36 million.

The effect of this substantial increase in capital grant available for projects at voluntary aided schools, taken together with the increases of the last five years, which have seen capital grant allocations rise from £32 million in 1987-88 to £96 million for 1992-93—an increase of 300 per cent.—will have enabled work to go ahead at several hundred voluntary aided schools, including many which have been bidding for allocations for many years. The distribution of funds for projects under £250,000 means that all LEAs will be able to embark on a continuing programme of improvements at their voluntary-aided schools—the first time they will have been in a position to do this.

These increases demonstrate the government's continuing determination to improve school buildings and underlines our commitment to the continuing partnership between Church and state in the delivery of education.

The allocations to LEAs, together with a list of the projects authorised to start or on which design work can begin, and a list of projects approved as a result of statutory proposals since last year's announcement together with those projects which form part of the technology schools initiative, follows.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Croatia and Slovenia

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of people who are refugees from the war in Croatia and how they are being cared for; and whether the United Kingdom will be providing any financial or other assistance to them.

Mrs. Chalker: The latest estimates suggest that 40,000 Yugoslavs are currently in Hungary.

UNHCR has a budget of US$2·9 million to provide assistance for 15,000 refugees for the period October to December 1991. The League of Red Cross Societies is also contributing and has just launched a new appeal to cover the needs of some 20,000 people over a further three-month period. Some 40 per cent. of the UNHCR budget is spent on food allowances, the remainder on domestic items, heating allowances, sanitation and registration equipment. The 1992 UNHCR budget is currently being finalised.

I also refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 3 December at columns 96-97, to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) on 21 November at column 292 and to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 9 December at column 277.

UNCTAD Report

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received a copy of the United Nations conference on trade and development report 1991; and what contribution was made to the report by his Department's Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: Copies of the 1991 report on the United Nations conference on trade and development were received by the Government in September. While the report is produced by the UNCTAD secretariat on its own responsibility, it also reflects discussion in UNCTAD's trade and development board. Officials from the Overseas Development Administration regularly attend sessions of the board and contribute to the discussion on a whole range of issues, including debt and sustainable development, as well as the crucial question of good government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gibraltar

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the position of Gibraltar in the proposed European Community convention on external frontiers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my noble Friend Lord Cavendish in another place on 21 November, Vol. 532, c. 1017.

Hong Kong

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Hong Kong Legislative Council on the proposed court of appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 4 December, the Legislative Council passed a motion calling for greater flexibility about the number of overseas judges who might sit on the court of final appeal. My noble Friend the Minister of State discussed this matter with OMELCO members during his recent visit to Hong Kong. Our policy remains as stated in the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 4 December, Vol. 200, c. 155.

European Parliament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy towards the remit and powers of the European Parliament.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The treaty on European union agreed at Maastricht includes a package of measures to extend the European Parliament's non-legislative powers, particularly to enable it to monitor the Commission more effectively. We also accepted a new procedure giving the EP a right to block legislation in a number of specified areas. A declaration attached to the treaty calls for closer contacts between the European Parliament and national Parliaments.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the recent report, "Options and Opportunities: The N.P.T. Extension Conference of 1995" by G. Bunn, C. N. Van Doren and D. Fisher.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This report has already been received in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources were committed by Her Majesty's Government to supporting the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe apparatus and secretariat in 1991; and what resources are earmarked for the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe support in 1992.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom contribution to the costs of CSCE institutions and meetings is set at 9·1 per cent. of the total. In 1991 the United Kingdom contributed £46,416 each to the costs of the CSCE secretariat and conflict prevention centre and £28,654 to the cost of the office of free elections.

We have estimated that the United Kingdom's share of the costs of the above institutions in 1992 will be approximately £200,000.

TRANSPORT

Highways

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total expenditure of all English local highway authorities for each year between 1980-81 and 1991-92 on (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenence.

Mr. Chope: For the years 1983-84 to 1989-90 the information is published in tables in part 1 of successive editions of "Transport Statistics Great Britain", copies of which are held in the library. Information for 1980-81 to 1982-83 is not readily available in the form requested. Information for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is not yet available.

Vehicle Immobilisation

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to meet the motor industry to discuss the immobilisation of vehicles to prevent theft of vehicles and joy riding.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has met representatives of the motor industry a number of times, most recently on 11 December, to discuss a wide range of matters relating to car crime including the immobilisation of vehicles to prevent theft.

Severn Tunnel

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what surveys have been carried out in the air purity and quality in the Severn tunnel; what system of continuous monitoring is in operation; what surveys have been carried out into the chemicals present in the deposits in the Severn tunnel; what chemicals were found and in what quantity; whether any of the chemicals and diesel fumes found to be present have been identified as a cause of cancer in humans; what was the last date on which environmental health officers carried out tests on the air and chemical content of the tunnel; what is the frequency of such environmental health tests; and if he will place in the Library copies of such reports on deposits, chemicals and air.

Mr. Freeman: The tunnel is equipped with a force ventilation system which gives a 5 to 12 mph wind speed throughout. The last extensive survey of air quality in the tunnel was carried out by British Rail Research, Scientific Services, in 1969. The survey report concluded that under normal running conditions no hazard existed if the fan stopped for short periods. Even under worse conditions, in which locomotives stopped in the tunnel, but with the forced ventilation running, conditions were not considered hazardous.

The Health and Safety Executive undertook a survey in 1979 which found that the level of fumes in the tunnel did not constitute a hazard. Further surveys by BR between 1978 and 1980 reached a similar conclusion. There is no continuous monitoring, but British Rail tells me that a monitoring exercise, which has been planned for some time, is due to start next month.

No hazardous chemical deposits have been found. I understand that the tunnel is drier now than at any previous time due to remedial works.

Health and safety matters which arise within the Severn tunnel are the responsibility of the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate which carries out periodic inspections. Environmental health officers have no jurisdiction in the tunnel.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains carrying various fuel oils and chemicals pass through the Severn tunnel in the opposite or same direction during the time period that passenger services are operating each week and each day; and when it is proposed to change service times and timetables so that freight does not dovetail with passenger services in the tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: These are operational matters for British Rail. BR's operating procedures do not allow more than one train at a time travelling in the same direction to use the Severn tunnel. No train carrying dangerous goods is permitted to be in the tunnel at the same time as a passenger train. HSE's railway inspectorate sees no need to restrict further the passage of trains conveying non-dangerous goods.

Trains

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to require British Rail passenger trains to provide positive pressure breathing air in passenger carriages when passing through or stuck in tunnels.

Mr. Freeman: No. HSE's railway inspectorate advises that the natural movement of air within railway tunnels is sufficient to ensure the health and safety of passengers and staff.

River Thames

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been conducted into the use of the River Thames as a mass transit system.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not know of any recent studies that have been conducted into the use of the River Thames as a mass transit system, other than some confidential market research carried out by the private sector.

Airports (Luggage)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the number of occasions on which passengers' unaccompanied luggage has been loaded on to aircraft at Scottish airports in the last 12 months; what steps he intends to take to stop this practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Airlines are required to identify instances where passengers fail to join their flight, and to ensure that any bags checked in by those passengers are not carried without first being subjected to security controls. No useful purpose would be served by establishing the number of occasions on which such bags have been carried from Scottish airports in the last 12 months, nor in placing a total prohibition of the carriage of such bags.

Recent press articles relate not to the above procedure but to a more sophisticated one involving identifying bags which are travelling unaccompanied because, for example, they have been misrouted. The technology necessary to achieve this satisfactorily in the complex environment of a major airport is only now becoming available. A number of promising systems are under development, but they have not yet reached the stage where it would be reasonable for us to set a firm date by which they must be in use.

Workers' Transport

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will invite the European Commission to proceed with the proposed directive 4315/91 under article 75; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have expressed our concern to the Commission about the proposed treaty base. We will continue to press for the directive to be taken under article 75.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the details and address of the section and directorate within the European Commission concerned with the exclusion of non-workers from the proposed directive (4315/91) on transport of workers with reduced mobility.

Mr. Freeman: The proposal originated in directorate C of directorate-general V, employment, industrial relations and social affairs, Rue de la Loi 200, 1049 Brussels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if taxi cabs are to be covered by the proposed directive 4315/91.

Mr. Freeman: It is not clear from the text whether taxis are to be covered. We will pursue this point in discussions on the text.

Licensed Vehicles

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the number of licensed motor vehicles in the north-west region.

Mr. Chope: The records kept at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency show that the total number of vehicles licensed in the north-west region as at 31 December 1990 was 2,563,825.

Civilian Aircrew

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to provide for legal sanctions to be invoked against a civilian pilot incapacitated by alcohol from flying safely and to define on whose responsibility such a person may be denied the right to take over the controls of an aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: Article 52(2) of the Air Navigation Order 1989 already provides that "a person shall not, when acting as a member of the crew of any aircraft . . . be under the influence of drink or a drug to such an extent as to impair his capacity so to act."

The penalty for contravening that provision can be a fine, or imprisonment for up to two years, or both.

Article 95(1) of the order empowers the Civil Aviation Authority or an authorised person to direct the operator or commander of an aircraft not to make a flight, and to detain the aircraft, if it appears that the flight would be in contravention of the order and be a cause of danger. An "authorised person" is defined as a constable or a person authorised by the Civil Aviation Authority. In addition, article 54 of the order requires that "all lawful commands" given by an aircraft's commander for safety reasons should be obeyed; this may be of relevance to my hon. Friend's question if the aircraft has two pilots on board.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering legal provisions for compulsory testing of flight crew for alcohol in certain circumstances—such as after an accident—with associated penalties; he is advised that primary legislation would be needed.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information is collected by the Civil Aviation Authority on the number of civil aviation pilots and aircrew flying with British airlines who were disciplined for drunken behaviour in 1985 and in 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: Disciplinary action against pilots or aircrew is a matter for the airline concerned. All flight crew licensed by the Civil Aviation Authority must hold a valid medical certificate; I am advised by the authority that in 1990 two professional pilots were refused a certificate for alcohol-related reasons and five had their certificates suspended. Figures for 1985 are not available.

Motor Cyclists (Helmets)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has undertaken of the effectiveness of compulsory helmet wearing for motor cyclists.

Mr. Chope: A study carried out when compulsory helmet wearing was introduced in 1973 indicated that it would result in a substantial reduction in casualties. The number of motor cyclists killed in 1990 was lower than in 1973, but it is not possible to isolate the contribution made by helmet wearing. Comprehensive studies carried out in the United States have indicated that the fatality rate for motor cyclists is twice as high in those States which do not require helmets to be worn—or require wearing only by young riders—as in those states where helmets were required to be worn by all riders.

Ilkley Bypass

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what environmental matters he has taken into consideration in considering the alignment of the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass.

Mr. Chope: Appropriate environmental matters are being taken into account in considering the alignment of the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass. Specialist environmental consultants have been employed to work with the designers of the scheme and those national and local bodies having an environmental interest have been consulted.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he has taken of the effect on the proposed Nidderdale area of outstanding natural beauty when considering the alignment of the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass.

Mr. Chope: When developing options for the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass, the Department of Transport was aware of the proposal to create a Nidderdale area of outstanding natural beauty. The Department was formally consulted by the Countryside Commission about this proposal.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the alignment of the preferred route of the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass.

Mr. Chope: Responses to the public consultation including technical and environmental aspects are still being considered. I shall not be able to announce a preferred route until this work has been completed.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with representatives of (a) the city of Bradford metropolitan district council, (b) Harrogate district council, and (c) North Yorkshire county council over the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass.

Mr. Chope: These local authorities were all formally consulted about the options for an Ilkley bypass as part of the public consultation.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the impending decision on the alignment of the proposed A65 Ilkley bypass.

Mr. Chope: The Department of Transport received more than 4,000 responses to the public consultation on Ilkley bypass. These included representations from national and local bodies.

Railway Signals (Warning Device)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require British Rail to install an electronic warning device in railway signals that would sound an alarm horn in the train driver's cab if the engine were to pass a signal set at red.

Mr. Freeman: Most of the BR network is already fitted with an automatic warning system—AWS—which sounds a warning horn every time the train approaches a signal showing a restrictive aspect—double yellow, yellow or red. When the train approaches such a signal, the driver has to acknowledge the AWS by pressing a button which silences the warning horn and causes an indicator disc to display black and yellow segments as a reminder to the driver. If he does not acknowledge the warning within three seconds, the brakes of the train will be applied automatically. The AWS does not distinguish between the different restrictive aspects.

BR is also evaluating two automatic train protection —ATP—systems which will automatically slow a train which passes a double yellow or yellow, to a speed which will enable it to stop at the next red signal. ATP will also automatically impose any speed restriction required, including temporary ones required for track maintenance.

SS Richard Montgomery

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 521, if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the findings of the most recent survey of the wreck of the vessel Richard Montgomery.

Mr. McLoughlin: I will be making a full report on the SS Richard Montgomery early in the new year.

Highway Assessment Programme

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with representatives from highway authorities concerning the feasibility of installing the multicriteria analysis of scheme options in transport systems into the highway assessment programme.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 December 1991]: None.

M4

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from what time the Severn bridge and the M4 were closed on Sunday 8 December; what stretch of the M4 was involved in total; at what time each was re-opened; and what was the cause of the closure.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 December 1991]: I shall write to the hon. Member.

HEALTH

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. Dorrell: The chief executive of NHS Estate Management and Health Building Agency (NHS Estates) was appointed on 1 April 1991 for a fixed term of five years.

His salary is £55,000 plus an annual non-pensionable performance-related bonus of up to £7,000.

The chief executive of the Medicines Control Agency was appointed as from 10 April 1989 for a fixed term of five years. His appointment for the remainder of his contract was confirmed when the MCA became a "next steps" agency on 11 July 1991.

His salary is £65,993 plus an annual non-pensionable performance-related bonus of up to £13,150.

Pregnancies

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into the living standards and health of pregnant girls under 18 years of age and into the outcomes of such pregnancies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department commissioned a wider study from the Institute for Social Studies in Medical Care. The findings were published by HMSO in 1986 in "Teenage Mothers and their Partners", a copy of which is available in the Library, and in a series of articles in professional journals.

The Department has provided core funding to the national perinatal epidemiology unit since 1978. The unit continuously monitors and analyses data which are routinely collected by the Government Statistical Service and the national health service, to assess how the outcome of pregnancy and social, economic and medical factors thought to be associated with it vary both over time and from place to place within England and Wales. Analysis of the outcome of pregnancies in girls under 18 years of age is encompassed within this work.

Patients' Money (Guidance)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to revise the guidance on the use of patients' money contained in HM(71)90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Officials are currently considering, in consultation with the Public Trust Office and other interests whether any further advice needs to be issued.

Outside Tenders

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions exist on the freedom of a regional health authority, where a district health authority accepts an outside tender for architectural, ancillary or computer and training services at lower cost than the same services provided by the regional health authority, to penalise the district health authority financially by withholding other moneys or by continuing to charge for the overheads associated with the services concerned.

Mr. Dorrell: There are a wide variety of circumstances in which a regional health authority could reasonably withhold money from a district health authority or charge for overhead costs properly incurred for the benefit of districts within the region. A regional health authority would not, however, wish to penalise a district health authority for contracting out a service at lower cost. On the contrary, in line with the Government's policy as set out in "Competing for Quality", a regional health authority would wish to facilitate such developments.

Waiting Lists, Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by specialty the waiting times for referrals by general practitioners to consultants in the Yorkshire regional health authority before a patient is seen.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority, for details.

NHS Operations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, and specialty, national health service operations that can be performed within six weeks waiting time.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The time patients wait depends on the severity and urgency of their condition and not on the intended treatment or operation. About half all patients admitted to hospital from the waiting lists are admitted in five weeks or less.

Tattoos (Removal)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate has been made of expenditure involved in the removal of tattoos within the NHS for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what percentage of the in-patient waiting lists for 1990-91 were cases relating to the removal of tattoos; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what estimate he has made of the total number for the current year on NHS in-patient and out-patient waiting lists who require removal of tattoos; what percentage of total waiting lists these represent; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information he has showing by region the numbers of patients waiting for tattoo removal in the NHS and the percentage of the whole waiting list represented by this group in each case in (a) 1990-91 and (b) the current year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waiting list information is available centrally by specialty only and not by the intended method of treatment or operation. Out-patient waiting list information is not collected centrally. No estimate has been made of expenditure involving the removal of tattoos.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department proposes to put out to consultation its guidance to local authorities on charging for personal social services; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials are already consulting the local authority associations on a new financial assessment for people in residential care, to take effect from April 1993. Preliminary work to produce guidance about charges for day and domiciliary services has also commenced, and will involve the local authority associations. For both there will be further consultation in 1992.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding local authorities have received from his Department to implement the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 5 December at column 199.

After-care Support

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding local authorities receive for after-care support programmes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner) on 9 December at columns 331-32.

Private Health Care

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedure patients should use for activating the commitment in paragraph 9.6 of the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities and GP fundholders are responsible for securing health services that reflect the needs and preferences of their residents and patients. They have the freedom to purchase services from provider units within their own or another health authority, from NHS trusts or from the independent sector. The choice of service provider will depend on a local assessment of people's needs, the relative quality and cost-effectiveness of the services on offer, and the views of local people. District health authorities will be able to establish people's preferences in a number of ways, including discussions with local GPs, community health councils and other local organisations, and local surveys. Patients will be able to make their preferences known direct to GP fundholders.

Medical Records (Access)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the guidance issued by his Department on a patient's right of access to medical records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The NHS Management Executive issued guidance to the NHS in August, entitled "Access to Health Records Act 1990—A Guide for the NHS", under cover of HSG(91)6. A copy of the guidance is available in the Library.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the estimated percentage change in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, for hospital and community health services expenditure in 1991-92;

(2) what was the estimated percentage change in expenditure in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, on family practitioner services current in 1991-92;

(3) what was the percentage change in estimated current expenditure in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, on local authority personal social services in 1991-92;

(4) what was the estimated percentage change in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, in total NHS expenditure in 1991-92;

(5) what was the percentage change in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, for health and community health services current expenditure in 1990-91;

(6) what was the percentage change in expenditure in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, on family practitioner services current in 1990-91;

(7) what was the estimated percentage change in current expenditure in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, on local authority personal social services in 1990-91;

(8) what was the percentage change in real terms, adjusted for pay and price increases in the NHS, in total NHS expenditure in 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 December 1991]: Column A of the table shows the estimated percentage change in hospital and community health services current, family health services current, total national health service and total personal social services expenditure adjusted for changes in input unit costs. Figures on this basis for 1991-92 are not yet available.

Changes in input volumes are however an inadequate guide to the level of services the NHS can be expected to achieve, since they do not reflect the continuing success of NHS management in increasing the efficiency with which it uses resources.

Columns B and C therefore give the percentage change in expenditure for each of the programmes for 1990-91 and 1991-92 (estimated) in real terms that is after adjustment by the gross domestic product deflator.

	A Percentage change in expenditure in 1990-91 after having been adjusted for changes in input unit costs	B Percentage change in expenditure after having been adjusted by the GDP deflator in 1990-91	C 1991-92 estimate
Gross HCHS Current	5·0	4·0	6·2
Gross FHS Current	−0·6	4·2	3·0
Gross NHS Current	2·5	3·3	5·2
Net PSS Current	3·3	3·6	2·6

Note:
Calculated against the existing indicies of HCHS and FHS in service inflation. These are however currently under review.

Dental Health

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will specify the various considerations which led the Health education authority booklet, "Enjoy Healthy Eating", to advise caution in the consumption of dried fruit in order to avoid the harmful effects on teeth, and to encourage the consumption of fruit with no reference to its effect on teeth;

(2) what was the basis of tests carried out to determine the cariogenicity of the various foods, drinks and snacks referred to on pages 19 to 21 of the Health Education Authority's booklet.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 December 1991]: The advice provided in the Health Education Authority booklet is based on the expert advice of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy. The COMA report "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease" (1989) stated that the experience of caries was positively related to the amount of non-milk extrinsic sugars in the diet and the frequency of their consumption.

In order to reduce the risk of dental caries COMA recommended that consumption of NME sugars by the population should be decreased. The food items for which the HEA advised caution in consumption, including dried fruits, contain NME sugars. Epidemiological evidence suggests that fresh fruit, as eaten by humans, appears to be of low cariogenicity.

The recommendations made by COMA have taken account of available scientific evidence as explained in the dietary sugar report. The report is available in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Kiosk

39. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans there are to extend the range of items on sale in the House of Commons kiosk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The range of souvenirs stocked in both kiosks is kept under continual review. The kiosk in Bellamy's holds a limited range of foodstuffs, pharmaceutical products and other useful items. There is little scope to extend that range, although there may be changes in individual items held in response to demand.

Select Committee Reports

40. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to secure the early debate of Select Committee reports.

Mr. MacGregor: I have at present no proposals for any changes in the existing arrangements. Subject to pressures of business in the House I hope to find time for debate on some Select Committee reports during this Parliament.

Working Hours

41. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the progress being made on reforming the working hours of the House of Commons.

Mr. MacGregor: A recent example of reforming the working hours of the House has been that, since they were set up in January, the European Standing Committees have made a significant contribution to reducing the burden of late-night debates on the Floor.

My hon. Friend will be aware that a number of right hon. and hon. Members have either submitted written memoranda or given oral evidence to the Select Committee on Sittings of the House.

Special Standing Committees

Mr. Beith: To ask the Lord President of the Council when a Special Standing Committee set up under Standing Order No. 91 last considered a Bill; and whether he will make a statement on this procedure.

Mr. MacGregor: The last Bill to be considered by a Special Standing Committee was the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Bill [Lords] in the 1983-84 Session. The Government will continue to consider the possible use of this procedure in appropriate cases where this is compatible with the overall management of their legislative programme.

Visitors (Security)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Lord President of the Council if security arrangements for visitors to the Palace of Westminster are maintained at the same level during the parliamentary recesses.

Mr. MacGregor: It has been the long-standing practice of Leaders of the House not to comment on matters of security within the Palace of Westminster. I can, however, inform my hon. Friend that the security arrangements for access are the same whether the House is in recess or not.

DEFENCE

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related element, in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made at grade 7 or above in respect of each of the executive agencies in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Excluding chief executive posts, appointments from the private sector at grade 7 or above have only been made in two of the eight agencies in my Department to date. The table shows the standard civil service rate for the grades specified including discretionary pay for performance.

Agency	Grade	Numbers employed from private sector	1991-92 maximum salary including performance element (£)
Meteorological Office[1]	5	2 1st post 2nd post	39,402-52,122 39,402-46,724
	7	1	27,819-33,175
Defence Research Agency	7	1	27,819-33,175

[1] The difference between the two grade 5 maxima relates to the number of range points and the performance element applicable in each case.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last annual report was published and when the next one is due for each of the executive agencies in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Meteorological Office and the Hydrographic Office were the first two agencies to be established in April 1990. Their reports for 1990-91 were published in July 1991. Their next annual reports, together with the first annual report for the other six agencies in my Department, are due to be published in July 1991.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many staff were in post on the date that each of the executive agencies in his Department were established as executive agencies; and how many staff are in post now in each case;

(2) if he will list those new facilities for staff, including nurseries and health care schemes, which have been introduced since the establishment of each of the executive agencies in his Department;

(3) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of the executive agencies in his Department; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is a matter for the chief executives of the executive agencies and defence support agencies. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive, including performance-related elements and the length of time of the chief executive's contract for each of the executive agencies in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Three chief executive appointments in MOD have been made following open competition. The details of these are shown in table 1. Chief executive positions in the five other MOD "next steps" agencies were filled by the existing head of the organisation. The details are shown in table 2.

Chief executive appointed following open competition

Agency	Period of contract	Salary £
Defence research agency	3 years	140,000
Meteorological office	5 years	[1]65,000
Service children's schools (north west Europe	3 years	[2]55,417

[1] New chief executive appointed with effect from 2 January 1992. Within standard civil service range for grade 2, plus discretionary performance bonus of 15 per cent. of salary.

[2] Standard civil service rate for grade 4 which includes discretionary payments for performance. This post also attracts London weighting and foreign cost of living allowances.

Chief executive posts filled by existing head of organisation without competition

Agency	Grade or service rank	Salary £
Hydrographic office	Rear Admiral	52,855
Military survey DSA	Major General	52,855
Maintenance group RAF support command	Air Vice Marshal	52,855
Chemical and biological defence establishment	Grade 3 civil servant	[1]57,000
Directorate General defence accounts	Grade 4 civil servant	[2]47,921

[1] Standing civil service rate for grade 3 which includes discretionary payments for performance.
[2] Standard civil service rate for grade 4 which includes performance related elements.

Trident

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 703, what is his estimate of the cost of cancelling (a) the entire Trident submarine programme, (b) the building projects at Coulport and Faslane, under the liquidated damages clauses in the contracts, if such cancellations took place (1) on January 1992, (2) on 1 April 1992, (3) on 1 July 1992, (4) on 1 October 1992, or (5) on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As I advised the hon. Member on 15 November at column 703, cancellation costs would be based on an assessment of contractors' properly incurred liabilities at the time of cancellation. Such liabilities would need to be negotiated at that time with the companies concerned. It would not be sensible, therefore, to speculate on what these might be, especially as it is not this Government's policy to cancel the Trident programme.

Nuclear Weapons Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to the United Kingdom of radioactive decontamination and rehabilitation of the sites where the United Kingdom has tested nuclear weapons, or conducted weapons-related tests, at (a) Christmas island, (b) Monte Bello island, (c) Maralinga, (d) Emu field, (e) Potton island and (f) Nevada nuclear test site; and what is his estimate of the further costs that will be needed to complete the environmental restoration of these sites.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost to the United Kingdom of decontamination and site restoration of the former United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon test sites following completion of the programme in the 1960s could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

No further costs are anticipated in respect of either Christmas island or the Monte Bello islands.

The Australian Government are currently seeking a contribution from the United Kingdom for additional work at Maralinga and Emu field, but the United Kingdom view is that the 1968 and 1979 agreements absolve the United Kingdom from any liability to contribute.

There have been no firings involving radioactive materials at Potton island.

No costs have been incurred for rehabilitation of the Nevada test site and the future management of the site is a matter wholly for the United States.

NAAFI

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to implement the recommendations contained in the National Audit Office study of Management Services (Organisation) Division dealing with the financial relationship between his Ministry and NAAFI.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has been no National Audit Office study into the financial relationship between my Department and NAAFI. An MOD efficiency scrutiny has been carried out, however, and some of its recommendations have been implemented. Others will be considered further when the effect that the restructuring of the armed forces will have on the NAAFI have been analysed.

Regimental Memorabilia

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to satisfy himself that the President of the Service Institute and President of the Regiment Institute shops are abiding by their charter to sell only regimental memorabilia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: President of the Service Institute and President of the Regiment Institute shops do not operate under a charter, but are permitted to sell goods including, but not solely, memorabilia, providing they are not in competition with the NAAFI.

Battalions

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the average costs of maintaining (a) a British foot guards battalion and (b) a battalion of the equivalent of the Royal Air Force Regiment in (i) London, (ii) the United Kingdom and (iii) Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) on 15 November, column 703.

Records are not maintained in a way which enables the other information requested to be provided.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Child Benefit

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year costs of raising child benefit to £9·55 (i) for 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in linked means-tested and national insurance benefits, for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The rates of child benefit from April 1991 were £8·25 for the eldest eligible child and £7·25 for each other child and were increased to £9·25 and £7·50 respectively from October 1991. The estimated gross cost of increasing child benefit from those rates to £9·55 for each child throughout 1991-92 would be about £36 million. If the October 1991 rates had applied throughout 1991-92, the cost would reduce to around £29 million. The gross full year costs in 1992-93 of paying £9·55 for all children, instead of the rates of £9·65 and £7·80 which will be in payment from April 1992, would be about £21 million.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate for 1991-92 the numbers paying national insurance contributions in Northern Ireland, distinguishing (a) between the different classes of contribution and (b) between employees and employers.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Daniel Doherty

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the evidence that Daniel Doherty, who was shot dead by the security services at Gransha hospital in Londonderry on 6 December 1984 was, at that time, engaged in a terrorist operation.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 December 1991]: It is not the practice to publish details of police investigations. The death of Daniel Doherty was fully investigated by the RUC, and the report passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions, who directed "no prosecution" of the soldiers involved.

However, I believe that it is widely accepted that Daniel Doherty was engaged in terrorist activities when he was killed.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 11 November to the hon. Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Thompson) about resources for housing in 1992-93, Official Report, columns 397-98, if he will now announce the Housing Corporation's approved development programme, local authorities' housing investment programme allocations, the distribution of resources for estate action and housing action trusts and the housing revenue account subsidy determinations.

Mr. Heseltine: I am today making a number of dispositions for the use of housing resources in 1992-93.

First, gross expenditure by the Housing Corporation will be £1,770 million, rising to £2,004 million in 1993-94 and £2,052 million in 1994-95. A total of 50,900 new homes will be approved next year, 25 per cent. more than this year, three times higher than in 1990-91. I now expect that completions next year will be 60 per cent. higher—at 43,000—than this year; this is an increase of 24 per cent. on previously published projections.

The corporation expects a very much higher output than previously projected, partly because of falling construction costs and property prices, but also because of increases in the more cost-effective elements of the programme. Next year's rented programme is expected to attract double the amount of private finance secured in 1991-92.

At least 27,000 of the newly approved units will be targeted to benefit the homeless. These remain our most urgent priority.

Next year, the corporation will be introducing a major new programme of "do-it-yourself" shared ownership of which 80 per cent. will be targeted on existing local authority and housing association tenants. Its move into home ownership will release rented accommodation for immediate use in housing the homeless.

As previously made clear, from 1992-93 resources for the corporation's new rented and housing for sale programmes will be allocated among the corporation's regions using the housing needs indicator, without "damping" to reflect past shares. This will direct resources where they are most needed. Even with the removal of damping, all regions will gain compared with 1991-92, most substantially. Details of the programme are being published in the corporation's News Supplement Series, copies of which are being placed in the Library.

Today I am informing local housing authorities of their housing investment programme allocations for 1992-93, some £1·7 billion in total. A total of £1,300 million of these resources are general-purpose allocations, or "annual capital guidelines". In October I confirmed to local authorities that 40 per cent. of these would be distributed on the basis of a statistical assessment of local housing needs, but this year, for the first time, authorities have competed for shares of 60 per cent. of the resources, with the Department assessing their performance and the quality of their proposals. My regional offices have scrutinised authorities' strategy statements and bids, against known criteria, meetings were held with authorities, and Ministers have reached decisions in the light of controllers' advice.

We were particularly impressed by the resourcefulness and quality of some 50 authorities which were well ahead of the field in pursuing effective policies. However, 25—about 79 per cent.—were disappointingly poor and fell far short of the standards their tenants and other people locally have the right to expect. I am placing a list in the Library of the names of the authorities in each region who comprise these groups.

In reaching our final decisions we also took into account other relevant factors such as specific problems or needs and allowed for commitments, and for peaks and troughs in expenditure. For up to 31 authorities these discretionary awards were topped up to honour assurances we had given a year ago as to the minimum allocations they should expect. Some of the more disappointing authorities have been saved, by this topping up, from the full rigours of the new performance assessment. Nonetheless, for about 90 per cent. of authorities the proposed allocations were greater than the minimum level we were committed to. For 90 per cent. therefore, the size of the allocation was directly affected by the performance assessment and the exercise of discretion.

The Department's regional controllers will today be telling councils the broad assessments made and will offer follow-up meetings to discuss, where appropriate, the aspects of performance where improvements could be made.

A further £400 million has been allocated to private sector renewal, in the form of "specified capital grants", to assist councils in their grant aid to private owners and in their expenditure on renewal areas, etc. Forty per cent. was allocated by statistical assessment of renewal needs; 60 per cent. was distributed mainly on the basis of authorities' spending patterns.

I am depositing tables in the Library showing the 1992-93 allocation to each authority of the annual capital guideline and of specified capital grant. Together these comprise the housing investment programme allocations.

I am also reviewing the scope for my Department's regional offices, which already advise me on these HIP allocations, to play a greater role in allocating other DOE resources to local authorities, on a more corporate basis.

Substantially increased resources are given for estate action. A total of £364 million is available, an increase of over one third—£96 million—on the £268 million made available this year. This demonstrates our commitment to the most rundown estates and confirms the strategy announced last July by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning.

Almost £160 million is available for distribution to new schemes, of which £115 million will be set aside to start or speed up large-scale regeneration schemes next year. The remainder will support traditional small and medium-sized estate action schemes.

I am, therefore, today inviting over 25 authorities to proceed with 32 large regeneration schemes and 80 authorities to work up a further 100 small and medium-sized schemes for approval. These schemes will involve over £900 million of public and private investment over the next few years. The names of successful authorities and schemes are set out in tables placed in the Library.

Before I give final approval to any scheme I shall expect the local authority to demonstrate that its proposals accord with published guidelines, particularly with regard to housing management and the diversification of tenure and that they have been developed in consultation with tenants, the local community and the private sector.

I have also provided for a major expansion of the programme of housing action trusts. A total of £215 million has been set aside for spending on HATs over the next three years, sufficient for the established HATs in North Hull and Waltham Forest, and for further HATs in four new areas.

Preliminary discussions have taken place with authorities interested in pursuing the HAT option in Liverpool, Brent, Birmingham and Tower Hamlets. I am now satisfied that these should go to the next stage.

As in Hull and Waltham Forest, the projects should be a co-operation between tenants, the local authority and central Government. Some of the feasibility studies are well advanced. Subject to the outcome of these, and after full consultation with tenants, there will be formal ballots of tenants in these areas. If tenants vote in favour, the House will be asked to approve orders establishing the trusts.

As to the current expenditure, I have today issued the housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1992-93. I am placing copies of the determinations in the Library.

On subsidy allowances for management and maintenance, I confirm the proposals to increase allowances by 6·5 per cent. overall and to distribute the increase by a new system of targeted allowances reflecting the problems faced by different authorities. As a result about £93 million more will be directed to authorities with the greatest need. This is in addition to a general 3·5 per cent. increase in allowances which all authorities will receive.

For rent guidelines, I am confirming the proposal for an average rent increase of 9·5 per cent. This will result in an average increase of guidelines of £2·44 a week over the guideline rents which apply this year with a range of between £1·20 and £4·50 in individual councils. Responsibility for setting actual rents however remains with individual local authorities. Housing benefit will normally meet the whole of any rent increase for the two thirds of tenants receiving it.

These various allocations continue the redirection of resources towards the housing association movement and further develop our measures to help the most neglected council estates. They give a fresh impetus to local authorities to work closely with the private sector, to involve their tenants, and to strive continually for the highest standards of management.

Montreal Protocol

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the current United Kingdom position in the Montreal protocol negotiations.

Mr. Baldry: The negotiations towards the 1992 revision of the Montreal protocol will begin in April 1992. The United Kingdom has first to reach agreement with other European member states. In view of the latest scientific findings on ozone depletion, the United Kingdom has proposed that the European Community position for the international negotiations should be: production and consumption of all CFCs and carbon tetrachloride to be phased out by 1 January 1996, with an interim cut of 85 per cent. by 1 January 1994; 1, 1, 1 trichloroethane to go by 1 January 1996, with a 50 per cent. cut by 1 January 1994; halons by 1 January 1995, with an interim cut of 50 per cent. by 1 January 1994. These phase-out dates, which would have a provision for essential uses, are the fastest which could be implemented internationally.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the indicators for standard spending assessments and the grant for each indicator for (a) the city of Durham and (b) Hove council for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: A description of the indictors used in the calculation of standard spending assessments for all authorities for 1991-92 is contained in "The Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (England)". A breakdown of SSAs by indicator for all authorities including Hove and the City of Durham is given in the "Standard Spending Assessment Handbook 1991-92". Copies of both these documents are in the House of Commons Library.

Global Warming

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions of competing theories of global warming have taken in the European Council of Ministers.

Mr. Baldry: The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change is the principal international forum for discussion of the science of climate change. The conclusions of the EC joint Energy/Environment Council meeting in October 1990 referring to the forthcoming second world climate conference recorded the Council's wish that

"the concern of the IPCC about the increase of greenhouse gas emissions from human activities, 'resulting on average in additional global warming', be recognised."

The IPCC will be producing a supplementary report for the international negotiating committee for a framework convention on climate change in February 1992.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent scientific advice on climate change due to emission of carbon dioxide; what data he has received via satellites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The scientific assessment of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change published last year, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, remains the most complete and authoritative statement of scientific advice available. The IPCC is currently preparing a supplementary report to be presented to the international negotiating committee on a climate convention in February next year. This will take into account information produced since the first scientific assessment including data from instruments on Earth observation satellites.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information and data his Department receives from satellites regarding the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Baldry: Information from satellite data studies was included in the scientific assessment of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change published last year, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. New findings from satellite programmes will be included in the supplementary report that the IPCC will submit to the international negotiating committee on a climate convention next February. The Department commissioned a study on data requirements for climate change research which gives details of existing and proposed satellite missions, the instruments carried and the scientific questions to which they would contribute. I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to give directions under section 50 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to require waste disposal authorities to draw up waste disposal plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have stated in their consultation paper on the Environment Agency issued on 3 October—copies of which have been placed in the Library—that they do not consider there would be a role for area-based waste disposal plans when the agency is set up. The Government are reviewing the need for waste regulation authorities to draw up waste disposal plans in the interim period before the agency is set up.

Local Income Tax

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the level of income tax supplement which would be required to be levied by each local authority in Northamptonshire to raise the local revenue required for 1991-92 local authority budgets under a system of local income tax, taking into account variations in the tax base between local authority areas.

Mr. Key: The level of bills in a particular local authority area with a local income tax, would depend on the precise way in which such a system were introduced.

Waste Management

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the formation of an environment agency will have on the timetable for the introduction of waste management licences; when he expects an environment agency to be operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's proposals for the new Environment Agency are set out in the consultation paper issued on 3 October, copies of which have been placed in the Library. We hope to introduce a Bill early in a new Parliament and our aim is that the agency should be operational as soon as possible following Royal Assent. The Government recognise that the timing of the waste licensing provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, due to come into force on 1 April 1993, may need to be reviewed in the light of the emerging timetable for the new agency.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been requested from the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee since the terms of reference governing the remit of the committee were changed in July this year; and if he has yet received any of the studies requested.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside to the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 19 November 1991, Official Report, column 102.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman or officials of the National Rivers Authority to discuss the proposals for an environment agency.

Mr. Baldry: We are in regular touch with the National Rivers Authority on a range of issues. The NRA has recently put forward its views on the Government's proposals for the Environment Agency. We shall consider these carefully alongside all other responses to our consultation paper, which was issued in October.

Housing Associations

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many housing associations have expressed an interest in acting as agents for mortgage lenders under his Department's joint initiative on repossessed properties of 5 November;

(2) how many repossessed homes have been brought into use for letting to homeless families through housing association management agreements under his Department's joint initiative with mortgage lenders of 5 November.

Mr. Yeo: It is too early for any such properties to have been transferred, but an encouraging 77 housing asssociations have expressed interest in the initiative.

UN Environment Conference

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what women's non-governmental organisations are to be included in the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations conference on environment and development in 1992.

Mr. Baldry: The Prime Minister has indicated that he hopes to attend the United Nations conference on environment and development. No decision has been taken on the composition of the rest of the British delegation.

Housing, Waveney

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement indicating the Government schemes and other measures available to Waveney district council to increase and improve the housing stock in Waveney.

Mr. Yeo: Government schemes and other measures available to Waveney district council to increase and improve housing stock in its district include the use of basic credit approval, specified capital grant and capital receipts as specified together with housing revenue to maintain and improve the council housing stock, assist housing associations and provide grants to improve private homes. There is also scope to obtain supplementary credit approval under the initiatives for rural housing and flats over shops. The council may promote a scheme to provide council tenants with "portable discounts" to help buy their own homes and they can operate both shared ownership and "do-it-yourself" shared ownership schemes. By providing council-owned land free, or at reduced price, to housing associations, the council can encourage the inflow of Housing Corporation funds for the provision of more social housing, which can also be promoted by negotiation with private developers seeking to build in the district.

Small Cetaceans

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent or allocated to research projects undertaken by his Department on the status and conservation of small cetaceans for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has allocated funds as follows:

Year	£
1992-93	61,896

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research projects undertaken by his Department on the status and conservation of small cetaceans and specify in each case the amount allocated, the duration of the project, and the body or institution conducting that work.

Mr. Baldry: Last year this Department, as part of its programme of North sea research, initiated three extra-mural projects in this area: a one-year study on contaminants in small cetaceans in England and Wales, to be carried out by the sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council at a total cost of £58,626; a small cetaceans sighting and monitoring scheme, undertaken by the United Kingdom Mammal Society Cetacean Group for two years at a total cost of £24,000; and the three-year appointment of a veterinary pathologist at the Institute of Zoology to co-ordinate the investigation of marine mammal strandings in England and Wales, at a total cost of £86,000. A number of other bodies are involved in these contracts or are contributing practical assistance, including the Natural History museum and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

In addition, we expect in the near future to complete arrangements for the appointment of a parallel co-ordinator, to investigate strandings in Scotland.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work has been undertaken by his Department to investigate the level of contaminants in small cetacean carcases retrieved in the United Kingdom; what budget has been allocated to this work for each of the years 1990, 1991 and 1992; and which body or institution is conducting the work.

Mr. Baldry: The sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council was commissioned last year by this Department to carry out a programme of contaminant analysis on cetaceans found stranded around our shores in 1990 and 1991. A total of £58,680 was allocated to this work in the 1990-91 financial year.

World Climate Conference

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department plans to be represented at the third world climate conference, organised by the Global Commons Institute in London on 13 to 16 April 1992.

Mr. Baldry: The second world climate conference in November 1990 was organised by UNEP, WMO, UNESCO, FAO and several other United Nations and intergovernmental organisations. We are aware of the event proposed for April 1992 by this non-governmental group, but have not received an invitation to attend.

Young People (Care)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding his Department provides to local authorities specifically to house young people stepping out from care.

Mr. Yeo: The bulk of capital resources for local authority housing is distributed through a single housing investment programme allocation. The allocation of resources to particular areas of activity is mainly a matter for authorities themselves, although their duties under the homelessness legislation cover vulnerable young people. The Housing Corporation allocates resources to housing associations, who are now the main providers of new social housing. In 1990-91 the corporation spent £4·7 million on new housing schemes for young people at risk, including those leaving care. For 1991-92 the corporation has allocated £13·6 million, a 190 per cent. increase.

Poll Tax Enforcement

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 316, if he will arrange to place in the Library the minutes of the meetings of the local taxation working party at which the use of bailiffs in poll tax enforcement was discussed.

Mr. Key: No.

Estate Action

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the names of the successful estates in West Yorkshire who qualify for improvements under the 1992-93 estate action programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The following local authorities in West Yorkshire have today been invited to work up bids for estate action resources as part of the 1992-93 programme:

Local Authority and Estate
Bradford—Holmewood.
Kirklees—Brackenhall/Riddings.
Leeds—Ebor Gardens, Halton Moor.
Calderdale—Ashenhurst, Elland.
Wakefield—Simpson Lane, Kershaw Avenue.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he has made to publicise and distribute in England and Wales the guidance note recently published on the planning considerations deemed to govern applications for renewable energy generating stations.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 13 December, Official Report, column 554.

Community Charge

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about claimants on income support who are in arrears of community charge payments being dealt with by bailiffs rather than by direct deductions from their income support; if he will issue new guidance urgently to local authorities to advise them to use direct deductions from benefit wherever possible rather than to send in the bailiffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have had numerous representations on the enforcement of the community charge payment. It is for local authorities to decide which is the most appropriate method of enforcement to pursue within the powers available to them.

Planning Inquiries (Costs)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now implement the provisions of section 30 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

Mr. Yeo: Section 30 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 enables appeals costs to be awarded, in an inquiry or hearing, where the unreasonable behaviour of one of the principal parties causes the cancellation of the inquiry or hearing, so that other parties incur wasted expenditure in making their preparations to be represented in the proceedings. These provisions are to be brought into force from 2 January 1992.

To complement these provisions we shall also bring into force provisions, which are already in the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, enabling appeals costs to be awarded in appeal "hearing" cases, as well as inquiries.

The practical effect of these changes, and the various planning proceedings to which they apply, are fully explained in a new circular issued today by my Department and the Welsh Office. The draft guidance in this circular was recently the subject of public consultation involving a wide range of interested bodies.

We think these new cost arrangements should bring an increased sense of discipline to planning appeal proceedings. In the past, it has sometimes been too easy for a developer to maintain a planning appeal right up to the last moment, before an inquiry was due to begin, only to withdraw it without any liability to meet the wasted expense inevitably incurred by the planning authority and other interested appeal parties. These new provisions will help to deter any developers who may continue to think they can get away with such unreasonable behaviour.

Unauthorised Development

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now issue revised policy guidance to local planning authorities about effective enforcement action against unauthorised development, in accordance with the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

Sir George Young: We have carefully considered the comments of all the organisations who were consulted about the draft planning policy guidance note I announced on 24 July, Official Report, column 667. PPG 18, entitled "Enforcing Planning Control", is being issued today. The new guidance emphasises that the Government do not condone any wilful breach of planning control; and they encourage vigorous enforcement action where unauthorised development is plainly unacceptable and immediate remedial action is required. The guidance also suggests what factors planning authorities should normally take into account when they are considering whether enforcement action is expedient for small businesses or self-employed people.

The main enforcement provisions in part I of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 are being brought into force on 2 January 1992. A Department of the Environment and Welsh Office circular, which is also being published today, gives procedural guidance to planning authorities about the new provisions.

During parliamentary debates on the Planning and Compensation Bill earlier this year serious concern was expressed about the weakness of the present enforcement provisions. The strengthened and improved regime, now being brought into force, should enable every planning authority to take quick and effective enforcement action whenever it is justified.

Hedgerows

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance is available to help landowners retain hedgerows in situ.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 13 December 1991]: In England assistance is available towards the cost of hedgerow management under grant schemes for wider purposes administered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Countryside Commission and English Nature.

In July I announced our intention to provide new incentives to promote improved care of hedgerows in ways which are environmentally beneficial. At present we are discussing the terms of the proposed scheme with the Countryside Commission and others, and will make a further statement in the new year.

Local Authority Powers

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to extend the powers of local authorities, under section 16 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous) Provisions Act 1976, to obtain information other than issues connected with land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 13 December 1991]: The Government have no plans to extend the powers available to local authorities under section 16.

Sports Clubs (Rates)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 17, if he will publish a table showing for 1990-91 (a) the total number of applications for relief from non-profit making sports clubs (survey entry B(b)1), (b) the total number of sports clubs receiving relief after submitting an application (survey entry B(b)2), (c) the total number of sports clubs receiving relief without submitting an application (survey entry B(b)3) and (d) the total number of sports clubs denied relief after submitting an application.

Mr. Key [holding answer 13 December 1991]: The departmental survey to which my previous answer referred collected information about non-profit making recreational clubs; not only sports clubs. The table shows information for 1990-91, based on the returns received from 81 per cent. of local authorities.

	Number
(a) Number of applications received	10,000
(b) Number of clubs receiving relief after applying	9,000
(c) Number of clubs receiving relief without applying	1,300
(d) Number of clubs not receiving relief after applying	1,000

These figures may not sum with those shown in my previous answer because of rounding.

Public Conveniences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Grist) Official Report, 11 November column 395, he will (a) update his statement on the number of pennies received under the send-a-penny campaign to improve public conveniences and (b) state how he intends to spend the moneys received to date.

Mr. Key [holding answer 13 December 1991]: No more pennies have been received. These are extra receipts payable to the Consolidated Fund.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the provisional level of total spend per adult at standard spending assessment in 1991-92 for (a) Wandsworth, (b) Westminster and (c) each of the 10 district authorities of Greater Manchester;

(2) what has been the total spend per adult at standard spending assessment in 1990-91 for (a) Wandsworth, (b) Westminster and (c) each district authority in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Key [holding answer 13 December 1991]: A standard spending assessment represents the Government's view of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure which would enable a prudent authority to provide a standard level of service, taking into account its physical, social and demographic characteristics.

The SSAs for 1990-91 and 1991-92 expressed in £s per adult for all inner London boroughs and districts in Greater Manchester are given in the table.

	1991-92 SSA (£/adult)	1990-91 SSA (£/adult)

Advertising Expenditure

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), Official Report, 8 November, column 308, he will set out the reasons for the increased level of expenditure on advertising by his Department in 1989-90.

Mr. Heseltine: The increase in my Department's expenditure on advertising in 1989-90 arose mainly from campaigns to provide information to the public about the flotation of the 10 water companies in England and Wales, new legislation on local government finance and housing and to encourage the use of lead-free petrol.

WALES

EC Projects

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total amount of money in pounds sterling allocated to projects in Wales by the European Community in 1990 and to date in 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: Allocations of European regional development fund and European social fund money to projects in Wales in 1990 and 1991 are as follows:

	ERDF	ESF
1990	27·5	10·8
[1]1991	64·3	13·3

[1] To date.

Farming Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the average per farm management and investment income, net farm income inclusive and exclusive of breeding livestock appreciation, and percentage changes by farm type and size for 1990 and 1991 in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Management and investment income and net farm income per farm for 1990-91 are due to be published after Christmas. The latest available information relates to 1987-88 and 1988-89 and is as follows:

Type of farming	Size of business (BSU)	Management and investment income (£'000) 1987-88	1988-89	Per cent. change	Net farm income (including BLSA) (£'000) 1987-88	1988-89	Per cent. change	Net farm income (excluding BLSA) (£'000) 1987-88	1988-89	Per cent. change

Emissions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish information on the per capita emissions of (a) agricultural CH_4, (b) non-agricultural CH_4, (c) CO_2 from land use change and (d) CO_2 from industrial usage;

(2) if he will publish information on the gross emissions in Wales of (a) agricultural CH_4, (b) non-agricultural CH_4, (c) CO_2 from land use change and (d) CO_2 from industrial usage.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures specifically relating to Wales of CH_4 (methane) and CO_2 emission levels are not available. However, United Kingdom figures can be found in the Department of Environment publication "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" No. 13 1990.

The latest published data on United Kingdom emissions of both gases relate to 1989. Based on an estimated current United Kingdom population of 55 million, the following estimates can be calculated:

United Kingdom emissions (Gross)

	(Thousand tonnes)	Per capita kg
Agricultural methane	1·16	21·1
Non-agricultural methane	2·29	41·6
	(Million tonnes)	tonnes
CO_2 from industrial usage	101	1·840
CO_2 from agricultural usage[1]	1	0·018

Valleys Programme

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the expenditure to date under the valleys programme, by category of expenditure and by year, in constant prices, for the Cynon Valley borough council area, the Taff Ely council area and the Rhymney Valley council area.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not available except at disproportionate cost.

South Glamorgan TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council concerning the expenditure undertaken to adopt, launch, promote and subsequently abandon its logo and title of ETCETERA; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council concerning the location of its new headquarters office.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Wentloog Lagoon

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will place a copy in the Library of the letter written to the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales on Friday, 6 December, concerning the construction of the Wentloog lagoon for wading birds.

Mr. David Hunt: Correspondence between the Countryside Council and my Department on the Wentloog lagoon has been at officer level.

Cardiff Bay Development

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will agree a code of conduct with the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation limiting the use of advertising incorporating the proposed barrage during the passage of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill.

Mr. David Hunt: The Cardiff Bay development corporation observes the spirit of the conventions governing propriety and value for money which apply to all Government Departments.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning progress on the training centre of excellence.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy for the report from Mr. Roy Stoner, on the possible groundwater rise side-effects of the proposed Cardiff Bay barrage to be completed and published before the commencement of the select committee proceedings on the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill.

Mr. David Hunt: Mr. Stoner's advice to me following the consultation on the Hydrotechnica report will form part of the advice submitted to me before I make my decision. I shall be publishing my decision, together with the factors I have taken into account, as soon after the end of the consultation period as is consistent with proper consideration for all of the issues raised.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will instruct Mr. Roy Stoner to include in his report on the side-effects of the groundwater rise expected to be caused by the proposed Cardiff bay barrage, the expected effects of the barrage on sports grounds, gardens and allotments.

Mr. David Hunt: Mr. Stoner's terms of reference include advising me on representations made during the three months' consultation period. Since these include the issue of protection for open ground such as sports grounds, gardens and allotments, I would expect him to include this issue in his advice.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his written answer of 5 November, Official Report, columns 53-54, if he will give for 1990-91 a breakdown of the total number of non-profit-making sports clubs awarded discretionary rate relief (a) after submitting an application, (b) without submitting an application and (c) which applied for discretionary rate relief and were denied such relief.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Discretionary rate relief was awarded by Welsh local authorities in 1990-91 to non-profit making clubs, including sporting organisations, as follows:

Number of clubs awarded discretionary rate relief

Category	Number
(a) After submitting an application	620
(b) Without submitting an application	53
(c) Applied but not awarded relief	83

Sewage Treatment Works, Llanfaes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those organisations, individuals, companies and parties that contacted him requesting that he call in a planning application for a sewage treatment works at Llanfaes, Ynys Mon; and how he communicated his decision to those listed, giving dates in all cases.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is as follows:

Person/organisation requesting call-in and date of letter	Contact date	Date of letter informing decision not to call-in application
Mr. Joe Wilson MEP	21 October 1991	8 November 1991
Ms. G. Robson	n/a	11 November 1991

Teacher Training

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students were recruited to courses of initial teacher training in Wales in 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A survey undertaken by the Department shows that 2,195 students entered courses of initial teacher training in Wales in October 1991, an increase of nearly 28 per cent. over 1990. Intakes to primary training courses were almost 26 per cent. higher than last year and for secondary courses the increase was over 32 per cent. The figures for secondary teacher training are particularly encouraging as many of these student teachers are pursuing courses in the shortage areas, including Welsh.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales have been summonsed because of poll tax arrears in Wales to the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 5 December 1991]: The total number of summonses issued by Welsh courts for the period 1 April 1990 to 30 September 1991 was 442,988.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the costs of legal proceedings involving poll tax to the present.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 5 December 1991]: For the period 1 April 1990 to 30 September 1991, the estimated cost of legal proceedings to enforce the community charge through the magistrates courts in Wales was £315,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consult the Coalition for Badgers before finalising his criteria for the issue of licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Yes.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those persons and organisations he has consulted in considering the criteria under which section 4 licences may be issued under the Badgers Act 1991; and if he will publish a summary of the views each interest presented to him.

Mr. Maclean: The consultation exercise on licensing under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 has not yet taken place; the consultation document is to be issued shortly. It is the standard procedure in such consultations to make available to the public all responses received unless specifically requested not to do so by the respondent.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that any licences issued under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 take into acount the rules of the National Working Terrier Federation on interference with badger setts.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 12 December, Official Report, column 550.

Fish Quotas

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to announce sectoral fish quotas allocations earlier in the calendar year in 1992 than in previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Yes.

Fruit and Vegetables

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the gross production figures for the major fruit and vegetables in the United Kingdom in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Gummer: The latest estimates of the gross production ('000 tonnes) of the major fruit and vegetables in the 1990-91 and 1991-92 crop years is as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92 (forecast)
Cabbages	665·8	672·6
Carrots	550·1	600·7
Cauliflowers	308·5	365·4
Lettuces	252·1	269·4
Peas	318·2	314·0
Tomatoes	138·8	141·8
Apples	310·5	333·6
Pears	36·7	39·1
Raspberries	19·2	17·9
Strawberries	52·3	52·9

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figures for the amount of each different type of fruit and vegetable which was withdrawn from the market in the United Kingdom, indicating in each case how much was (a) delivered to institutions such as schools and prisons, (b) delivered to charitable organisations, (c) ploughed into the ground, (d) used as animal feed, (e) processed into fruit juice or alcohol and (f) put to other uses, specifying the use, in (i) 1990 and (ii) 1991; and how much was spent on these withdrawals in the United Kingdom and EC.

Mr. Gummer: These arrangements are an operational matter for the chief executive of the Intervention Board executive agency, who will write to the hon. Member.

EC Agriculture Expenditure

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken by the Agriculture Council and the EC Commission on the containment of agricultural spending within the budget of 1991.

Mr. Curry: The Council at this year's price fixing agreed a number of measures to reduce the level of EC expenditure on agricultural support. These included price cuts, a 2 per cent. cut in milk quotas and changes to the beef and butter intervention arrangements. The Commission took action under its management powers in a number of sectors. Expenditure on agricultural support in 1991 is now expected to be some £350 million below the level provided for in the EC budget.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what adjustments have been made to the budget of agricultural spending by the EC in 1991 to take account of inflation; and if he will further state the basis on which the rate of inflation is calculated and the responsibility for making such assessments.

Mr. Curry: No changes were made to the provision for expenditure on the common agricultural policy in the 1991 EC budget.

Community expenditure on agricultural market support is legally constrained by the agricultural guideline which is adjusted each year to take account of 74 per cent. of the rate of growth of Community GNP and of inflation. The level of EC GNP, the general GNP deflator and the level of the guideline are calculated each year by the Commission on the basis of information supplied by the member states.

Set-aside Scheme

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which crops were proposed for each acre of agreed set-aside land for each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Detailed information on base year crops, cropping patterns in the year prior to the entry of land into set-aside and the green cover crops sown on fallowed set-aside land is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers in England and Wales have applied for the set-aside scheme for 1991-92; how many hectares of land are involved; what was the total expenditure for set-aside schemes for each year since 1988; how many farmers benefited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is shown in the table:

Applications for the 4th year (1991-92) of the set-aside scheme

	Number of applications[2] received	Hectares set-aside
England	673	24,396·98
Wales	6	177·02

Applications for the temporary one-year set-aside scheme (1991-92)

	Number of applications[2] received	Hectares set-aside[1]
England	742	12,651·75
Wales	7	94·81

[1] Approved to date.
[2] The figures shown in the table relate to applications received, they are provisional and liable to adjustment in the light of eligibility and withdrawals.

Small Cetaceans

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what work is being undertaken by his Department to assess the level of by-catch of small cetaceans in United Kingdom fisheries; and what measures are being taken to reduce this level.

Mr. Gummer: A national scheme to monitor accidental catches by fishermen of marine mammals will commence early next year. Fishermen will be asked to report details of such catches to fishery officers. The Fisheries Departments will be writing to all major fishery organisations, which have already been consulted about the scheme, to confirm the details. Special forms and identification booklets will be provided. The recent EC agreement to restrict the length of drift nets to 2·5 km should help to reduce the accidental catches of small cetaceans.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of expenditure in 1990-91 and 1991-92 by the Intervention Board executive agency and the Agriculture Departments on market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 28 November, Official Report, c. 652]: Details of the outturn for 1990-91 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1991-92 in relation to market regulation are given in the table.

	1990-91 (Actual outturn)	1991-92 (Forecast outturn)
Expenditure by the Intervention Board executive agency
Cereals	120·8	197·3
Oilseeds	236·4	250·6
Sugar	110·7	111·1
Beef and Veal	357·6	341·0
Sheepmeat	126·5	154·7
Pigmeat	6·6	3·5
Milk products	203·9	165·9
Processed goods	44·6	54·6
Others	55·2	54·4
Total	1,262·3	1,324·1
Expenditure by the Agricultural Departments
Repayments of cereals levies	19·2	1·7
Suckler cow premium scheme	73·7	70·4
Annual premium on ewes	201·8	276·1
Payments to producers giving up some milk production	59·6	54·5
Beef special premium scheme (Northern Ireland)	6·2	7·3
Orchard grubbing scheme	—	1·5
Total	360·5	411·7
Grand total	1,622·8	1,735·8

Some of the expenditure shown benefits consumers and trade interests rather than United Kingdom producers.

The figures for the Intervention Board executive agency are net of various receipts treated as negative expenditure. Receipts from levies on the production and storage of sugar and isoglucose and on third country exports, which are regarded as Community own resources, are excluded.

Of the estimated outturn for 1991-92, £1,664 million is expected to be offset by receipts from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund including those in respect of financing intervention buying and the set-aside scheme; in 1990-91, the comparable figure was £1,584 million. However, because the United Kingdom is a net contributor to the European Community budget, the whole of this expenditure is attributable to the Exchequer. Receipts from the European Community do not always relate to expenditure in the period.

This information, coupled with my previous answer which focused on grants and subsidies, provides full details of MAFF expenditure on market regulation under the CAP and agricultural grants and subsidies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

16. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received over the position of pensioners during the winter months.

Miss Widdecombe: We have received representations from various pensioner groups, and others, over the position of pensioners during the winter months. In June my right hon. Friend the Minister of State announced major improvements to the cold weather payments scheme, which include fast automatic payments, forecasts made by the Meteorological Office which can anticipate periods of very cold weather, and the removal of the old capital rule. These improvements will directly benefit many pensioners this winter.

21. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he next plans to meet the Pensioners Association in Wales to discuss additional assistance for the winter months.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to meet the Pensioners Association in Wales. In June my right hon. Friend the Minister of State announced major improvements to the cold weather payments scheme, which include fast automatic payments, forecasts made by the Meteorological Office which can anticipate periods of very cold weather, and the removal of the old capital rule. These improvements will directly benefit many pensioners this winter.

Child Benefit

17. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of British families have only one child; and how much such families receive in child benefit per week.

Mr. Jack: Over 40 per cent. of families have only one child eligible for child benefit. They currently receive £9·25 a week which will increase to £9·65 from next April, that is, equivalent to £500 a year tax free. For families paying standard rate tax and national insurance contributions this would be equivalent to additional gross earnings of £750.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year costs of raising child benefit to £9·55 (i) for 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in linked means-tested and national insurance benefits, for Great Britain.

Mr. Jack: The rates of child benefit from April 1991 were £8·25 for the eldest eligible child and £7·25 for each other child, and these rates increased to £9·25 and £7·50 from October. On the basis of our latest estimates, the gross cost of increasing child benefit from those rates to £9·55 for each child throughout 1991-92 would be about £895 million. If the October rates had applied throughout 1991-92, the cost would reduce to around £685 million. The gross full-year cost in 1992-93 of paying £9·55 for all children instead of the rates of £9·65 and £7·80 which will be in payment from April 1992, would be about £465 million.

25. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of child benefit.

Mr. Jack: Child benefit is, and will remain, a strong element in our policies for family support. We are committed to index-link child benefit for future years.

Income Support

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning the level of income support for people living in residential care.

Miss Widdecombe: We have recently received a small number of representations about the proposed April 1992 increases, which have generally been welcomed.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received following the computerisation of claims for income support; what information he has on the error rate in computerised assessments and on the number of checks by supervisors of the assessments of claims; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Family Credit

18. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the highest level of net earnings that a married man with two children can have and still qualify for family credit.

Mr. Jack: In the case of the family type my hon. Friend describes, the answer is £196, but both children would have to be aged 18 and still at school. The figure will be £209 when the benefit rates are increased next April.

19. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents are currently in receipt of family credit.

Mr. Jack: The latest available information is for April 1991, when there were 131,000 lone parent families in receipt of family credit, out of a total caseload at that time of 341,000.

27. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many family credit awards have been made since this benefit was first introduced.

Mr. Jack: Since April 1988, when the scheme started, over 2·4 million awards have been made.

Child Support Act

22. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to consult on the regulations connected with the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Jack: On 1 November a consultation document setting out the proposed contents of the child support regulations was issued to interested organisations and made available to hon. Members. The formal consultation period ends today. The regulations concerning child support appeal tribunals and child support commissioners will be referred to the Council on Tribunals.

Occupational Pension Funds

23. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the need to review the legal basis of occupational pension funds.

Mr. Newton: Occupational pension schemes are mostly administered under trust law. In 1988 the Occupational Pensions Board recommended that trust law should continue as the legal basis of the law relating to occupational pension schemes. I have received representations in the last few days about various aspects of the legal basis of occupational pension funds.

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to bring into force regulations restricting company pension funds from investing more than a specified proportion of their assets in their own company.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 12 December at cols. 527-28.

Attendance Allowance

24. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people currently receive attendance allowance; and how many did in 1978-79.

Mr. Scott: The latest estimate is that, on average, 975,000 people will receive attendance allowance at any one time in 1991-92, compared to 265,000 in 1978-79.

Cold Weather Payments

26. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received about the changes to the cold weather payments scheme announced last month.

Mr. Scott: I have received representations from a variety of organisations about the changes to the cold weather payments scheme. The improved scheme meets the needs of those groups of people who are most at risk from very cold weather and also makes the most effective use of public resources.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the amount of heat that can be purchased for the allowance to people who qualify under the cold weather payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The amount of heat that could be purchased by a cold weather payment will vary depending on the type, and condition, of the heating system in use.

Social Fund

28. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were granted loans from the social fund from April to September 1991; and how many have been refused loans during that period on grounds which included an assumption that they lacked resources to ensure that repayment would be made.

Mr. Scott: Nearly 730,000 loans have been awarded from the social fund between April and October 1991. In the same period just under 19,900, or 1·7 per cent. of applications were refused due to the applicant's inability to repay.

Residential Homes

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received about the level of benefits for people in residential care and nursing homes.

Miss Widdecombe: I have recently received a small number of representations about the proposed April 1992 increases, which have generally been welcomed.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have benefited from real increases in the income support limits for those in residential care and nursing homes over the last three years.

Miss Widdecombe: Over the past three years there have been four increases in the income support limits for people in residential care and nursing homes. Further increases, well above inflation in most cases, are proposed from April 1992. Some 265,000 income support recipients are expected to benefit from these increases.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the extra help which will be available to people in residential care homes from April 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: We have recently received a small number of representations about the proposed April 1992 increases which have generally been welcomed.

SERPS

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plan to modify the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for community care grant have been received in each of the Liverpool offices.

Mr. Scott: The total numbers of applications for community care grants received by each of the Liverpool offices for the year to date up to the end of October are:

	Total
Knowsley	4,777
Liverpool Central	3,541
Liverpool North	3,832
Liverpool South	5,276
Sefton	4,027

Disablement Benefits

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what improvements he plans to make in benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: From April next year we are introducing two new benefits for disabled people. Disability living allowance which will bring extra cash help of at least £11·55 per week to around 300,000 people with the extra costs of their disability; and disability working allowance which will give help for the first time to up to 50,000 disabled people who wish to work, but have a limited earning capacity, by topping up their earnings. As well as these significant improvements we are also making other changes to benefits for disabled people: the residence conditions for severe disablement allowance will be aligned with those for attendance allowance and disability living allowance, making it easier for people coming to or returning to this country to qualify; families with children under 16 who will receive disability living allowance for care costs will, if the child has to go into hospital, keep that help for up to 12 weeks instead of four as under attendance allowance currently; and the earnings limit for invalid care allowance will be increased from £30 to £40.

Local Offices

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will issue guidelines to local benefit offices to simplify procedures for claiming benefits, especially for individuals over the age of 60 years who are claiming benefits for the first time.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pregnant Girls (Severe Hardship)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pregnant girls aged 16 and under 18 years claimed income support on grounds of severe hardship in the latest 12 months for which figures are available; and how many were successful.

Mr. Jack: From December 1990 to November 1991 2,495 pregnant girls aged 16 and 17 claimed income support on grounds of severe hardship; of these less than one fifth of the claims were unsuccessful.

Source: Severe Hardship Claims Unit records.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to publicise the change in regulations bringing the residence qualifications for severe disablement allowance into line with those for comparable benefits.

Mr. Scott: We shall bring the amending regulations before the House shortly. We are currently considering what steps will be necessary to draw those amendments to the attention of people who may be affected.

Divorce

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the law relating to the division of occupation pension benefits on divorce.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no such plans at present.

Carers Premium

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to pay the carers premium on the basis of caring responsibilities regardless of age.

Miss Widdecombe: The carer premium was introduced in October 1990 in the relevant income-related benefits on top of all other premiums, primarily to provide extra benefit to people of working age who are unable to work or whose employment is restricted because they care for a severely disabled person. It goes to carers who can establish entitlement to invalid care allowance.

A person over pension age who commences caring for another cannot establish entitlement to invalid care allowance. A person who has established entitlement to invalid care allowance and the carer premium before reaching pension age retains the carer premium beyond pension age, in recognition of the limitations on employment caused by the caring role. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Self-investment

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the report commissioned by his Department by Ernst and Young into the degree of self-investment by companies.

Miss Widdecombe: I am arranging for copies of the Ernst and Young report on self-investment to be placed in the Library.

Spastics Society

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received a copy of the Spastics Society's 1991 annual review, entitled "Progress in Partnership".

Mr. Scott: We have recently received a copy of the document which we shall read with interest.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for 1991-92 the numbers paying national insurance contributions in Great Britain, distinguishing (a) between the different classes of contribution and between employees and employers.

Mr. Jack: The information in respect of class 1, class 2 and class 4 contributions is given in the table.

Class of contribution	Estimated average weekly numbers million
Class 1 (employees)	18·75
Class 1 (employers)	[1]1·40
Class 2 (self employed)	2·25
Class 4 (self employed)	[2]2·00

[1]The latest available information is for 1990-91.
[2]Class 4 contributors also paying class 2 contributions.

In addition, some 250,000 individuals are expected to pay class 3 voluntary contributions at some point in the year, many of whom will also be paying another class of contribution.

Hospital Visits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received since 1988 concerning provision of help towards the cost of visits to hospital for families not on income support, and on the difficulties of families on income support obtaining community care grants towards hospital visits; what plans he has to assist families who are finding it difficult to travel to hospital to visit their relatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Since 1988 we have received various representations concerning help with the cost of visiting people who are ill. The hospital travel costs scheme run by the Department of Health provides help for patients to attend hospital. Community care grants from the social fund may be available to help someone in receipt of income support visit a person who is ill. These arrangements are designed to ensure that help is targeted on the most needy families.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the total amount of income support, or supplementary benefit, paid out each year to homeless families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, for each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

Widow's Pension

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state for each year since 1979 the value of widow's pension for a widow aged 50 when her husband died, as a percentage of the index of average earnings.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table.

Table

A Date	B Average Weekly Earnings	C Standard Rate of Basic Widows Pension	D Percentage C to B
November 1979	114·10	23·30	20·4
November 1980	135·10	27·15	20·1
November 1981	149·50	29·60	19·8
November 1982	160·60	32·85	20·5
November 1983	175·30	34·05	19·4
November 1984	187·40	35·80	19·1
November 1985	199·50	38·30	19·2
July 1986	210·90	38·70	18·3
April 1987	224·00	39·50	17·6
April 1988	245·80	41·15 (26·75)	16·7 (10·9)
April 1989	269·50	43·60 (28·34)	16·2 (10·5)
April 1990	295·60	46·90 (30·49)	15·9 (10·3)
April 1991	320·60	52·00 (33·80)	16·2 (10·5)

Note:
Column A—Uprating Date.
Column B—Average weekly earnings are taken from the New Earnings Survey and are for full-time adult males in April of each year.
Column C—Standard rate of Widows Pension—age 50 (age 55 after April 1988) at husband's death. The figures in brackets show the rate paid to a widow age 50 at the time of her husband's death (after April 1988).

Full-time Work

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department has carried out into the effect of the proposed change in the definition of full-time work from 24 hours to 16 hours; and if he will state (a) the number of families where the head of the household works between 16 and 24 hours a week who are likely to gain from this proposal and (b) the number of families where the head of the household works from 16 to 24 hours a week where the family will lose as a result of the proposed change.

Mr. Jack: Estimates of the effects of the change in the hours rules in income support and family credit are based on a model derived from research using family expenditure survey data carried out for the Department of Social Security by the Institute of Fiscal Studies.

We estimate that 65,000 families where a parent is currently working between 16 and 24 hours will be able to gain from the extension of the family credit scheme. No one who is working between 16 and 24 hours and is receiving income support at the time of the change next April should lose, because they will either be able to move on to family credit and be better off, or continue to receive income support.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families on income support who currently receive help towards their mortgage costs will be removed from the income support scheme entirely as a result of the proposed change in the definition of full-time work from 24 hours to 16 hours; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: No family working 16 or more hours a week up to April 1992 will be removed from income support as a result of the change in the remunerative work rule. We expect about 5,000 families with mortgages to move off income support on to family credit and be better off, even after paying their mortgages. All other families will be able to remain on income support and continue to receive help with their mortgages exactly as before.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the entitlement to housing benefit of a single person aged 18 to 24 years with an income of £2,845 who has taken a room at £40 per week.

Miss Widdecombe: The housing benefit entitlement of a single person aged 18 to 24 years not entitled to any premiums, with an income of £2,845 and a rent liability of £40 would be £28·20. This calculation is based on the assumption that the income quoted is net earnings to which a disregard of £5 per week is appropriate. It also assumes that the amount of rent for which the person is liable is fully eligible for housing benefit and is not considered to be unreasonably expensive by the local authority.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is in percentage terms the value of the state retirement pension for single people and couples, in relation to the index of average earnings, for each year since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Basic retirement pension is not a complete/relevant indicator of pensioners' well-being. What counts is their total income from all sources. Between 1979 and 1988 pensioners' average net incomes rose by 34 per cent. in real terms. However, the information requested is given in the tables.

Value, in percentage terms, of basic state retirement pension for a single person in relation to average earnings[1].

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each year since 1979, what amount is payable under the industrial injuries and disablement scheme for a worker injured in the course of his employment who becomes 10 per cent. disabled for life.

Mr. Scott: The rates of disablement gratuities and pensions since 1979 are in the table. In addition reduced earnings allowance—formerly special hardship allowance—might have been payable for industrial accidents/diseases occurring prior to 1 October 1990.

For awards from:	Gratuity £	Weekly pension - (for pneumoconiosis, byssinosis or diffuse mesothelioma cases) £
15 November 1978 to 13 November 1979	1,166·00	3·19
14 November 1979 to 25 November 1980	1,391·50	3·80
26 November 1980 to 24 November 1981	1,622·50	4·45

Youth Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received about the difficulties of placing 16 and 17-year-olds on youth training schemes and the consequent difficulties they face in claiming income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) on 9 December at columns 353-54.

SCOTLAND

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why unreprocessed highly radioactive spent nuclear fuel is being put in dry storage at Torness and Hunterston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Any firm proposal that spent AGR fuel be put in dry storage on Scottish Nuclear Ltd's generating sites would require the Secretary of State's consent in terms of section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989. No application for such consent has been submitted.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been made at the GATT talks regarding the textile industries of Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The Government's aims in the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations take account of the interests of the textile industry in Scotland and elsewhere in the United Kingdom and of the interests of the economy as a whole.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many landowners in Scotland are currently receiving annual payments under the set-aside scheme of (a) between £5,000 and £9,999, (b) between £10,000 and £19,999, (c) between £20,000 and £29,999, (d) between £30,000 and £39,999, (e) between £40,000 and £49,999, (f) between £50,000 and £59,999, (g) between £60,000 and £69,999 and (h) £70,000 and over.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 December 1991]: For set-aside participants who joined in the first two years the number of set-aside agreements recorded centrally in Scotland involving annual payments within the bands given is as follows:

Annual payment	Number of agreements
(a) £ 5,000-£ 9,999	108
(b) £10,000-£19,999	55
(c) £20,000-£29,999	24
(d) £30,000-£39,999	11
(e) £40,000-£49,999	2
(f) £50,000-£59,999	3
(g) £60,000-£69,999	Nil
(h) £70,000 and over	1

A further 317 agreements involved sums of less than £5,000. These figures include payments to both landowners and tenants. Information on payments to landowners alone and to participants who joined in the third year of the scheme is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Plutonium

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instigate an inquiry to ascertain the extent of the spread of plutonium traces from Sellafield in Cumbria along the west coast of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 December 1991]: The levels of radioactivity in the Scottish marine environment are monitored regularly on behalf of the Secretary of State by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's directorate of fisheries research, and the programme includes samples from the west coast.

The results are published annually in reports in the series "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters in the British Isles" and these are in the Library. They confirm that the levels of artificial radionuclides including plutonium in samples from Scottish waters are very low and well within the limits based on the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

Training Schemes

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) persons aged 16 years and (b) persons aged 17 years have been on youth training schemes in every year since youth training started in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 27 November 1991]: The percentage of (a) persons aged 16 years and (b) persons aged 17 years who have been on youth training schemes in every year since youth training started in Scotland is set out in the table.

Percentage of Scottish 16 and 17 year olds on Youth Training schemes[1]

Year	Age 16[2]	Age 17[3]
Autumn 1982[3]	16·5	11·7
1983[3]	16·1	11·1
1984	18·0	12·1
1985[4]	23·0	16·5
1986	20·8	16·4
1987	16·5	19·7
1988	16·2	22·0
January 1989	22·0	19·2
1990	19·9	17·3

[1] The figures relate to the numbers in training at a point in time during the year not to the total numbers who took part in a training programme in the course of a year. There is no available data on total participants.

[2] Age at the end of December up to 1988 and age at the end of August for 1989 and 1990.

[4] December 1985 extimate based on Youth Training figures for October 1985 and January 1986.

TRANSPORT

Cornelis Johanna BM 204

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to pay compensation to the owners of Cornelis Johanna BM 204 for the defective test carried out by his Department in 1977; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Matters relating to the surveys of this vessel under the Fishing Vessels (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975, including the test carried out in 1977, have been referred to the Treasury solicitor for advice.

Metropolitan Passenger Transport Authorities

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the case for restoring the precepting status of the six metropolitan passenger transport authorities.

Mr. Freeman: I met a delegation from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 1 July to discuss this.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will restore the precepting powers to the six metropolitan passenger transport authorities.

Mr. Freeman: I am considering the representations which I have received on this subject.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from (a) the six metropolitan passenger transport authorities and (b) others about their change in status from precepting to levying authorities.

Mr. Freeman: I have received a number of representations from the metropolitan county passenger transport authorities, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of Greater Manchester Authorities and Members with constituency interests in PTA areas.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has made any assessment of the likely effect of seismic disturbance on the operation of the channel tunnel; and what discussions have taken place with the channel tunnel safety authority on this subject.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that Eurotunnel is currently carrying out a programme of studies, which has been agreed by a group of seismic experts appointed by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority and Eurotunnel, to satisfy the safety authority that the Eurotunnel design criterion for the tunnel affords an appropriate level of assurance against seismic risk. The studies are examining whether passengers can be evacuated safely and within a reasonable period in the event of an earthquake equivalent to the most serious ever known in the area. These studies should be complete by February 1992.

InterCity (Faults)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for InterCity (a) the number of faults which resulted in delays of 30 minutes or more and (b) the number of cancellations in each of the last two years, broken down by service area, date and cause where available.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that there have been the following delays and cancellations on InterCity services:

	Number of trains delayed over 30 minutes (percentage)				Number of trains cancelled (percentage)
	1990-91		1990-91 (to 31 October 1991)		1990-91		1991-92 (to 31 October 1991)
Region		per cent.		per cent.		per cent.		per cent.
WCML	4,947	(7·7)	2,776	(7·9)	2,513	(3·9)	523	(1·5)

CROSS COUNTRY	3,118	(8·1)	1,341	(6·4)	711	(1·8)	364	(1·7)
GWML	1,316	(2·8)	578	(2·2)	1,081	(2·3)	535	(2·0)
GATWICK EXPRESS	301	(0·7)	149	(0·6)	1,438	(3·3)	1,592	(6·5)
ECML	3,268	(9·2)	1,384	(6·6)	904	(2·5)	424	(2·0)
ANGLIA	960	(5·9)	310	(3·6)	616	(3·8)	119	(1·4)

The Department does not hold data on the date and cause of delays and cancellations. These are management matters for British Rail.

THE ARTS

Exhibition, Upper Waiting Hall

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister for the Arts if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to an exhibition by the Yorkshire mining museum, entitled "Out of the Pits", to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Renton: Yes. I am glad to sponsor the "Out of the Pits" exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what surveys have been made of the cost effectiveness of the Civil Service college.

Mr. Renton: This is an operational matter for the Civil Service college, and I have asked the chief executive to reply directly to the hon. Member.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list, in percentage terms, the number of disabled people employed in each Department of State.

Mr. Renton: Information is collected centrally only on the employment in the civil service of people registered as disabled. There are more who have chosen not to register.

The percentage of people registered as disabled employed in each Department of State at 1 June 1990, the latest date for which complete figures are available, was:

There are also over 400 people working in Departments and agencies under the Department of Employment's sheltered placement scheme.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what trials, experiments or other modes of operation which would deviate from normal operational practice are included in the proposal by Nuclear Electric to restart one of the reactors at Trawsfynydd power station for a period of six months; and what revision to the temperature of operation of each of the reactor core, fuel, coolant gas and reactor presure vessel shell is included in the proposed operations;

(2) if he will make a statement about his current assessment of the frequency probability of failure incidents in the reactor pressure vessels deployed at each of the Magnox nuclear power stations;

(3) what effect delays in the reactor pressure vessel surveying programme at Trawsfynydd and other Magnox nuclear power stations have had on the timing of Nuclear Electric's preparation and submission of a revised safety case to the nuclear installations inspectorate;

(4) on what date Nuclear Electric submitted a revised nuclear safety case for the continued operation of each of the Magnox power stations to the nuclear installations inspectorate; and what materials data, determined from the recent inspections of the reactor pressure vessel at Trawsfynydd and other Magnox nuclear power stations, are included in the revised safety case;

(5) if he will make a statement on the progress of the reactor pressure vessel inspection and surveying programmes currently under way at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station; and if physical obstacles encountered during these inspections have now been overcome.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The details of any operational changes proposed in the revised safety case for a return to power at Trawsfynydd are a matter for Nuclear Electric plc. The assessment of the safety case is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. The NII will not consent to the restart of the station until it is convinced that it is safe to do so.

In the light of developments at Trawsfynydd, NE has reviewed the position at its four other Magnox stations with steel pressure vessels, and following certain operational changes the NII has agreed to their continued operation up to the end of 1991. Full safety cases to enable the stations to operate beyond the end of the year were submitted to the NII on 11 September and are currently under consideration. I understand that the NII propose's to make an announcement by the end of this month.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on details of the temperature excursion that occurred in reactor 1 at Bradwell nuclear power station on 17 June 1991; what caused the increase in temperature; and whether he has been informed of any disciplinary action by Nuclear Electric as a result of this incident;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the full report of the Nuclear Electric board of inquiry into the temperature excursion incident at Bradwell nuclear power station on 17 June 1991, and the report of the nuclear installations inspectorate; and if he will also place in the Library details of any equipment modifications and revisions to management procedures that have been implemented as a result of the incident.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand from the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate that, during the return to service of Bradwell's reactor 1 on 17 June 1991, it was observed that the gas temperature limit in a small area of the reactor core was exceeded by 30 deg C. The temperature deviation was readily brought back within limits by control rod insertion. This incident has been classified at level 2 on the international nuclear event scale—that is, a technical incident or anomaly not directly affecting plant safety.

I am advised by Nuclear Electric plc that incident inquiries are undertaken on a confidential basis in order to encourage the maximum disclosure of information. The details of such investigations are not, therefore, published. The conclusions and actions arising are, however, provided to the regulatory authorities.

Coal Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, by year for the last four years and for the current year to date, the tonnages of coal imported into the United Kingdom, showing in his answer (a) the port the coal was unloaded at and (b) the country of origin of the coal.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Breakdowns of coal imports by port of entry, and by country of origin, for the periods requested, are as follows:

[1] Some imports previously recorded by Customs and Excise as originating in the Netherlands have been re-allocated to the other countries indicated or, where revised country of origin data is not available, included in the residual entry, "Others". This re-allocation has been carried out for 1991 and estimates of such imports previously classified to the Netherlands have been included for 1990. Figures for earlier years have not been re-allocated to individual countries.

Non-fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what sum was received by Nuclear Electric from the non-fossil fuel levy and from the electricity supply industry in the first six months of 1991-92 and in the year 1990-91;

(2) what proportion of (a) the income received by Nuclear Electric and (b) the cost of providing electricity by Nuclear Electric in 1990-91 was provided from the non-fossil fuel levy;

(3) what was the total value of the non-fossil fuel levy in the first six months of 1991-92 and in the full year 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Office of Electricity Regulation estimates that total receipts for the fossil fuel levy in 1990-91 were £1,175 million. OFFER's estimate of receipts for 1991-92 will be published in due course. Levy receipts are shared between the companies which have contracts under the qualifying arrangements for the various non-fossil fuel obligation orders, in accordance with the terms of those contracts. The details of those contracts, and hence the share of the levy due to individual companies, are commercially confidential.

Offshore Oil Wells

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the number of (a) United Kingdom offshore oil wells currently in production and (b) the number which were in production 10 years ago.

Mr. Moynihan: The number of wells in the United Kingdom continental shelf from which oil was produced during October 1991 was 634. The corresponding figure for October 1981 was 286.

Magnox Nuclear Stations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the life expectancy of the Magnox stations currently operated by Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The lifetimes of Nuclear Electric's Magnox stations are a commercial matter for the company. On 9 November 1989, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced to the House at column 1176 that it should be possible, subject to the views of the nuclear installations inspectorate, for the lifetime of at least some of the Magnox stations to be extended. It remains the Government's policy that capital approval will be given for such projects if a suitable safety and economic case can be made.

EC Competence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement outlining the areas of his responsibility in which the EC will have competence following the implementation of agreements at Maastricht.

Mr. Wakeham: The agreements reached at Maastricht will not extend the competence of the EC in areas directly related to energy.

Solar Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to encourage research and development into and the manufacture of commercial photovoltaic cell-based solar energy devices in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department is undertaking a two-year programme to assess the potential and opportunities for photovoltaic electricity generation in the United Kingdom, to identify any barriers to its use and to seek methods to overcome them.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Passes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members have (a) one full researcher pass, (b) more than one full researcher pass, (c) a place on the waiting list for a researcher pass and (d) a place on the waiting list and are Front Bench spokespersons.

Mr. MacGregor: The latest Pass Office records show that:

(a) 168 hon. Members have one full researcher's pass;
(b) 2 hon. Members have two full researcher's passes;
(c) 11 hon. Members are on the waiting list for a full researcher's pass;
(d) 4 Front Bench spokespersons are on the waiting list for a full researcher's pass;
58 Members have places on the Research Assistant's list which are currently not filled.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Dogs

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of incidents which have occurred in which dogs suspected to have been covered by the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 have actually been found to be or to be likely to be cross-breeds and therefore excluded from the provisions of the Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 3 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991, which creates criminal offences relating to dogs that are dangerously out of control in a public place, already applies to any dog, whether or not it is a cross-breed.

The fact that a dog is a cross-breed of one of those types of fighting dog specially controlled by section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 does not mean that it is necessarily excluded from those controls. Section 1 currently applies to any dog of the type known as the pit bull terrier, the Japanese tosa, the dogo Argentino and fila Braziliero. A cross-breed of any of these types of dog is also subject to the special controls of section 1 if it has the characteristics of these types of dogs. Ultimately it will be for the courts to decide in each case whether a particular dog is of the type covered by section 1 of the Act. In any proceedings where it is alleged by the prosecution that a dog is one to which section 1 applies, the onus is on the accused to prove the contrary.

Central records are not kept of incidents in which dogs are involved but which do not result in prosecutions. Statistics for prosecutions under section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 are not yet available, but they will not, in any case, specify whether the dog involved was alleged to have been a cross-breed.

Thorn Cross

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange to the young offenders institution at Thorn Cross during September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty-six.

RSPCA (Exhibition)

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 23 March to Friday 27 March 1992.

Maastricht

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement outlining the areas of his responsibility in which the EC will have competence following the implementation of agreements at Maastricht.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Community already has competence in relation to freedom of movement and residence of Community nationals and under the single market provisions of the treaty of Rome to aspects of certain other of my responsibilities, including some aspects of transborder data flow and the illicit drugs trade. Implementation of the Maastricht agreement will add the common list of countries whose nationals must be in possession of a visa when crossing the community's external borders; measures related to a uniform format for visas; measures on civil protection; and aspects of drug dependence.

LEAs (Funding)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the allocation to local education authorities for 1992-93 of section 11 funding.

Mrs. Rumbold: We hope to announce the allocation to education authorities and others very shortly.

Animal Experiments

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce any further appointments to the Animal Procedures Committee.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am pleased to be able to announce the appointment to the Animal Procedures Committee with effect from 1 January 1992 of Dr. A. J. Suckling, chief scientific officer of the RSPCA. I am grateful to Dr. Suckling for agreeing to serve on this committee.

Mr. George Capelo

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter sent to him on 21 August 1991 by the hon. Member for East Lothian concerning Mr. George Capelo.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An investigation is continuing into Mr. Capelo's complaint about delays at immigration control at Edinburgh and Heathrow airports. The investigation is now nearing completion and I will write to the hon. Member with the outcome early in the new year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Britain has any plans to withdraw landing rights from the airline of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no such plans.

Croatia and Slovenia

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the alleged massacre of civilians at Dalj on 1 August 1991, Lovinac on 13 August 1991, Banija on 16 August 1991, and near Podravska Slatina on 13 September 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are investigating these incidents, and I shall report as soon as possible.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of civilian and Red Cross ambulances that have been destroyed by the action of Serbian forces in Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no reliable information on the number of ambulances destroyed by the Serbian forces in Croatia.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of civilians who have been killed during the fighting in Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Conflicting claims and an absence of reliable independent sources mean that it is difficult to give precise figures for casualties in Croatia. Most estimates fall between 5,000 and 10,000 deaths.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the number of hospitals, churches and cultural monuments which have been damaged or destroyed by federal army action in Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no reliable figures for the number of hospitals, churches and cultural monuments damaged or destroyed by Yugoslav federal army action in Croatia.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the number of Red Cross medical personnel missing in Croatia; and what does he know of their fate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 December 1991, no ICRC personnel were missing in Croatia. We have no reliable information on the number of local Croatian Red Cross personnel missing.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Yugoslavian authorities about the repeated shelling of Dubrovnik.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have publicly and strongly condemned the Yugoslav federal army's aggression against Dubrovnik, a city of no military significance. And at our initiative, a group of ambassadors have made strong representations to the Ministry of Defence in Belgrade.

EC Social Action

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with the President of the European Commission concerning the facilities available within the Commission to foster multilateral agreements covering the provisions of the social chapter in the Netherlands Government draft of the proposed treaty of European union prepared for signature at the Maastricht summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None. This issue remains to be discussed.

Social Chapter

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the provisions governing the competence of the European Court of Justice in considering the non-adherence of the United Kingdom to the social chapter of the proposed EC treaty at Maastricht.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The ECJ has jurisdiction to interpret the treaty as it stands, not to rule on its validity.

Children's Rights

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the United Nations convention on the rights of the child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his answer, 2 December 1991]: The United Kingdom ratified the United Nations convention on the rights of the child on 16 December 1991. Progress is being made towards extending ratification to the Isle of Man, the Channel Islands and dependent territories.

A copy of the instrument of ratification has been placed in the Library of the House.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Judges (Kenya)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what terms and conditions the United Kingdom Government support the employment of judges in Kenya; on what criteria judges are seconded to that country; and on what criteria judges seconded to serve in Kenya are reappointed or removed.

Mrs. Chalker: Judges working in Kenya under the British aid programme—there are three at the present time —are employed by the Government of Kenya on contract. They are not seconded. The Government of Kenya pays the salaries of judges employed under these arrangements and the ODA pays salary supplements and certain other benefits. Decisions to reappoint or terminate the appointments of judges are normally made following consultations between the Government of Kenya and Her Majesty's Government and taking account of a wide range of considerations.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities Credit Management Advisory Board

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what communication his Department has received about the Local Authorities Credit Management Advisory Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department has received three inquiries from companies asking for confirmation of the bona fides of Local Authorities Credit Management Advisory Board.

The companies from whom the inquiries were received had responded to an advertisement in the Financial Times in September and were considering entering into contracts with LACMAB for the collection of debt owed to local authorities. These contracts involved them placing £250,000 on deposit with LACMAB for six months.

According to these companies, LACMAB had claimed to be known to my Department, and to be working under its auspices. Any such claim would be untrue. This organisation is not known to my Department, and has not carried out any work under its auspices. My officials also ascertained that the organisation had not previously been known to the Association of County Councils, Association of District Councils, Association of Metropolitan Authorities, Audit Commission or Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. We have informed the firms from whom inquiries have been received accordingly.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to achieve stabilisation of carbon dioxide emissions; what estimates he has of the contributions of the transport and energy sectors to the reduction in emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) set out the Government's strategy for achieving our conditional target of returning Britain's CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2005. The first year report (Cm 1655) showed how the first set of measures is being put into practice. Action is being taken across all sectors of the economy taking into account the relative cost-effectiveness of measures in different sectors and other wider costs and benefits.

Playing Fields

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to issue final planning policy guidance on the disposal of playing fields.

Mr. Heseltine: We have already done so, in planning policy guidance note 17, "Sport and Recreation", published in September this year.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce a statutory obligation for local authorities to provide housing for those covered by community care programmes.

Mr. Yeo: Social services authorities will be responsible for community care assessments. Section 46(2) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1991 requires them to consult other agencies, including housing authorities, when drawing up their community care plans to meet the needs of their area. At the same time, housing authorities should consult social services authorities in preparing their own housing investment strategies each year. When making assessments for community care, social services authorities will be expected to involve the housing authority whenever an individual's assessment indicates a possible housing need. Those who are homeless and considered vulnerable would be protected under part III of the Housing Act 1985.

It does not follow that everyone who is assessed under the new community care arrangements will be in need of housing. There will be a majority who will be able to go on living in their existing homes with suitable domiciliary care or, perhaps, custom adaptations. Local authorities are able to award mandatory disabled facilities grants for essential adaptations where an applicant qualifies for help under the test of resources. Discretionary grants may also be available for other adaptations, including minor works assistance for the elderly.

We see no reason, therefore, to take new statutory powers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives from Anchor housing association to discuss the development of sheltered housing schemes.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has had no contact with Anchor housing association on this subject.

Planning Applications

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the statutory provisions that relate to control of repetitious and vexatious planning applications.

Sir George Young: Section 70A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, inserted by section 17 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, gives local planning authorities the power to turn away planning applications if within the previous two years the Secretary of State has refused a substantially similar proposal on appeal or following call-in, and there has been no significant change in any material consideration.

EC Meetings

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council held on 12 to 13 December.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all meetings he and his officials have had with his counterparts in European Community countries over the past six weeks; and if he will set out the issues discussed and decisions taken at each meeting.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and I represented the United Kingdom at a joint session of the Environment and Energy Councils on 13 December to discuss the Commission's recent communication on a Community strategy to limit carbon dioxide emissions and to improve energy efficiency. Conclusions were agreed which recognised the need for a strategy at Community level based on a wide-ranging package of Community and national measures. It was agreed that national programmes should be formulated for limiting CO_2 emissions. It was also agreed that specific measures at Community level and a move to higher energy pricing through the use of fiscal instruments were likely to be needed. The Council invited the Commission to put forward formal proposals for measures arising from the Community strategy, including any necessary proposals for Communitywide taxations, taking into account the further studies needed and the conclusions of separate discussions by Finance Ministers.

These conclusions are a positive step foward in the process of agreeing a coherent and coordinated approach across the Community to limiting CO_2 emissions, as part of the global efforts to tackle the threat of climate change. At the same time, they clearly recognise the need for further analytical work before a decision on the questions of energy/carbon taxation can be reached. The United Kingdom will be participating in this further analysis.

My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council on 12 December.

The Council agreed a regulation setting up a Communitywide eco-labelling scheme. The scheme will provide consumers with authoritative guidance as to which products are less damaging to the environment than alternatives on the basis of an assessment of their impact over the whole of their life cycle. The scheme will be voluntary. The United Kingdom has played a leading role in the development of this scheme, and in the design of the logo which will be awarded to products meeting Community criteria. Work will now begin on defining criteria for an initial tranche of 10 to 12 product groups, with a view to the scheme being launched next autumn.

After several years of discussion, the Council finally agreed the directive to protect habitats and wild flora and fauna. The directive will establish a network of special areas of conservation for rare, endangered and vulnerable species and habitats across the Community. The network will be known as Natura 2000 and will consist of sites of international importance on the Community scale. The directive also enshrines the Berne convention into the Community's legal framework. This important measure represents a major step forward for nature conservation in the Community.

A regulation establishing a new Community fund for the environment (LIFE) was agreed. This brings together several existing funds and also incorporates a number of new areas for Community support. The projects which could benefit from Community assistance include nature protection measures under the habitats directive, development of clean technologies, measures to protect the marine environment, and environmental education, training and information initiatives.

The Council agreed a new regulation amending regulation 1734/88/EEC concerning exports and imports of certain dangerous chemicals. This will introduce the prior informed consent procedure into European Community law. It enables importing countries to decide whether or not to allow the import of an internationally agreed list of dangerous chemicals. Exporters in the Community will be prohibited from supplying these if the receiving country withholds consent. Risks to human health and the environment from chemicals in third-world countries should be reduced by this measure.

The Council adopted a common position on a regulation which provides for the collection and evaluation of data on existing chemical substances and, if necessary, proposals for control action. The regulation is complementary to the recently revised notification scheme for new chemical substances.

In the course of a discussion on the implementation and enforcement of Community legislation, there was a favourable response to ideas put forward by the United Kingdom for a Community environment inspectorate. These envisaged an audit-type inspectorate charged with ensuring that enforcement agencies within the member states were applying EC legislation effectively and consistently. It would report its findings to the Commission who would remain responsible for any necessary follow-up action. The Commission expressed its support in principle for the United Kingdom initiative and undertook to bring forward proposals next year.

Council conclusions on a common approach to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development next year were agreed. These set out the results which EC countries hope to achieve at UNCED and address in particular the financial, technological, legal and institutional issues on the UNCED agenda. EC Environment and Development Ministers will continue their preparations for UNCED at a joint Council in February.

The Council formally adopted directives against hazardous waste and on the protection of water against pollution by nitrate from agricultural sources which were agreed in principle earlier this year.

The Council also discussed the proposed regulation on the movement of waste, and new proposals on the sulphur content of gasoil and on trade in endangered species of wild flora and fauna.

The United Kingdom drew the Council's attention to new scientific evidence on the rate of depletion of the ozone layer and called for new measures to bring forward still further the deadlines agreed last year for phasing out the use of ozone-depleting substances.

Municipal Bonds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to extending the right of local authorities to raise long-term capital finance by means of issuing municipal bonds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Local authorities are already able to raise long-term capital finance by issuing bonds. We are not currently contemplating any change in authorities' powers in this field.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received since March 1991 on the issue of the capital financing arrangements of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The many representations received on various capital finance issues could be listed only at disproportionate cost. All are considered carefully, and legislative changes made when necessary.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumptions he has made, in his revenue support grant announcement, regarding the level of permitted borrowing, by individual block allocation, in 1992-93 to finance capital programmes; what were the equivalent figures in the current year; and what is the basis of his assumption that the charges in 1992-93 will fall by 11 per cent.

Mr. Key [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The estimated borrowing limits assumed for the 1992-93 RSG consultation announcement and those used for the 1991-92 settlement are shown in the table.

The standard spending assessment element for debt charges proposed for 1992-93 is based on a number of factors. One of the most important of these is expected interest rates for which a fall has been assumed from 11 per cent. used in the 1991-92 settlement to 10 per cent. being proposed for 1992-93.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the future of local authorities' capital financing arrangements in his review of local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The outcome of the review of local government has not led to any proposals for changes in the existing arrangements for capital financing of local authorities.

Local Authorities (Financial Difficulties)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards central funding of local authorities which have financial difficulties due to (a) the collapse of BCCI, (b) late rating appeals and (c) interest rate swaps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The local authorities affected by such financial difficulties should expect to resolve them for themselves, rather than expect funds from central Government, but the Government will always consider on their merits any proposals which affected local authorities may make.

Planning Proposals (Polls)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions the provisions of the Local Government Act 1972 for calling a community poll concerning a planning proposal affecting that community have been used in England and Wales; and if he will list those occasions and the costs of each poll.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Shared Housing Ownership

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what recent representations he has received from housing associations about the shared ownership value limits imposed by the Housing Corporation;

(2) what provision is made by the shared ownership value limits imposed by the Housing Corporation in order to take account of the variation of average property prices within large conurbations, rural areas, and compact market towns within the same region.

Mr. Key: Representations have recently been received from Templar Housing Society Ltd. and Manchester and District Housing Association Ltd. Value limits are normally pitched at a slightly higher level than the average prices being paid in the regions by first-time buyers, in order to allow for some variation of prices within regions. In addition, value limits may be exceeded by up to 10 per cent. in certain rural areas and in towns which are growth areas for employment. The Housing Corporation is currently considering revised cost control arrangements for shared ownership.

Housing Revenue Accounts

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the net value of transfers—gross transfers minus reverse transfers from housing revenue accounts to general funds—from local authority general funds to their housing revenue accounts for each calendar year since 1980 for Great Britain.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 November, at column 97.

Environment Protection Act

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish the regulations and code of practice on the duty of care under section 34 of the Environment Protection Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, has today laid before Parliament the code of practice and the regulations made under section 34 (duty of care) of the Environment Protection Act. An associated circular will be issued to local authorities.

The duty of care will come into force on 1 April 1992. From that date, every business in Britain will be responsible for taking measures to ensure that their waste goes only to authorised, responsible destinations, whether that is for recycling or for disposal. Anyone who fails to take care of their waste will be guilty of a criminal offence.

The regulations, code of practice and circular have been further improved and clarified in the light of the many comments received. The code of practice offers practical advice for all those subject to the duty.

I believe that this measure will be widely welcomed by responsible industry, as well as by all who care about what happens to waste. It must be right for the producers and holders of waste to take responsibility and account for where they send their waste. This should go a long way towards cutting off at source the supplies of waste that are now heedlessly and illegally dumped.

This is a great advance in the legal control of waste.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textile and Clothing Industry

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made in the GATT Uruguay round of trade negotiations towards international harmonisation of tariffs on textiles and clothing and the reduction of other trade barriers facing United Kingdom exports.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 December 1991]: There has been some support from participants in the GATT Uruguay round for the international harmonisation of textile and clothing tariffs (i.e. maximum levels would be agreed for each type of product). The European Community continues to press for agreement. We are aware of the textile and clothing industry's concerns about other trade barriers facing United Kingdom exports and these have been drawn to the attention of the European Commission, which continues to work for their elimination.

British Petroleum

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to BP—The Way Forward to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Leigh: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 3 to Friday 7 February 1992.

Trading Standards and Environmental Health

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if British officials listed as trading standards officers and environmental health officers will be able to participate in the European Community action plan for the exchange of officials engaged in the enforcement of Community legislation required to build the single market, as set out in Official Journal C229 of 20 November; and what information he has on the record of the United Kingdom and other EC member states on the enforcement of European Community legislation as they relate to trading standards and environmental health matters.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Commission's proposal for an action plan for the exchange of national officials between member state administrations engaged in the enforcement of single market legislation has only just been presented to the Council. The proposal will now be the subject of discussion in the Council and the Parliament. It is too early to say what the final shape of the proposal will be. A pilot project for the scheme earlier this year involved a British trading standards officer in an exchange visit to France. There is insufficient evidence at present to produce a meaningful comparison of the performance of member states on enforcement.

Maxwell Companies (Pension Funds)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he received any representations before 5 November 1991 from the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation about the pension funds of any companies of which the late Robert Maxwell was a director.

Mr. Lilley: None.

Telecommunication Companies

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 9 December, Official Report, column 281, if he will take steps to ensure that his consultation with other Departments is completed in time for a response to be sent to the Council on Tribunals concerning their potential interest in the disputes procedure of telecommunications companies as covered by the Competition and Service (Utilities) Bill prior to the Report stage of that Bill in this House.

Mr. Redwood: Consultation between Departments and the regulators has been carried out as a matter of urgency, and information has already been passed to the Council on Tribunals.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 9 December, Official Report, column 281, if he will indicate the nature of the potential interest in the disputes procedure of telecommunications companies as covered by the Competition and Service (Utilities) Bill that has been expressed by the Council on Tribunals.

Mr. Redwood: In its approach to the Department, the Council on Tribunals expressed potential interest in clauses which conferred new functions on the directors general in relation to dispute resolution. Clauses 1 and 5 to 7 inclusive have been mentioned for telecommunications. The council wishes to consider whether any formal procedures to hold oral hearings, similar to those held by tribunals under the Council's supervision, are likely to be established by the directors general. I would emphasise that it is dispute procedures set up by the regulators in which the Council has expressed interest, not procedures of the utilities they monitor.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply of 9 December, Official Report, column 281, if he will publish the response his Department has sent to the Council on Tribunals concerning their potential interest in the disputes procedures of telecommunications companies as covered by the Competition and Service (Utilities) Bill.

Mr. Redwood: Correspondence and discussions are continuing between the Council on Tribunals, the Department and the regulators. It is not appropriate to publish this ongoing consultation. I made a statement to Standing Committee on the Competition and Service (Utilities) Bill on 17 December about the issues involved.

Shipbuilding

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which shipyards participated in the study to compare build costs in Europe and the far east, undertaken for the European Commission by TECNECON, giving the figures by country for each ship type examined.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The TECNECON study for the European Commission covered 12 ship types. Twenty-one shipyards from member states participated in the provision of cost data. Details are as follows:

Ship type	Shipyard/Country
VLCC (280,000 dwt) (double skin)	Harland and Wolff (United Kingdom) Odense (Denmark) HDW (Germany)
Suezmax tanker (140,000 dwt) (double skin)	Harland and Wolff (United Kingdom) Solisner-Estalieros Navais SA (Portugal) Odense (Denmark) Astilleros Espanoles (Spain) Fincantieri (Italy)
Aframax tanker (85,000 dwt) (double skin)	Fincantieri (Italy) B & W (Denmark) Astilleros Espanoles (Spain)
Product tanker (40,000 dwt)	Kvaerner Govan (United Kingdom) B & W (Denmark) Astilleros Espanoles (Spain)
Cape bulker (150,000 dwt)	Fincantieri (Italy) Harland and Wolff (United Kingdom) Odense (Denmark)
Large container (3,500 TEU)	Bremer Vulkan (Germany) HDW (Germany) Odense (Denmark)
Small container (1,700 TEU) (geared)	HDW (Germany) Bremer Vulkan (Germany) Chantiers de l'Atlantique (France) Odense (Denmark) Verolme (Netherlands)
Chemical carrier (3,000 dwt)	Sietas (Germany) Verolme (Netherlands) Aarhus (Denmark) Cochrane (United Kingdom)
LPG carrier (18,000 cm)	Odense (Denmark) Kvaerner Govan (United Kingdom) Meyer (Germany)
Reefer (600,000 ft³)	Bremer Vulkan (Germany) Astilleros Espanoles (Spain) Boelwerf NV (Belgium) Van der Giessen (Netherlands) Kvaerner Govan (United Kingdom) Danyard (Denmark)
Ferry (2,000 passengers) (600 cars)	Chantier de l'Atlantique (France) Bremer Vulkan (Germany) Boelwerf NV (Belgium) Van der Giessen (Netherlands) Fincantieri (Italy) Astilleros Espanoles (Spain)
Tug (4,000 bhp)	Dunston (United Kingdom) Damen (Netherlands) Aarhus (Denmark) Chantiers Naval De Rupelmonde (Belgium)

Cost data submitted by individual shipyards are commercially confidential.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations his Department has had with United Kingdom shipbuilders on the level of aid for EC shipbuilding for 1992 under the terms of the EC seventh shipbuilding directive.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 December 1991]: I met representatives of the Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers Association, at their request, on 26 November to discuss a number of issues including the 1992 levels of aid for shipbuilding within the European Community.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's position on the level of state aid for shipbuilding for 1992 under the terms of the seventh EC shipbuilding directive.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The Government's position on state aid for shipbuilding remains unchanged. We are in favour of the multilateral phasing out of subsidies.

The European Commission is expected to announce shortly its aid ceilings for 1992 under the seventh directive on aid to shipbuilding. Our own levels will be decided in the light of the announcement and will come into effect on 1 January 1992. Details will be given to the House in due course.

Welsh Consumer Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what salary is paid to the chair of the Welsh Consumer Council.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 December 1991]: The appointment of chair of the WCC attracts a salary of £4,420 per annum, plus, as a member of the National Consumer Council, an additional £4,420 per annum, both of which are subject to tax and national insurance.

British Steel

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had on proposals or decisions to close existing capacity in British Steel in Great Britain.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Any such proposals or decisions are a matter for the board of British Steel. My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Steel from time to time, but their discussions are confidential.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect British Steel's investment plans overseas will have on capacity in specific areas of production in Britain with regard to general steels.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1991: None. Such matters are for the board of British Steel and the industry itself.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on British Steel's plans with regard to existing capacity utilisation over the next 12 months and for continuing production at (a) Scunthorpe, (b) Ravenscraig, (c) Dalzell and (d) Llanwern.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Such information as British Steel have published in its annual reports. Investment has continued at Llanwern, where a new hot dip galvanising line was commissioned last year. British Steel is considering investment in a new plate mill facility at Teeside, which would replace in due course the existing plate mills at Dalzell and Scunthorpe, but no final decision has yet been taken. Production of steel will continue at Ravenscraig until at least 1994, subject to economic and commercial conditions and the demand for steel slab.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs Education

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had from the international information centre on special needs education; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend received a letter from the international information centre on special needs education on 4 December 1991. The letter is receiving consideration within the Department and a reply will be sent as soon as possible.

EC Competence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement outlining the areas of his responsibility in which the EC will have competence following the implementation of agreements at Maastricht.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Following the agreement reached at Maastricht last week, the European Community will have a role in contributing to the development of quality education by encouraging co-operation between member states and if necessary by supporting and supplementing their action.

Action by the Community is to be aimed at: developing the European dimension in education; the teaching and dissemination of languages; promoting co-operation between education establishments; developing exchanges of information and experience; encouraging the development of youth exchanges; and encouraging the development of distance education.

The Community is required by the agreement fully to respect the responsibility of the member states for the content of teaching and the organisation of educational systems, and their cultural and linguistic diversity.

The Community's existing competence in relation to vocational training is clarified. Again the Community is required to respect the responsibility of member states for the content and organisation of vocational training.

The measures available to the Community in relation to education and vocational training expressly exclude any harmonisation of the laws and regulations of the member states.

The European Community will gain no new competence in those areas of scientific research under DES responsibility. The Community's existing competence allows it to undertake certain actions which will strengthen the scientific and technological basis of European industry and encourage it to become more competitive at international level.

Primary Education

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if the three-person inquiry team on primary education will be visiting any primary schools in the course of its inquiry;

(2) what terms of reference have been given to the three-person inquiry team into primary education.

Mr. Fallon: The terms of reference for the report on primary education, commissioned by my right hon. and learned Friend, are "Taking into account available evidence about the delivery of education in primary schools, to make recommendations about curriculum organisation, teaching methods and classroom practice appropriate for the successful implementation of the National Curriculum, particularly at Key Stage 2."

In writing the report, Professor Alexander, Chief Inspector Mr. Rose and Mr. Woodhead will draw on their extensive knowledge of primary education and the national curriculum, including visits to primary schools in connection with their normal responsibilities.

National Curriculum

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will visit schools in Ealing to discuss the level of resources required next year to implement the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have no present plans to visit schools in Ealing.

In addition to the standing spending assessment, the Government are supporting expenditure through grants for education support and training on the national curriculum of some £170 million in 1991-92.

Schools Budget (Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will itemise, with costings, those elements of the education budgets of (separately) Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex, which constitute, in the most recent year for which information is available (a) each LEA's general schools budget, (b) each LEA's potential schools budget, (c) each LEA's real schools budget (as proposed by the Association of County Councils), (d) each LEA's aggregate schools budget and (e) that part of each LEA's budget which is attributable to services provided from the annual maintenance grant of a grant-maintained school.

Mr. Fallon: The information we have is as follows, taken from the LEAs' section 42 budget statements for 1991-92:

	Norfolk LEA	Suffolk LEA	Essex LEA
	£000s	£000s	£000s
General schools budget[1]	206,948	185,231	431,033
Potential schools budget[2]	177,015	152,305	372,734
Aggregated schools budget[3]	149,344	133,358	317,119
GM-relevant costs[4]	182,665	151,542	369,221

[1] The general schools budget (GSB) of a local education authority is the amount appropriated by the authority for meeting expenditure in respect of all schools covered by a scheme for the local management of schools (LMS), ie all county and voluntary schools.

[2] The potential schools budget (PSB) consists of a part of the general schools budget (GSB)—ie the GSB less expenditure on certain excepted items: capital expenditure; expenditure supported by central government grants; and expenditure on school meals, home to school transport and transitional exceptions (eg cleaning and grounds maintenance).

[3] The aggregated schools budget (ASB) is that part of an authority's GSB which is allocated according to a formula to individual LEA schools, ie the amount which the schools themselves decide how to spend, once they have delegated powers and responsibilities under LMS.

[4] The GM-relevant costs constitute the total budget in respect of the LEA's maintained schools which corresponds to the total annual maintenance grant (AMG) of grant-maintained (GM) schools, ie the GSB less expenditure on items for which provision is made outside the AMG of GM schools, those items being: central Government specific grants; capital expenditure; and expenditure on home to school transport, education welfare officers and psychologists, pupil support, statemented pupils and special units.

The "real schools budget" is a construct suggested in a report by Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte for the Association of County Councils. The Department does not have the information to calculate it.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Municipal Bonds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to extending the right of local authorities to raise long-term capital finance by means of municipal bonds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Local authorities are already able to raise long-term capital finance by issuing bonds. We are not currently contemplating any change in authorities' powers in this field.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. Maples: Following is the information requested for each of the five executive agencies concerned in respect of 1991-92.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

The chief executive has standard terms and conditions for a grade 2. All increases in pay are performance related. The grade 2 pay range from 1 December 1991 is £60,100 to £70,400.

Royal Mint

The chief executive's maximum salary, including bonus, payable in respect of the agency's performance is £66,000. The appointment is for five years starting from January 1988.

Central Office of Information

The chief executive has additional responsibilities as head of profession for the Government information service and is paid as a grade 3. The grade 3 range in London from 1 December 1991 is £51,300 to £59,000. All pay increases are performance-related. The performance element in respect of his duties as chief executive is under discussion. His appointment is for a three-year term starting from 5 April 1990.

Valuation Office

The chief executive is a grade 2 and his maximum salary, including individual bonus, payable in respect of the agency's performance is £69,465. He has been appointed for a period ending no later than 31 March 1994.

Central Statistical Office

The salary from 1 December 1991 of the director (chief executive), is £77,500, the standard rate of pay at grade 1A level. It is intended that, following Sir Jack Hibbert's retirement at the end of February 1992, his successor will be appointed for a period of five years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Maples: Following is the information for each of the five executive agencies concerned.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

	1991 Target Per cent.

Royal Mint

The Royal Mint's published financial target covering the three-year period 1990-91 to 1992-93 is to achieve a 12·5 per cent. current cost return on net assets. Other targets are commercially sensitive and details are not published.

Central Office of Information to deliver all work in accordance with client specification; and to deliver all work on time.

The COI had no formal quality of service targets before it became an executive agency on 5 April 1990.

Valuation Office

timeliness (percentage of work completed to external and internal time limits) valuation accuracy (percentage of valuations settled within plus 10 per cent. of initial valuation when facts settled).

Both indicators were first introduced, following pilot studies, in April 1991, before establishment as an agency on 30 September 1991. Targets for 1991-92 are, respectively, 82 per cent. and 80 per cent.

Central Statistical Office

The Central Statistical Office was established as an executive agency on 19 November 1991. The current quality of service targets for the CSO are included in annex E of its agency framework document, copies of which have been placed in the Library. None of the targets relating to quality of service were in force prior to the CSO's establishment as an executive agency.

Volunteer Drivers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about his proposals for taxation on volunteer drivers' mileage allowance.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) on 12 December at column 480.

Business and the Environment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has met, or has plans to meet, representatives of the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment; if he plans to meet representatives of any other environmental groups between the present time and March 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: At present, I have no plans to meet representatives of the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment. In the run-up to the Budget, my Treasury colleagues and I meet a wide range of groups. Environmental issues are discussed.

Rent-free Periods (VAT)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the decision of Customs and Excise to treat rent-free periods as benefit subject to value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is long-standing Customs policy that rent-free periods are outside the scope of VAT unless services are performed in return by the tenant for the landlord. As this is uncommon, in practice only a few cases will lead to VAT being charged.

Taxation

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the occasions on which announcements of proposals for abolishing or reducing taxes have been made other than on Budget day since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Since 1979, no specific proposals for abolishing central Government taxes or reducing tax rates have been announced other than on Budget day or during the passage of the Finance Bill.

Privatisation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much have total privatisation proceeds been since 1979.

Mr. Maude: Total privatisation proceeds from May 1979 to end 1990-91 are about £33·5 billion.

Direct Taxation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the consultative document on proposals to implement the three direct tax measures adopted by the Economic and Finance Council in July 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: On 23 July 1990, the Economic and Finance Council adopted three proposals to remove possible tax obstacles to Communitywide business activity and cross-border expansion. The measures are the mergers directive, to defer certain tax charges that could otherwise arise on a cross-border merger or demerger; the parents/subsidiaries directive, to eliminate the double taxation of dividends and abolish withholding taxes on them when they are paid to a parent company in another member state; and the arbitration convention, to set up a mechanism to resolve transfer pricing disputes between taxing authorities in different member states.

In the Government's view, these are issues on which there should be full consultation before implementing legislation is brought forward. Accordingly, the Inland Revenue is today issuing a consultative document including draft clauses. Comments on the consultative document and draft legislation are invited by 14 February 1992. We shall carefully consider all comments and representations which are made before introducing the necessary legislative provisions at the earliest opportunity. I have placed copies of the document, including the draft clauses, in the Library.

Public Services Survey

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 508-9, if he will publish the details requested of him when he announces the date and arrangements of the opinion survey, or at the point it commences, whichever is the earlier.

Mr. Maude: Details of the survey will be announced in due course.

Interest Rates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the margin between Public Works Loan Board interest rates and the Government gilt rates.

Mr. Maples: The Public Works Loan Board lending rates for quota loans are set so that they are close to but below the rates at which local authorities can borrow on the market. The rates are calculated by adding a margin of ½ to 1 per cent. depending on maturity to the per yield curve Government gilts. The formula for calculating the per yield curve was described in the February 1990 issue of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin.

Inward Investment

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much inward investment into the United Kingdom has been made by the other EC countries for each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The available information on the inward direct investment into the United Kingdom by other member countries of the European Community between 1987 and 1989 is given in table 2.4 of "Business Monitor MA4" (1989 overseas transactions) published by the Central Statistical Office, a copy of which is in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will be able to provide up-to-date figures on the same basis as those provided to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East in his answer of 8 January 1990, Official Report, columns 558-64, revising his figures to include an estimate of the effects of the introduction of the community charge; and what estimate he has made to date of the effect on the tax burden of the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 9 December 1991]: Updated figures for 1990-91, including estimates of community charge payments in 1990-91, are given on a basis similar to that provided to the hon. Member in his answer of 8 January 1990, at columns 559-64. No figures of the impact of the community charge in 1991-92 can be provided until the 1991 family expenditure survey is published.

The latest estimates for 1991-92 for direct taxes and indirect taxes excluding the community charge were given in the reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 20 November 1991, at columns 174-76.

Notes:

[1] Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.

[2] Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and national insurance contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.

[3] In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.

[4] Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are estimated to be £306·20 per week in 1990-91.

[5] The estimates of indirect taxes apart from the community charge are based on equations derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

[6] Estimates of the burden of the community charge have been derived from the 1990 family expenditure survey. All respondents were assumed to pay the charge to which they were liable. The calculations include water charges in order to put the estimates on a comparable basis to the estimates for earlier years. Community charge payments are net of transitional relief and community charge benefit. Since community charge payments vary widely between households with similar incomes, the estimated charge payments are only approximate.

UN Economic Commission for Europe

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Department routinely reviews the work conducted and reports produced by the United Nation's Economic Commission for Europe.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The papers and reports of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe are received by my Department. They are one of the many sources of information used to keep abreast of developments in Europe, particularly in the former centrally planned economies.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers would be affected by the restriction of all tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, giving the numbers who have gross incomes of (a) less than £30,000, (b) £25,000, (c) £20,000, (d) earnings below the higher rate threshold and (e) earnings below the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Latest estimates for 1991-92 are as follows:

Restriction of allowances[1] and reliefs to the basic rate
Number of taxpaying individuals affected

	Thousands
(a) Total income under £30,000	290
(b) Total income under £25,000	0
(c) Total income under £20,000	0
(d) Total earned income[2] under £26,995[3]	200
(e) Total earned income[2] under £20,280[4]	100

[2] Includes income from employment, self employment and occupational pensions.

[3] The sum of the basic rate limit and the level of the basic personal allowance for those under 65.

[4] National Insurance upper earnings limit.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Andrew Miller

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Prime Minister when his office answered or proposes to answer the letter from Mr. Andrew Miller, Flat 2-2, 2049 Paisley road west, Glasgow.

The Prime Minister: There is no record of my office having received Mr. Miller's letter.

European Central Bank

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Manchester city council about the location of the proposed European central bank; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The leader of Manchester city council wrote to me on 29 November in connection with Manchester's proposed bid to host the European central bank and its precursor, the European Monetary Institute. I will send the right hon. Member a copy of my reply.

Social Charter

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out all the provisions of the social charter which have been agreed by the other members of the Community.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the explanatory memorandum on the social charter, which was submitted by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on 24 November 1989. A copy of the explanatory memorandum and the text of the social charter are available in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Businesses (East Midlands)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the net change month on month in the number of businesses in (a) Amber Valley, (b) Derbyshire and (c) the east midlands in the latest month for which figures are available and two previous months.

Mr. Forth: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Unemployment Benefit (Disqualification)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people were disqualified for unemployment benefit under each paragraph of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 in the area covered by the Newport, Gwent, unemployment benefit office, in the latest month for which information can be obtained; in how many cases disqualification was imposed for the maximum period of 26 weeks; and whether he will arrange for records of the lengths of disqualifications to be kept on a routine basis in future.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

South Glamorgan TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what form of contribution he now envisages towards the costs of establishing a new headquarters for the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council to which he referred in his answer of 28 February 1991, Official Report, column 571; in what financial year that contribution will take place; what level it will be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: A contribution towards the cost of the new South Glamorgan TEC headquarters continues to be part of the Department's expenditure plans for 1991-92.

Adaptations to premises at Waterfront 2000 in Cardiff commenced in November this year and occupancy is anticipated towards the end of January 1992. The Department's contribution towards the cost of adaptation work is likely to be around £280,000.

Prince of Wales Youth Business Trust

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Prince of Wales Youth Business Trust to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 24 to Friday 28 February 1992.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answers of 18 November, Official Report, columns 50-51, concerning Coventry unemployment and the numbers of vacancies, he will review his policy of referring hon. Members' questions about labour market statistics to the Library.

Mr. Jackson: No. The decision to refer questioners to the NOMIS database, which can be accessed on line by the House of Commons Library staff, follows the established principle of referring to published sources. It is good resource management to refer to information which is publicly available when the effort has already been made to provide an easily accessible, up-to-date and accurate computer database.

HEALTH

Infant and Maternal Mortality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state (a) the infant mortality rate, (b) the maternal mortality rate and (c) the perinatal and neonatal death rates for each of the years 1988, 1989 and 1990 in the United Kingdom, each other country of the EC and the WHO European region.

Mr. Dorrell: Complete data are not available in the form requested. The latest data from the WHO European regional office indicator presentation system are shown in the tables, together with any later estimates from other sources.

Caution should be used in interpreting international rates, particularly those relating to perinatal mortality, due to differences in ascertainment between countries.

Oral Tobacco

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, prior to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's attendance at the EC Health Ministers Council in November, he commissioned an independent review of the scientific evidence offered by the European Commission in support of its proposed ban on oral tobacco.

Mr. Dorrell: We receive independent advice on the health hazards posed by oral snuff from the Committee on Carcinogenicity, an independent advisory committee to the Department of Health.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the published scientific evidence studied by his Department in support of the EC directive banning oral tobacco, before the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State attended the EC Health Ministers Council in November.

Mr. Dorrell: The list of published scientific evidence is extensive. I will therefore send my hon. Friend a copy of the list and place a copy in the Library.

Eye Tests

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to reinstate free sight tests for (a) all age groups and (b) elderly people.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have made provision for vulnerable members of the community such as children, adults on low incomes and those with certain special needs to continue to be entitled to free sight tests but we believe that those who can afford to pay should do so.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the continued imposition of a charge for NHS sight tests.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations. There is no charge for NHS sight tests: they continue to be available free to the most vulnerable groups in the community, accounting for approximately 40 per cent. of the population. There are no plans to change the current arrangements.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the numbers of people over pensionable age who presented themselves for sight tests in each year since 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Baby Deaths (Doncaster)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the results of the epidemiological survey into the causes of brain damage to babies at Doncaster royal infirmary will be complete; with what other areas and hospitals it is being compared; and if copies of the findings will be sent to the Doncaster Members of Parliament and the Doncaster community health council.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Trent regional health authority has appointed two experts from outside the region to determine whether or not the occurrence of brain damaged births within the Doncaster district is comparable with other districts, and if necessary in the light of findings to make any recommendations. I understand that the study should be completed by March 1992. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman of Trent regional health authority, for details.

Dysentry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by month for the last 12 months the number of cases of dysentry that have been confirmed in the United Kingdom, the locations of the outbreaks and the cause of the outbreaks.

Mr. Dorrell: In the year 1991 to week 49, there have been community outbreaks of dysentry in the following towns and cities in England and Wales: Grimsby; Manchester; Leeds; Bradford; Hull; Scunthorpe; Halifax; Huddersfield; Cardiff; Bristol; Darlington; Easington; Carmarthen; Haverfordwest; Gainsborough; Sheffield; Doncaster; Birmingham.

The PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre has received 9,006 reports of isolations of shigella sonnei, the main causative organisms for dysentry in this country, from laboratories in England and Wales in 1991. They are as listed in the table, with weeks 49 to 52 of 1990 included to complete a 12-month period.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Food Hygiene

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when registration of premises used for food business will be a statutory requirement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991 have been laid before Parliament. The objective of these regulations is to ensure that local authorities responsible for the enforcement of food legislation have information about the food businesses operating in their area so that they can target their enforcement resources to those which represent the highest risk to health. The regulations take effect on 1 February 1992. Existing businesses must register with their local authority by 30 April 1992. There will be a national publicity campaign to alert the owners of food businesses to the new requirements.

Hypothermia

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any statistical data relating to the above-average deaths from hypothermia and related conditions during or arising from the severe cold weather in the first half of February 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys analysis of the excess deaths in February 1991 shows that there were a total of 15 deaths where hypothermia was mentioned as a cause of death.

Carers

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will outline the services available for carers now supporting elderly and disabled people in the community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provision of practical support for carers is the second of the key objectives identified in the White Paper "Caring for People". In meeting carers' needs, health and local authorities should consult carers about their wishes and needs, and ensure that services are available. The King's Fund's recent publication "Focus on Carers", a copy of which will be placed in the Library, funded by the Department, outlines the kinds of services which can be made available to support carers. It is for health and local authorities to decide what services should be provided in their areas depending upon local needs and circumstances.

NHS (Non-British Patients)

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of national health service expenditure is spent on treating non-British subjects who are bona-fide reciprocal arrangement patients;

(2) what proportion of national health service annual expenditure is spent on patients who are not British subjects and whose country of origin has no reciprocal arrangements.

Mr. Dorrell: The possession of British nationality is not of itself a requirement for free NHS hospital treatment. Anyone not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom has to pay for NHS hospital treatment unless he or she is covered by one of a number of specific exemptions, including reciprocal arrangements.

Comprehensive information is not collected centrally on the cost to the NHS of treatment to patients exempted from charges.

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those countries which enjoy reciprocal arrangements whereby production of a national health service number is not necessary but where free treatment is available in the United Kingdom on production of an ID card of country of origin.

Mr. Dorrell: The territories are as follows: Anguilla, Australia, Austria. Belgium, British Virgin Islands, Bulgaria, Channel Islands, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Falkland Islands, Finland, France, Germany, Gibraltar, Greece, Hong Kong, Hungary, Iceland, Irish Republic, Isle of Man, Italy, Luxembourg, Malta, Montserrat, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, St. Helena, Spain, Sweden, Turks and Caicos Islands, USSR and Yugoslavia.

NHS (Patients' Numbers)

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of patients using national health service doctors' surgeries or receiving national health service treatment are asked to give their national health service number.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Cranage Hall Hospital

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he has given to Mersey regional health authority about the possible establishment of a village community for mentally handicapped patients on the site of the Cranage Hall hospital; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give details of the progress which has been made towards the closure, disposal and subsequent use of the Cranage Hall hospital and its grounds.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department does not offer advice about the future of specific hospitals. The future of services at Cranage Hall hospital is a matter for Crewe health authority.

NHS Numbers

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new national health service numbers have been issued over the last three years.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service central register, which is part of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, controls the issue of national health service numbers in England and Wales.

For births in England and Wales, the registrars of births and deaths issue a national health service number, on behalf of the national health service central register, as part of the process of the legal registration of the birth.

Numbers issued this way over the last three years are:

Mid year to mid year	Number (000s)
1988-89	687·4
1990-91	706·7

Additionally, the national health service central register issues, centrally, national health service numbers where the allocation of a number is necessary in all circumstances other than birth. Examples are the allocation of numbers to immigrants and provision of a number in adoption cases but allocation can occur whenever a patient registers with a general practitioner without providing a number and the patient cannot be positively traced on the central register. The number of allocations have been:

Year	Number (000s)
1991	[1]362·6

[1] The high number of allocations this year is a consequence of resolving queries during computerisation of the central register and a return to pre-1991 levels is expected in the future.

WALES

Highways

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will show total expenditure by all Welsh local highway authorities from 1980-81 to 1991-92 on (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Expenditure since 1980 is as follows:

	New construction and improvement	Structural maintenance including bridge repair	Other highway maintenance including lighting and road safety	Total
1980-81	50·1	66·2		116·3
1981-82	48·0	86·7		134·8
1982-83	65·8	78·6		144·3
1983-84	58·2	87·4		145·7
1984-85	54·9	88·2		143·1
1985-86	64·6	89·1		153·7
1986-87	66·9	97·3		164·2
1987-88	78·5	109·6		188·0
1988-89	63·4	115·7		179·0
1989-90	73·3	47·5	77·1	197·8
1990-91[1]	78·3	58·8	75·1	212·2
1991-92[1]	97·4	65·5	76·8	239·7

Figures do not necessarily add up because of rounding.
Separate figures for structural and current maintenance were not collected before 1989-90.
[1]Provisional figures.

Schools Budget

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide, on a basis consistent with the answer of 14 October 1991, Official Report, columns 68-73, a list of local education authorities in rank order by the proportion of the potential schools budget held back in 1991-92 showing in each case the proportion held back in 1990-91.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is shown in the table:

Extent of LEAs delegation to schools in 1991-92

Local Education Authority	PSB Delegated to Schools		PSB not Delegated per pupil in 1991-92 (£)	Central Administration as proportion of PSB		Schools with Delegated Budgets in 1991-92 Per cent.
	1991-92 Per cent.	1990-91 Per cent.		1991-92 Per cent.	1990-91 Per cent.
West Glamorgan	84·30	85·16	284	1·8	2·1	14
South Glamorgan	83·96	85·49	270	3·2	3·4	32
Dyfed	83·36	80·65	285	4·0	3·9	0
Mid Glamorgan	82·60	81·58	313	4·9	5·0	39
Clwyd	82·50	81·90	300	4·8	5·0	74
Powys	82·19	82·07	336	4·5	4·0	100
Gwynedd	82·18	82·48	328	5·5	5·2	37
Gwent	81·79	81·71	320	3·9	3·9	52
National Averages	82·90	82·59	301	4·0	4·0	38

Notes:
1. It should be noted that the figures are not readily comparable across LEAs because of variations in the treatment of items of expenditure in relation to the General Schools Budget (GSB) from which the PSB is derived.
2. The PSB consists of the GSB less expenditure on certain excepted items: capital expenditure; expenditure supported by central government grants; and expenditure on school meals, home to school transport and transitional exceptions such as grounds maintenance. From 1993 LEAs are required to delegate a minimum of 85 per cent. of PSB to schools.
3. The 1990-91 details are taken from the outturn budget statements for 1990-91 where they are available.
4. Pupil numbers have been taken from the latest statistical information available to the Department ie, the September 1991 STATS 1 forms.
5. The percentages stated may differ from the percentages calculated by individual LEAs because of the effects of rounding.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the latest available estimate of the number of houses in multiple occupation in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not available.

Land Sales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much land has been sold in the last few years by his Department giving the acreage and the estimated receipts.

Mr. David Hunt: In the last three financial years up to 31 March 1991, 177·4 acres of land were sold by my Department amounting to estimated receipts of £9,697,000. In addition the Forestry Commission sold 8,057 acres of forest land and 2,119 acres of non-forest land on behalf of my Department. The receipts for the forest land amounted to £5,269,000. Records of receipts for non-forest land are not kept separately by country and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales from what time signs on the M4 in the area of Newport indicated the closure on Sunday 8 December of the Severn bridge and the M4; and at what time the signs were switched off.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Signs in the Gwent police area indicating a bridge closure were set at 20:48 hours. The incident was dealt with and the messages displayed on the signs were removed at 23:17 hours, when it was considered safe to allow traffic to resume using the crossing.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what alternative route was signposted for drivers during the closure of Severn bridge and part of the M4 on Sunday 8 December; and why the chosen route was recommended.

Sir Wyn Roberts: During the closure of the Severn bridge, traffic was diverted along the A449, A40, M50 and M5 roads. This is the recognised and pre-arranged diversionary route.

A low bridge at the Gloucestershire village of Newnham makes the A48 road unsuitable as a diversionary route, although there is little doubt that drivers of light vehicles such as cars and motorcycles who had knowledge of this route, chose to use it.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to meet health board chairmen to discuss (a) hospital trusts and (b) finance.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend last met district health authority chairmen on 20 November and intends to meet them again on 25 March 1992.

Cockles

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to prevent overfishing of the foreshore cocklebeds.

Mr. David Hunt: The gathering of cockles is, where appropriate, regulated through byelaws made by sea fisheries committees.

University of Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish target student intake figures for each constituent college in the university of Wales in each year from the current year until 1998; and state in each case what proportion of the intake is estimated to come from schools within Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are no target intake figures set centrally for universities. The number of students in the constituent colleges of the university of Wales being funded by the Universities Funding Council in 1991-92 are:

	Number
Aberystwyth	3,485
Bangor	2,882
Cardiff	7,148
St. David's Lampeter	812
Swansea	4,235
College of Medicine	980

For the years from 1993-94, subject to parliamentary approval of the Further and Higher Education Bill, funding of higher education institutions in Wales will be the responsibility of the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales. No assumption is made centrally about the proportion of entrants to the university of Wales that come from schools within Wales.

Lesser Horseshoe Bats

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will produce guidelines for local planning authorities in Wales so as to enable them to ensure the survival of roosts of lesser horseshoe bats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 gives special protection to horseshoe bats. Guidance on the operation of these controls is contained in Welsh Office Circular 38/82 (DOE24/82), Welsh Office Circular 52/87 (DOE27/87) and in the joint Welsh Office/DOE booklet "Planning—a Householders Guide".

Welsh Water plc

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations he has had and proposes to have with the Director General of OFWAT concerning the diversification proposals of Welsh Water plc with the public electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The diversification proposals of Welsh Water plc are a matter for the company and its shareholders. The Water Industry Act 1991 and the licence appointing water and sewerage companies protects the core business, in this case Dwr Cymru Cyfymgedig, and the interests of customers. The Director General of Water Services has amended the licence to ensure sufficent information is available to allow him to protect the interests of customers.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Director General of OFWAT concerning the commercial value and content of the consultancy work placed by Welsh Water plc with the LEK Partnership since Mr. Iain Evans became a non-executive director of Welsh Water.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. This is a matter for the company and its shareholders.

Welsh Health Common Services Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority concerning the units of administrative headquarters work for that authority which are to be relocated to the new headquarters building at the Roath basin, Cardiff; if those units unclude the artifical limb and appliance service, currently based at Rookwood hospital, Llandarf, Cardiff and the National Blood Transfusion Service currently co-located with the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar, Llantrisant road, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A full option appraisal was prepared by the authority, which considered various alternatives for its relocation. The appraisal concluded that neither the artifical limb and appliance service nor the National Blood Transfusion Service should be housed in the proposed new accommodation due to the nature of the services they provide and the nature of the building in Roath basin.

River Ely

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority regarding the deterioration in the water condition of the lower reaches and estuary of the River Ely; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The National Rivers Authority has a carefully planned strategy to improve the quality of the River Ely including the rebuilding of the sewage treatment works serving Tonyrefail, the construction of a new trunk sewer from Rhiwsaeson sewage treatment works to improve the quality of the River Clun, which flows into the Ely, and the transfer of the effluent from the Cogan outfall to the proposed new sewage treatment works at Lavernock. The strategy is being vigorously pursued by the authority. A number of benefits have already accrued and there should be further major improvements in the next three to five years. My right hon. Friend sees no need to consult the authority's chairman in these circumstances.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total increase in spending by the national health service in Wales in each year since 1979 after adjustment for the health costs deflator.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In order to show the dramatic difference between the funding of the NHS under a Labour Government and under this administration I have taken the opportunity to provide the information requested by the hon. Gentleman for each year since 1974. He will note the marked improvement under this Government compared with the period 1974-79.

Year	NHS gross expenditure adjusted for changes in input unit costs[1] £ million (1990-91 prices)	NHS gross expenditure adjusted by the GDP deflator £ million (1991-92 prices)
1974-75	1,106	1,024
1975-76	1,153	1,095
1976-77	1,146	1,084
1977-78	1,189	1,077
1978-79	1,235	1,115
1979-80	1,204	1,118
1980-81	1,223	1,216
1981-82	1,284	1,263
1982-83	1,330	1,301
1983-84	1,346	1,320
1984-85	1,371	1,360
1985-86	1,390	1,375
1986-87	1,407	1,432
1987-88	1,446	1,506
1988-89	1,471	1,571
1989-90	1,489	1,598
1990-91	1,544	1,652
1991-92	[2]—	[3]1,781

Notes:
[1] Calculated against service inflation reflecting pay and price movements in English authorities.
[2] Index for 1991-92 is not available as estimates are not made until after the financial year has ended.
[3] Current provision.

Changes in input volumes are an inadequate guide to the level of services the NHS can be expected to achieve since they do not reflect the continuing success of NHS management in increasing the efficiency with which it uses resources.

The final column therefore gives expenditure in real terms after adjustment by the GDP deflator.

Tenovus Cancer Research Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had regarding the future funding and research activities of the Tenovus cancer research centre at the University hospital of Wales, Heath, Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To date I have received no official representations regarding the future funding and research activities of the Tenovus institute for cancer research located at the University hospital.

Smoking

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take as a result of the Health Promotion Authority for Wales report, "Implementation of Non-Smoking Policies in Hospitals in Wales 1987-89."

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My officials have today issued revised guidance to the NHS in Wales. Most patients and staff do not smoke and they are therefore entitled to a smoke-free environment. There should be a progressive move to no smoking by staff and patients, except in limited segregated smoking areas, to take effect by the end of 1993.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hepatitis B

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of hepatitis B have occurred within each health board area during each of the last five years; and what fatalities have resulted therefrom.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

	Eastern	Northern	Southern	Western	Area unknown	Total
1986	6	2	1	1	3	13
1988	2	1	—	2	—	5
1989	3	2	—	3	—	8
1990	2	—	—	2	—	4
TOTAL 1986-90	17	7	1	9	3	37

There was one fatality in the Western board in 1987 and one in the Eastern board in 1989.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what progress is being made in promoting an immunisation programme against hepatitis B in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what groups have been identified as at risk from hepatitis B; and if he can provide figures, as a percentage of each group, for those who have been immunised.

Mr. Hanley: Government policy is that only certain groups and individuals at high risk of contracting the disease should be immunised because of the low incidence of hepatitis B infection in the United Kingdom.

Details of the groups and individuals for whom vaccination against hepatitis B should be considered are given in paragraphs 13.3.5 to 13.3.7 of the United Kingdom Health Departments' 1990 handbook on "Immunisation against Infectious Disease," a copy of which has been placed in the Library. As those at high risk are identified and immunised locally by occupational health physicians or family doctors immunisation figures are not maintained centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the year-by-year number of deaths from AIDS in each health board area.

Mr. Hanley: The number of persons with AIDS who are known to have died each year in Northern Ireland is given in the table. In line with the procedure followed in reports under the AIDS (Control) (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 and to safeguard confidentiality, actual figures in the range of one to nine reported in individual health board areas are not published.

	Number
1985	1
1986	—
1987	1
1988	1
1989	7

[1] To 30 November.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are presently known to have tested HIV positive in each health board area; and how many of these have developed AIDS.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows.

Board area	Cases diagnosed HIV	AIDS
Eastern	53	15
Northern	10	[1]11
Western	13

[1] In line with the procedure followed in reports under the AIDS (Control) (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 and to safeguard confidentiality actual figures in the range of one to nine in individual board areas are not published.

HIV

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if all nursing, medical and auxiliary staff in hospitals, general practices and on-district duties are formally notified when they are dealing with HIV positive patients.

Mr. Hanley: It is the responsibility of health and social services boards to ensure that an assessment is made of the risk of HIV infection to staff from their patients and, with due regard to confidentiality, to inform those who need to know of the potential danger.

Swimming Lessons

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many primary schools in each of the education and library board areas which were participating in swimming instruction programmes before the introduction of the local management of schools system of funding have now ceased to do so; and if he will give numbers for each of the years 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cross-border Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has had specific discussions at meetings of the Anglo-Irish Conference about Republican terrorist incidents with a cross-frontier element which have occurred in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1990; and whether he has had any commitment from the Irish Republic that further security measures are to be put in place.

Dr. Mawhinney: Discussions on security matters form a major part of the business of all Anglo-Irish Conference meetings. Both Governments have been constant in their determination to achieve the greatest possible security co-operation. Progress has been made in a number of areas, including joint threat assessment, liaison structures, technical co-operation and communications. The commitment of both Governments to improving the effectiveness of cross-border co-operation remains unswerving.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Republican terrorist incidents which have occurred in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1990 are estimated to have had a cross-frontier element; and if he will give details.

Dr. Mawhinney: It would not be appropriate to disclose detailed information held by the Royal Ulster Constabulary about incidents in which charges may be brought.

Castlereagh (Ill-treatment Allegations)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much of the compensation paid for alleged ill-treatment in Castlereagh holding centre since June 1989 to clients represented by solicitors Madden and Finucane, was made by way of out-of-court settlements; how many of these complaints were substantiated by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much compensation has been paid for alleged ill-treatment in Castlereagh holding centre since June 1989 to individuals other than clients represented by solicitors Madden and Finucane; what proportion was made by way of out-of-court settlements; how many of these complaints were substantiated by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information about compensation payments is not available in the form requested. Compensation claims against the Chief Constable and complaints against individual members of the RUC are handled separately. Persons claiming compensation do not necessarily allege misconduct by individual officers and records held by the RUC and the police authority do not show whether these persons have also made complaints; nor do their records, or those of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints, show whether complainants are also seeking compensation. The commission, however, in its annual reports, provides information on complaints made by persons arrested under the emergency legislation. From the period 1 January 1989 to 30 September 1991, it dealt with 1,065 such cases of complaint. In 788 cases, the complainant failed to co-operate with the investigating officer, 31 cases were withdrawn and 245 were regarded as unsubstantiated because of insufficient evidence. The commission considered one case to have been substantiated, and the officer concerned was subsequently found not guilty of a disciplinary offence.

Terrorist Murders

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the number of terrorist murders for the period 15 November 1984 to 14 November 1985 and for each succeeding comparable period until 14 November 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of 469 murders, believed to be terrorist-related, were committed during the period 15 November 1984 to 14 November 1991.

The figures for each successive 12-month period are as follows:

	Number
1984-85	43
1985-86	58
1986-87	80
1987-88	82
1988-89	54
1990-91	82

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will detail the percentage of murders in each of the last six years which are attributable to (a) republican terror groups and (b) Loyalist terror groups.

Dr. Mawhinney: Set out in the table are the percentage of murders believed to have been carried out by republican and loyalist groups.

	Republican groups per cent.	Loyalist groups per cent.
1985	89	11
1986	75	25
1987	79	21
1988	74	26
1989	68	32
1990	71	29

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that any licence issued under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 should (a) be to a named individual, (b) refer to a specific badger sett, (c) specify the circumstances under which sett interference may occur and (d) be for a limited period of time.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 12 December at col. 550.

Vegetarian Diets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research projects his Ministry is funding into the nutritional aspects of vegetarian diets, giving the amount spent on each project, the establishment where the work is being carried out, and when the project is due to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is funding one project on nutritional aspects of vegetarian diets. The project is entitled "The Effects of Vegetarian Diet on Hormone Levels and Risks of Osteoporosis". The research is being done in the Department of Chemical Pathology at University College London and the Middlesex School of Medicine. The project will be completed on 17 February 1993 at a cost of £150,000. It is aimed at studying the effects of a vegetarian diet on bone density in women aged 30-55 years. The data gained overall will be of importance to the Department in its responsibility for giving dietary advice to population groups who may be at risk of developing disease.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific evidence he has of (a) nutritional or (b) other deficiencies of a diet which contains no meat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This Ministry is committed to the promotion of healthy eating. This is based on a balanced diet, which normally contains a proper proportion of meat. Those who do not eat meat need to take extra care that their diet contains enough of all the nutrients for health. Meat is a particularly rich source of B vitamins and well absorbed minerals, including iron. People habitually consuming diets which contain little or no meat may need higher iron intakes and thus diet selection needs to be made with much more care. Adolescent girls who avoid meat may be particularly at risk of iron deficiency.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current policy in respect of seeking an exemption under the EC rules for food labelling for irradiated ingredients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am fully committed to providing consumers with information on food labels to enable them to choose between foods which have been irradiated and those which have not. Rules for the labelling of all foods and listed food ingredients which have been irradiated have already been agreed by the EC. Further proposals on food irradiation currently before the Council of Ministers include more detailed rules on the labelling of irradiated ingredients. I am seeking to ensure that the further requirements on ingredient declarations are as comprehensive as practicable.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Hardship

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how long it takes to process a claim by an under 18-year-old for income support on grounds of severe hardship.

Mr. Jack: Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, has informed me that separate information about the processing of claims from under 18-year-olds on grounds of severe hardship is not available. However, the average clearance time for all income support claims was 3·1 days in October 1991. Claims from under 18-year-olds are given priority and a direction for income support under the severe hardship provision is made within 24 hours of the customer being interviewed in the local office.

Income Support

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioners who are in receipt of income support.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 5 November at column 82.

There are about 1·4 million pensioners in receipt of income support where "pensioners" is taken to mean income support claimants who also receive retirement pension. The number is about 1·7 million if the definition is taken as income support claimants aged 60 or over.

Source: 1990 Annual Statistical Enquiry.

Local Offices

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide translation and interpretation facilities in local offices to meet the needs of the ethnic minorities communities.

Miss Widdecombe: The provision of translation and interpreting services in local offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of unemployed people were receiving (a) income support only, (b) unemployment benefit only, (c) income support and unemployment benefit, broken down by sex in each case, at the date for which the most up-to-date information is available.

Mr. Jack: The latest information is shown in the table.

	Income support only	Unemployment benefit only	Income support Unemployment benefit
Males	969,906 (55 per cent.)	315,290 (18 per cent.)	93,094 (5 per cent.)
Females	242,460 (14 per cent.)	137,865 (8 per cent.)	9,062 (1 per cent.)

Note: This information is taken from the Unemployment Benefit Statistics Quarterly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants, May 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The figures in brackets illustrate the number shown as a percentage of all unemployed people receiving benefits for unemployment.

Maxwell Companies (Pension Funds)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he has received any representations before 5 November 1991 from the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation about the pension funds of any companies of which the late Robert Maxwell was a director;

(2) whether he has received any representations before 5 November 1991 from the Occupational Pension Board about the pension funds of any companies of which the late Robert Maxwell was a director.

Miss Widdecombe: No such representations were received.

Social Fund Inspectors

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 31 October;

(2) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 31 October.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Social Fund Commissioner that on 31 October 1991 there were 66 social fund inspectors employed and 3,043 review applications outstanding for more than one month.

Pension Equalisation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the effect of the protocol relating to equalisation of pensions signed at Maastricht;

(2) when he expects to introduce legislation to enforce the protocol on equalisation of pension ages signed at Maastricht; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The implications of the protocol are still being discussed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to issue the Government's discussion paper on equalisation of pension age for the state scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The discussion paper "Options for Equality in State Pension Age"—which, as I said when I made my statement to the House on 26 June, will help to inform debate by exploring the issues and providing background information—will be published tomorrow.

Occupational Pension Funds

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward regulations relating to (a) the disclosure of information on occupational pension funds arising from the Social Security Act 1988, (b) limited price indication, (c) self-investment (both arising from the Social Security Act 1990) and (d) contracting-out rebates for the next quinquennium.

Miss Widdecombe: We shall bring forward amending regulations relating to disclosure of information in the new year, shortly after the publication of a booklet giving guidance to trustees on the exercise of their function.

Implementation of limited price indexation was delayed because of the uncertainties arising from the Barber judgment. In the light of the Maastricht protocol we are considering whether and when the necessary regulations should now be introduced. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 12 December at column 527 in relation to self-investment regulations, and my reply to the hon. Member on 15 November at column 685 in relation to the contracting-out rebate.

Chief Adjudication Officer's Report

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the seventh annual report of the Chief Adjudication Officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The report is being published today. Its findings point to improvement in some areas of adjudication, including those in the Employment Service, while in some others, standards remain disappointing. The Chief Adjudication Officer welcomes the positive response made to the majority of recommendations in his 1989-90 report, and goes on to make further recommendations to build on the progress made so far. He welcomes the commitment of the chief executives of both the Benefits Agency and the Employment Service to the improvement of adjudication standards as an integral part of customer service.

The recommendations are being considered, and will be the subject of a formal response in due course.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been, in percentage terms, the proportion to the index of average earnings, for a family consisting of husband, wife, and two children aged five and 10, of (a) child benefit, (b) unemployment benefit and (c) sickness benefit during the first six months of sickness, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1991]: For many families, unemployment benefit and sickness benefit are not the sole sources of benefit income.

The information requested is given in the table:

Date[1]	Child benefit (per cent. of earnings)	Unemployment benefit (per cent. of earnings)	Sickness benefit (per cent. of earnings)
November 1979	7·0	29·2	29·2
November 1980	7·0	26·6	26·6
November 1981	7·0	25·4	25·4
November 1982	7·3	25·6	25·6
November 1983	7·4	25·1	24·1
November 1984	7·3	24·5	23·5
November 1985	7·0	24·7	23·6
July 1986	6·7	23·6	22·6
April 1987	6·5	22·7	21·7
April 1988	5·9	21·5	20·6

April 1990	4·9	20·4	19·6
April 1991	4·8	20·9	20·0

[1] Date used is month of uprating for the year in question.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioners who are in receipt of housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: In May 1990, there were 2,067,000 housing benefit cases in Great Britain where either the claimant, or the partner, or both were aged 60 or over.

Source: Housing Benefit Management Information System annual 1 per cent. sample May 1990.

DEFENCE

Women Employees

16. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many women are employed in each of the top three civil servant grades in his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: At present, none. My Department did not recruit women into the fast stream until 1971 and those in the first intakes have yet to attain the most senior positions.

RNAD Ernesettle

17. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends announcing his decision about the future of RNAD Ernesettle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall announce a decision after giving full consideration to the representations made by the trade unions and other interested parties.

Competitive Tendering

19. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the competitive tendering process.

Mr. Alan Clark: I believe that competition in the procurement of defence equipment has been successful in providing value for money both to my Department and to the taxpayer. This assessment is supported by the Committee of Public Accounts in its recent report on "Initiatives in Defence Procurement".

Diversification

20. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about diversification in the defence industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: Decisions affecting the future of a company, including its product lines, are best left to the commercial judgment of its management.

Peace-keeping Forces

21. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he has taken of future United Kingdom involvement in European and United Nations peace-keeping forces in determining the reorganisation of British regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The size and structure of Britain's Army for the 1990s has been determined in the light of a thorough assessment of its likely future commitments.

Horses (Ceremonial Duties)

22. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on procuring additional horses for ceremonial purposes during the past year; from which sources the horses were procured; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of £170,000 was spent in 1990-91 on horses purchased from the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. About 55 horses are purchased each year to replace those which are retired from active duty.

Territorial Army

23. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the military effectiveness of individual units is one of the factors he is taking into account in deciding the fate of Territorial Army battalions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. There is no objective definition of military effectiveness, which is therefore not a suitable criterion to use in formulating such decisions.

27. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future role and size of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made on 10 December at columns 733-48.

Nuclear Testing

24. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, when he next meets the Secretary General of NATO, he will discuss with him the implications of a moratorium on nuclear testing.

Mr. King: I last met the Secretary General of NATO at the NATO Defence Planning Committee in Brussels on 12 and 13 December.

Scottish Regiments

25. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current total numbers of regiments recruited in Scotland and the projected numbers after the envisaged cutbacks in the number of battalions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 12 regiments from the Infantry, Royal Armoured Corps and Royal Artillery who recruit from Scotland. Following restructuring there will be 10. Other arms and services are drawn from all parts of the United Kingdom, including Scotland.

Property Sales

26. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much Ministry of Defence property has been sold in the last five years; and what value was received for it.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the five years to 1990-91, the last year for which records are complete, the Ministry of Defence sold its freehold interest in land totalling 7,280 acres, and 8,073 service and civilian dwellings which, taken together, generated receipts totalling £454 million.

Libya

28. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions Ministers and officials of his Department have had with their Libyan counterparts over the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Sleeping Accommodation

29. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total of unused sleeping accommodation on Ministry of Defence premises in the Greater London area and surrounding counties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Royal Navy

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for reductions in personnel and vessels in the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our plans to move to a smaller and better equipped Navy remain as set out in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991. We will move to these lower force levels while introducing newer and more capable vessels. Navy manpower will reduce from the present total requirement of 63,000 to around 55,000 by the mid-1990s.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the medical service of the Queen Elizabeth military hospital is for civilians.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: About 60 per cent of patients treated in 1990 were civilians (including service dependants).

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Her Majesty's Government first learned of the military testing role of the Al-Atheer site in Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Al-Atheer site was visited by the second (22 June to 3 July 1991) and fourth (27 July to 10 August 1991) nuclear inspections teams. The sixth nuclear inspection team (22 to 30 September 1991) confirmed the linkage between Al-Atheer and the Iraqi nuclear weapons programme.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the vessels currently in service with the Royal Fleet Auxiliary, giving the date of construction and the life expectancy of each vessel.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The names and construction completion dates of the ships currently in service with the Royal Fleet Auxiliary are listed below.

Ship	Completion date
Olwen	1965
Olna	1966
Olmeda	1965
Grey Rover	1970
Blue Rover	1970
Gold Rover	1974
Black Rover	1974
Brambleleaf	1976
Bayleaf	1982
Orangeleaf	1982
Oakleaf	1981
Resource	1967
Regent	1967
Fort Grange	1978
Fort Austin	1979
Sir Bedivere	1967
Sir Geraint	1967
Sir Percivale	1968
Sir Tristram	[1]1965
Sir Galahad	1987
Argus	[2]1988
Diligence	[2]1984

Notes:
[1] Rebuilt in 1985.
[2] RFA in-service date after conversion from commercial use.

All RFA vessels are maintained to Department of Transport and Lloyd's survey standards and their service life expectancy is kept under regular review. It is not our policy to provide details on the life expectancy of individual vessels.

Naval Procurement

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which major naval procurement decisions are due in (a) the next three months, (b) the next six months and (c) the next financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On current plans we hope to make announcements on the order of further type 23 frigates, and on our procurement plans for an aviation support ship early next year. We plan to place the order for the fourth Trident submarine, subject to the satisfactory outcome of negotiations.

HMS Challenger

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in relation to the shipping companies or others bidding for HMS Challenger; and what terms have been agreed to by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 8 July at column 285. The position is unchanged.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the number of Her Majesty's forces from whom he expects to receive requests for financial assistance in relation to housing finance in relation to the decline in numbers arising from "Options for Change", the proportion of these in Scotland, the total sums involved and the Scottish proportion, and information of the relationship between his Department and relevant local authorities in order to overcome the problems arising from service personnel leaving the forces in considerable numbers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible to predict the number or geographical distribution of those leaving the armed forces over the next few years who might seek such assistance.

My Department is liaising closely with the Department of the Environment and the Scottish Office concerning the problems which may be faced by those service personnel leaving the forces as a result of restructuring.

Army Resources, York

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to inspect Army resources in York.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend visited units in north Yorkshire last month, although not York itself.

SCOTLAND

Stonyetts Hospital

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of responding to the petitioners and others who made representations against the closure of Stonyetts hospital in terms of (a) administration and personnel, (b) stationery and (c) postage; and if he will indicate whether the latter was first or second class.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows: (a) £3,796; (b) £318 and (c) £1,350.

Of the 7,401 responses, only 130 were issued by first class post.

Oak Trees

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Forestry Commission's policy on giving grants for the growing of traditional English oak, Quercus robur; and what proposals the European Commission has made on genetic purity of tree species.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The Forestry Commission pays a higher rate of grant for the planting or regeneration of broadleaved species, including Quercus robur. In ancient semi-natural woodlands, the commission will grant-aid the establishment only of species which are appropriate to the ecology of the site; this will often include Quercus robur.

EC directive No. 66/404 introduced arrangements for the registration of sources of good quality seed with the aim of improving the genetic quality of trees being used within the Community. EC directive No. 71/161 requires that tree seed offered for sale must have less than 1 per cent. impurities, which includes seed from another species. There are, however, derogations from these requirements in favour of the United Kingdom which permit the collection and planting of acorns from non-registered stands of native oak.

Cetaceans

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on the establishment of a programme for the retrieval of carcases of stranded small cetaceans in Scotland to conduct post-mortems on these animals and to analyse tissue samples for contaminants.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: A contract, funded by the Department of the Environment, has been offered to the veterinary investigation service of the Scottish Agricultural College. The co-ordinator for the programme of retrieval of carcases and research on stranded small cetaceans in Scotland is expected to take up post early in the new year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what work is being carried out by his Department to investigate the status of small cetaceans and the threats facing them; and how much money has been allocated to this work each year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The Department's scientists work closely with other researchers in the United Kingdom and take part in international groups such as the ICES study group on seals and small cetaceans. A number of groups are funding research into the status of the bottle-nosed dolphin colony in the Moray firth. The Government's own effort will be increased in 1992 with the appointment of a co-ordinator on strandings of cetaceans in Scotland and introduction of new arrangements for voluntary reporting of accidental capture of cetaceans by fishermen. Much of the Department's work is ad hoc, when strandings or accidental captures occur, and detailed costings of this effort are not available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what budget has been allocated to the analysis of contaminant levels in stranded small cetaceans; and which body or institution will be conducting this work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Research on levels and significance of contaminants in small cetaceans is undertaken by Scottish Office scientists as part of a wider programme of studies on contaminants in the aquatic environment. Additional work on stranded or accidentally captured cetaceans will be undertaken next year and reports and analyses of strandings in Scotland will be co-ordinated through funds provided by DOE. A new system for fishermen to report, voluntarily, accidental capture of cetaceans is also being introduced. The full costs of this work will depend on the number of carcases reported and retrieved for analysis.

Glenesk Foods, Brechin

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of the financial consequences for the local economy of the closure of the Glenesk Foods Ltd. factory in Brechin; and what action he intends to take.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The information received by my Department from HL Foods indicates that the Glenesk Foods Ltd. factory in Brechin is not faced with complete closure. HL Foods has decided to cease the factory's canning operations but will continue to produce ready meals at the site. Such matters are best left to the commercial judgment of the company concerned.

The local enterprise company, Scottish Enterprise Tayside, is actively involved in the soft fruit and vegetable industries in Tayside through a number of initiatives. The enterprise company has already held meetings with those involved at Glenesk Foods to establish the likely effect on soft fruit suppliers and to develop, in partnership with others, an action plan to minimise the effect of the job losses. The full range of Employment Service activities will also be available to assist those who have lost their jobs to gain employment.

Set-aside Scheme

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers in Scotland have applied for the set-aside scheme for 1991-92; how many hectares of land are involved; what was the total expenditure for set-aside schemes for each year since 1988; how many farmers benefited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: A total of 131 farmers have applied to enter the one-year set-aside scheme for 1991-92, proposing to set aside a total of 2,345 hectares; 122 farmers have applied to enter into an agreement under the five-year set-aside scheme, with effect from 1 October 1991, proposing to set aside a total of 4,542 hectares.

Claims made and expenditure incurred on the five-year set-aside scheme are as follows:

Set-aside year	Number of claims	Expenditure £
1988-89	364	2,312,558

Claims for the 1990-91 year, ended 30 September 1991, are currently being processed. It is estimated that 658 claims will be paid, amounting in total to £4,670,000.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which crops were proposed for each acre of agreed set-aside land for each year since 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: No agricultural crops may be produced on set-aside land. A green plant cover must be established on land set-aside as fallow, by sowing or by allowing the naturally occurring vegetation to regenerate. No plant species are prescribed for sown plant cover.

Under the non-agricultural use option, set-aside land may be used to produce hay for horses or to grow crops intended as cover for game birds in a commercial shooting enterprise. Such cover crops must include a mixture of appropriate species and may not be harvested. No records are kept of the specific areas used for hay or game crops under this option.

Helicopter Companies

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the regulations governing foreign ownership of British passenger fixed-wing airlines apply to British passenger helicopter companies.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

There are no such regulations. However, under section 65(3) of the Civil Aviation Act 1982, if the Civil Aviation Authority is not satisfied that an applicant for an air transport licence is either a United Kingdom national or a body specified in section 65(3), it must refuse to grant a licence unless the Secretary of State for Transport gives his consent. Similarly, under section 66(3) of the Act, if the CAA has reason to believe that the holder of a licence is no longer either a United Kingdom national or a body specified in section 65(3), it has a duty to inform the Secretary of State accordingly and, if he so directs, revoke the licence. Sections 65(3) and 66(3) of the 1982 Act apply both to passenger fixed-wing aircraft and to passenger helicopter companies.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 18 December 1991

HEALTH

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the information available to him on the range of charges levied by local authorities on couples wishing to adopt from abroad.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. The Department has advised local authorities that there is no objection to prospective adopters being asked to meet such charges as the authorities consider reasonable for work associated with intercountry adoption.

General Practitioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much general practitioners in the United Kingdom have been overpaid under their last year's contract; what is the average overpayment per general practitioner; how much has been reclaimed; how much has been written off; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington South (Mr. Butler) on 7 November at columns 259-60.

In 1990-91 estimated gross payments to GPs in Great Britain, under the terms of their contract, exceeded the intended level by approximately £178 million. The average overpayment per GP was £5,951.

As an interim measure, an amount of £7·5 million—£250 per GP—was reclaimed from GPs' remuneration in 1991-92, in accordance with the recommendations of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body in its 21st report.

The Government decided this autumn to waive recovery of £63 million of the overpayment, or £2,100 per GP, which was attributable to special factors unique to the first year of the new GP contract. Further decisions will be taken on the handling of the remaining sum in 1992, when we have further information.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the non-executive directors of the Freeman hospital trust and the Northumbria ambulance services trust, and give the remuneration presently received by them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The non-executive directors of the Freeman hospital trust are:

Mr. Richard Middleton
Mrs. Marion Border
Miss Hilary Goodworth
Mr. John Ward
Dr. Roger Freeman

The non-executive directors of the Northumbria ambulance services trust are:

Mr. Alan Ferguson
Mr. Peter Moth
Mrs. Jacqueline Higson
Mr. Albert Knight
Mr. Douglas Smith

All non-executive directors currently receive £5,000 per annum.

Northern RHA

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the services of the chief executive of the Northern regional health authority ceased.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Mr. Douglas Hague stood down from the post of chief executive of Northern regional health authority on 13 November 1991.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the present non-executive directors of the Northern regional health authority; what recent resignations or new appointments have been made and when they became effective; and what remunerations are currently received by non-executive directors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The non-executive members of the Northern regional health authority are:

Mr. Tony Brown
Professor Michael Rawlins
Mr. Peter Reay
Mr. Roger Spoor

There has been one vacancy since 31 October when Mrs. Anne Galbraith resigned her position to become chairman of the Royal Victoria infirmary and associated hospitals NHS trust on 1 November 1991.

All non-executive members receive £5,000 per annum.

Mental Health Hospitals (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were committed under the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983 to care in mental health hospitals in Liverpool during each of the past five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest figures of patients formally admitted to NHS hospitals and units in Liverpool district health authority under the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983 are shown in the table.

Year	Formal admissions Liverpool DHA
1987-88	129
1988-89	141
1989-90	162

Source: 1987-88 onwards—Korner aggregate KH15.

Comparable figures are not available centrally for the period before 1987-88.

Mental Health

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the percentages from each ethnic group of patients committed under the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

St. Thomas's Hospital

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to St. Thomas's hospital to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 10 to 14 February 1992.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department supports a link line telephone service which provides guidance to small firms wishing to know how to do business with the national health service, and has published a guide "Businesslinks: A suppliers' guide", which was revised in January 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library.

ENERGY

Piper B Platform

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Piper B platform to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Wakeham: I understand that, under the procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 20 January to Friday 24 January.

Orimulsion

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the studies carried out by National Power and PowerGen by Mr. G. H. Hadley on orimulsion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. The type and quantity of fuel used by the electricity companies is an operational matter for the companies concerned, subject to emission limits imposed by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the level of subsidy being offered to the United Kingdom generators by the Venezuelan Government in relation to sales of orimulsion fuel oil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have no evidence of any subsidies being offered by the Venezuelan Government in relation to sales of orimulsion.

Home Energy Labelling

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps have been taken to develop and encourage schemes for home energy labelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Home energy labelling tells householders, landlords and those responsible for housing stock how energy efficient their housing is. The Government have been considering how to promote the take-up of energy labelling in the United Kingdom and how best to ensure that the existence of different labelling schemes does not confuse the consumer.

With the co-operation of the National Energy Foundation and MVM Starpoint, two organisations at the forefront of home energy labelling, the Government have decided to introduce a standard assessment procedure—SAP—for rating the energy performance of homes. This will provide consumers with a reference point and so enable them to make comparisons between labels, such as those issued on the MVM Starpoint scheme and the national home energy rating—NHER—scheme. Like MVM Starpoint and NHER labels, the Government's procedure is based on the Building Research Establishment's domestic energy model. It will be published as a BRE paper.

The Government will require any labelling scheme wishing to use the SAP to meet certain quality standards. They will therefore only authorise organisations to use the SAP only if they undertake to:

obtain a BS5750 certificate of quality assurance based on a Government quality statement. The quality statement will be designed to ensure reliability and consistency of SAP ratings, for example through a requirement that the labelling schemes deliver ratings within a specified number of points in the SAP scale in a specified proportion of cases. The required quality statement will be published after further consultation obtain confirmation from the Building Research Establishment that their computer software properly incorporates the new standard assessment procedure; provide the Government with certain statistical data.

In view of their proven record and in order to avoid any disruption to the activities of the existing labelling schemes, the Government will give interim authorisation to MVM Starpoint and the National Energy Foundation to use the Government's SAP, upon confirmation by BRE that their software properly incorporates the SAP. This authorisation will be for 12 months, during which period they will be expected to seek certification under BS5750.

The Government hope by this initiative to expand the market for home energy labels by reducing the risk of confusion arising from an inability to compare ratings. They will be keeping developments under close review and will further refine these arrangements should that prove desirable. They will in due course bring forward proposals for consultation on the incorporation of the SAP into the requirements of building regulations.

WALES

Bats

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the European bats agreement is now binding on local planning authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is hoped that the agreement on the conservation of bats in Europe, which was signed by the United Kingdom earlier this month, will come into force next year. The agreement will be binding, on the national Governments who are parties to it and not on local authorities. The United Kingdom already meets its potential obligations through the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which apply where relevant to local authorities.

Political Initiatives

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans for new political initiatives in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have plans for several new such initiatives for Wales which I shall announce at the appropriate time.

"The Rural Initiative"

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of publishing "The Rural Initiative"; and how many copies were printed.

Mr. David Hunt: The rural initiative publication cost £18,444. A total of 1,750 copies were printed in English and 750 copies in Welsh. Printers and designers were selected as a result of competitive tendering.

Housing Revenue Accounts (Subsidy)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has completed his consideration of his 1992-93 housing revenue account subsidy proposals; and when he expects to make his subsidy determinations.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1992-93 have been made today following consideration of the responses to consultation. I am placing copies of the determinations in the Library of the House.

For rent guidelines the proposal for an average increase of £2.14 is confirmed. As usual, guideline increases for individual authorities vary according to the capital value of their stock.

For management and maintenance allowances, the proposed average increase from £712 per dwelling in the current year to £766 per dwelling in 1992-93, an average increase of 7·5 per cent., is similarly confirmed. Under targeting arrangements, increases for individual authorities take account of the condition of their housing stock.

The rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances are the assumptions to be made for subsidy purposes. It is for councils to set their own rents and to decide how much to spend on managing and repairing their housing stock within their legal obligations.

DEFENCE

Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the differences in percentage terms between the outright annuality anomaly for 31 March 1976 and 31 March to 1 April 1991 for (a) a brigadier's pension, (b) an air commodore's pension, (c) a senior naval captain's pension; and what steps he intends taking to remove these anomalies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Scales of retired pay for brigadiers, air commodores and senior naval captains are the same. For officers in those ranks retiring on the maximum point on the scale, which is achieved by 34 years reckonable service, the retired pay currently received expressed as a percentage of the rate awarded for retirement on 1st April 1991 is as follows:

90·3 per cent, where retired pay first came into payment on 31 March 1976.

84·7 per cent, where retired pay first came into payment on 31 March 1991.

Initial awards of retired pay are derived from rates of military salary in force at the date of retirement. They are subsequently increased through index-linking arrangements which take into account movements in the retail prices index. The Ministry of Defence has no plans to adjust rates of retired pay previously awarded in accordance with normal rules, other than through the normal index-linking arrangements.

National and Wildlife Parks (Military Use)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid in each of the last five years to the Duchy of Cornwall for permission to use land in the Dartmoor national park for military use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is commercially confidential between the Duchy of Cornwall and the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what grants were paid to Dartmoor hill farmers in each of the last five years as compensation for restricted grazing as a result of live firing in the National Park.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Compensation is paid to registered commoners. Over the last five years the amounts approved for payment as a result of live firing are as follows:

Year	£
1988	81,101
1989	81,101
1990	91,668
1991	91,668

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how long the 24 houses between 2 and 48 Nyland road, Swindon, have been empty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence houses in Nyland road have been vacant since they were handed back to the Ministry of Defence by the United States Air Force. The houses were handed back in three stages in December 1990 and in April and September 1991.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will enter into a management agreement with a housing association or the local authority to use the 24 empty houses in Nyland road, Swindon, for rented accommodation;

(2) if he will transfer immediately the ownership of the 24 houses between 2 and 48 Nyland road, Swindon, to a housing association or local authority.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. A number of the houses are being retained for use by the Ministry of Defence and will be occupied in January 1992. Those houses which are surplus are to be offered for sale through the scheme to sell surplus married quarters at a discount to service personnel.

Royal Marines

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce opportunities for the employment of women in the Royal Marines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is intended to extend the employment of women in the armed forces to include service in the Royal Marine band service. The recruiting process will be started shortly with a view to receiving the first female recruits at the Royal Marine school of music in the autumn of 1992. Women will serve on the same terms and conditions as male bandsmen. They will receive the same training, including weapons training, and will be expected to achieve the same standards as their male counterparts. Studies into the feasibility of women serving in the corps as commandos are continuing.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Juliette"

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration has been given to the prosecution of Arrow, publishers of "Juliette", by the Marquis de Sade, under the Obscene Publications Act 1959; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The question of prosecution is a matter for the acting Director of Public Prosecutions and is at present under consideration by him.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Northumbria Police Authority

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors he takes into account when allocating resources to individual police authorities; and how these factors apply to the Northumbria police authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Car Crime

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to chief constables on cautioning or arresting young people caught taking away other people's motor vehicles; and what guidance is given to magistrates concerning sentencing policy for these offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidance on the decision to caution is contained in Home Office circular 59/1990, a copy of which is in the Library. There is no guidance about the exercise of the power of arrest.

Within the statutory powers provided by Parliament, sentencing in individual cases is for the courts to decide.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he plans in sentencing policy related to young offenders and (a) car crime and (b) house breaking.

Mr. John Patten: Sentencing in individual cases is a matter for the courts within the powers given by Parliament. The Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Bill now before Parliament strengthens courts' powers to deal with the unauthorised taking of motor vehicles where there is dangerous driving, damage or injury. Courts have the power to impose a custodial sentence of up to 14 years on offenders convicted of domestic burglary.

Immigration

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been admitted for settlement in the United Kingdom for each year since 1979 from (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Bangladesh.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of citizens of India, Pakistan and Bangladesh accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in the years 1979-90 is published in tables 22 and 14, respectively, of the 1987 and 1990 volumes of the annual Home Office Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom"—Cm 415 and Cm 1571). Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Government Security

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he is able to give on the cost of Metropolitan police security operations around the Palace of Westminster, parliamentary outbuildings and Departments of state located in and around Whitehall.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice to give details of security costs.

TRANSPORT

Harbours (Accounts)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, for each county, the statutory harbour undertakings which are required by section 42(2)(b) of the Harbours Act 1964 to send him a copy of their annual accounts, stating in each case, the names of the harbour or harbours covered by the undertaking, and the financial year for which accounts were most recently submitted.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am writing to the hon. Lady with this information.

Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on the recommendation put to him by the board of Tees and Hartlepool port authority concerning the sale of its undertaking.

Mr. Rifkind: Under the provisions of the Ports Act 1991, it was for the THFA board to arrange for the sale of shares in its successor company and to recommend to me which bid should be preferred, having regard to the provisions of the Act and objectives of the sale which were agreed with me.

The agreed objectives included encouraging disposal to managers and staff of the whole or a substantial part of the equity share capital; seeking best open market price subject to the other objectives; continuing operation of the Port in ways which are beneficial to the local economy; maintenance of a viable and competitive port operation; maintenance of the port as a separate entity with day to day management and control located in Teesside; use of THPA's assets for the development of the port business and for the promotion of developments which are locally beneficial.

My Department and its advisers kept closely in touch with the THPA board as it carried out the sale process. I am satisfied that the board discharged its responsibilities in a fair and proper manner. In particular, I am satisfied that it considered carefully each of the bids in relation to the agreed objectives of sale.

The key issues which the board included in its evaluation were: independence, long-term stability, benefit to the community, contribution to the port, credibility, acceptability, employee participation and price. Having thoroughly scrutinised all the bids, the THPA board concluded that the bid by Teesside Holdings Limited, although not the largest in monetary terms, was the most consistent with the authority's privatisation objectives and, taken overall, the most beneficial to the port, its employees and the Teesside community generally. As regards employee participation, the Teesside Holdings bid includes provision for 475,000 shares to be reserved for THPA employees, who will receive one free share for every share subscribed for—that is, 5 per cent. of the proposed equity share capital. Accordingly, the THPA board has recommended to me that its successor company should be sold to Teesside Holdings Limited.

I have considered the THPA recommendation carefully. In particular, I have noted that the price of £180 million offered by Teesside Holdings is at the top end of the range of an independent valuation carried out by THPA prior to the sale. I have also noted the THPA board's view that the Teesside Holdings' bid makes the most convincing plans for a prosperous and growing future for the port, including specific capital expenditure proposals. The bid is also considered to demonstrate the greatest commitment to the long-term development and stability of the authority's undertaking for the benefit of Teesside.

I am satisfied that the THPA board's recommendation best meets the agreed objectives of the sale. I have therefore written to the chairman of THPA to say that I am minded to give my formal consent to the sale of the authority's undertaking to Teesside Holdings Limited as soon as I am able to do so. This will be possible only after the scheme of transfer submitted by the authority under section 9(1) of the Ports Act 1991 and the order providing for a levy on disposals of land to be made under section 17 of the Act have come into effect. The latter is subject to an affirmative resolution of the House and is expected to be debated immediately after the Christmas recess.

RMS St. Helena

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the operation and management of the RMS St. Helena with particular reference to the proposed working conditions of the officers and ratings.

Mr. McLoughlin: The working conditions of the officers and ratings of the RMS St. Helena are properly the concern of the managers—the St. Helena Shipping Company Limited. They are currently negotiating new terms in line with current practices throughout the shipping industry.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Transport provides guidance on transport matters to any business requiring it, whatever its size. Such financial assistance as the Department provides to businesses, for example towards the costs of transporting goods by rail rather than by unsuitable roads, under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974, is available to eligible businesses whatever the size of the company.

The Department's procurement unit encourages small firms to supply the Department, mainly through the pamphlet "Selling to the Department of Transport". The Department selectively vets the suitability of individual companies in accordance with the Department's particular needs, not the size of the company.

Exeter Bypass

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects (a) Acer Consultants to deliver their report on a hypothetical Exeter northern bypass to his Department and (b) when he expects it to commence Ministerial consideration.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 December 1991]: I hope to receive the report on whether there is a need for a bypass to the north and west of Exeter in January 1992 and to give it consideration then.

M20 Widening

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to withdraw his 200 notification requirement on the planning authority for land charges searches in relation to properties between junctions 3 and 5 of the M20, following his announcement of the line of his Department's widening scheme.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 December 1991]: Pursuant to an agreement between themselves and the Law Society, local authorities will be required to reveal the existence of the proposals for widening M20 between junctions 3 and 5 in response to searches by prospective purchasers of properties within 200 m of the scheme until such time as the widening is implemented.

A27

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake to conduct a full environmental impact assessment of the proposed routes for improvement of the A27; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 December 1991]: Public consultation is taking place at present on the Lewes-Polegate section of the A27. Consideration of the environmental effects of this road scheme has been a continuous process throughout the planning and design stages. An appraisal of environmental effects of all the A27 consultation routes is outlined in the consultation brochure and at the local consultation exhibitions. Further detailed environmental appraisal will be carried out as the proposals develop.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Spirits

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue yield to the Exchequer of duties and taxes on spirits in the last financial year.

Mr. Gillian Shephard: The revenue yield in 1990-91 was estimated to be £2·4 billion, of which duties accounted for £1·7 billion and VAT accounted for £0·7 billion.

Oil and Gas Production

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield received by Her Majesty's Government from oil and from gas production in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 both in terms of actual amounts and by current valuation.

Mr. Maude: Annual revenues to the Exchequer from the North sea, at current prices and at 1991-92 prices, have been as follows:

	Current prices	1991-92 prices[1]
1979-80	2,313	5,349
1980-81	3,743	7,305
1981-82	6,492	11,564
1982-83	7,822	13,007
1983-84	8,798	13,973
1984-85	12,035	18,197
1985-86	11,348	16,276
1986-87	4,783	6,630
1987-88	4,618	6,076
1988-89	3,168	3,880
1989-90	2,368	2,729
1990-91	2,498	2,673
[2]1991-92	1,200	1,200

[1] By reference to movements in the GDP market prices implied deflator.
[2] Forecast.

Departmental Relocation

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to relocate part of Her Majesty's Treasury out of central London.

Mr. Maples: The Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency—the Government centre for information systems—is part of HM Treasury and is currently located partly in central London and partly in Norwich. I have decided that, with the exception of a small London base, it should be wholly located in Norwich. The move will involve a little over 200 posts and will be phased over the next three years; I expect the greater part to take place in 1993-94.

Business Investment

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table giving business investment measured in current prices as a percentage of gross domestic product, measured in current prices for each year since 1974, including quarterly figures since 1988, and the average for periods 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The latest estimates are available on the CSO database which may be accessed through the House of Commons Library. Business investment is defined as private sector and public corporations gross domestic fixed capital formation, excluding purchases less sales of land and existing buildings and private sector investment in dwellings. The database identifier formula for business investment at current prices is DECR minus (GGAG + DFHV + AAUC + AAUG + DEET). The identifier for gross domestic product at current market prices is CAOB.

THE ARTS

Arts and Disability

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he received a copy of the Arts Council directory on arts and disability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I received a copy of the arts and disability directory when it was issued by the Arts Council. I warmly welcome this initiative and commend the directory to individuals and organisations seeking information or wishing to extend their work in this important area of arts and disability.

ENVIRONMENT

Climate Change

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the recent study entitled "The Potential Socio-Economic Effects of Climate Change", produced by the environmental change unit of Oxford University.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the London Docklands development corporation about provision of sporting and leisure facilities within the LDDC area.

Mr. Portillo: The promotion of facilities for sport and leisure forms part of the LDDC's agreed strategic aim to improve the social infrastructure of London docklands. The development programmes relating to this aim are set out in the 1991 corporate plan which I discussed with the corporation earlier this year.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide funds for ex-service housing associations and other bodies to help meet the demand for additional houses from the service men and women leaving the armed forces as a result of "Options for Change".

Mr. Yeo: The Government are making available substantially increased resources for housing associations to provide for people in priority need. This programme will be of benefit to the generality of families in high need of subsidised rented housing, who may include some households leaving services accommodation.

Meadow Well Estate, North Shields

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects and programmes that he has specifically targeted at the Meadow Well estate, North Shields, Tyne and Wear since 1979; and how he evaluates their outcome.

Mr. Yeo: The local targeting of expenditure under the urban programme and estate action is primarily the responsibility of the local authorities which bid for and deliver these programmes.

Since 1979, the Department has funded an annual urban programme in North Tyneside, for expenditure on projects related to the defined inner area, which includes the Meadow Well estate. In 1988 an estate action scheme was approved for part of the north Meadow Well. The authority has very recently been given the go-ahead to work up estate action proposals to the rest of north Meadow Well.

In addition, the work of the Tyne and Wear development corporation includes activities of benefit to the Meadow Well estate.

In each of these programmes the local authority, or the UDC respectively, are required to monitor projects, and sample monitoring of a selection of projects is carried out by the Department's regional office.

Waste Regulation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on advertising material to alert waste carriers to the requirement to register with waste regulation authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Department of the Environment, in conjunction with the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office, issued a free explanatory leaflet entitled "If you carry waste, this will affect you". The cost of printing and distributing 250,000 copies of this leaflet was £17,751. A further 100,000 copies are being printed, at a cost of £2,109.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against assessment of uniform business rate for 1990-91 are awaiting completion; if any extra staff have been employed to speed the progress of such appeals; and when he expects all appeals against assessment of uniform business rate for 1990-91 to be completed.

Mr. Key: Ratepayers had six months from 1 April 1990 in which to make proposals to alter their 1990 rating assessments and valuation officers then had a further six months to settle the proposal before the matter became an appeal. Most proposals were not received as appeals to tribunals until the latter part of that financial year.

At the end of September 1991, valuation and community charge tribunals in England had outstanding some 597,000 non-domestic rating appeals, following the clearance of 90,000. The tribunals have recruited extra staff and were provided with computer systems. Staffing levels are kept under review. The speed at which appeals are cleared is primarily a matter for the individual tribunals.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what aspects of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will affect small firms; and when the regulations will come into effect.

Mr. Trippier: Many aspects of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will affect businesses, large and small; They include:

Part I

Integrated pollution control (applies to new processes and substantial changes to existing processes from 1 April 1991; being phased in for existing processes over five years).

Local authority air pollution control (the final stage of introduction is 1 April 1992; parts were introduced on 1 April and 1 October 1991).

Part II

New and extended controls on waste management (the duty of care together with associated Regulations and a Code of Practice come into force on 1 April 1992; we propose to bring into force other measures governing the collection, treatment and disposal of waste and the waste management licensing system by April 1992).

Part III

Statutory nuisance including emissions from premises of dust, smell, effluvia, noise and non-dark smoke which are prejudicial to health or a nuisance; improvement of existing legislation (came into force on 1 January 1991).

Part IV

Package of measures to deal with litter, including powers for local authorities to tackle litter problems caused by certain businesses (an order specifying types of firms affected came into effect on 1 July 1991).

Part V

Introduction of cost recovery for regulation of premises under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 (started from 1 April 1991).

Part VI

Genetically Modified Organisms (it is intended to make regulations that could come into force in 1992).

Part VIII

Miscellaneous; including the introduction of licensing for dumping waste at sea within UK Continental Shelf Limits; and, of greater relevance to small firms powers to make regulations prohibiting or restricting the importation, supply, use or storage of harmful substances or articles and to require their disposal, as well as to require manufacturers, importers or suppliers of chemicals specified in orders to provide information on their properties and use and to carry out testing to obtain such information.

The Department of the Environment has prepared a publication entitled "A Guide to the Environmental Protection Act 1990", which is available free to small firms and others.

Environmental Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list details, at 1991 prices, of expenditure by his Department on environmental research and protection for each available year since 1979-80.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's expenditure in 1991 prices on environmental research broken down by main policy areas since 1979-80 is as follows:

£ million

	Planning, local government and countryside	Environmental protection	Water	Radioactive waste	Total
1979-80	12·4	10·2	6·1	11·1	39·7
1980-81	10·7	7·0	8·6	18·0	44·2
1981-82	9·0	8·5	6·5	15·6	39·7
1982-83	6·7	7·4	5·9	13·3	33·3
1983-84	4·8	6·6	5·7	13·4	30·5
1984-85	4·6	5·6	5·0	12·8	27·9
1985-86	5·5	7·7	4·6	15·1	32·9
1986-87	4·7	9·3	4·6	14·2	32·8
1987-88	4·5	8·9	4·8	13·9	32·0
1988-89	4·7	10·7	7·0	11·0	33·5
1989-90	4·0	14·2	9·8	7·9	35·9
1990-91	4·9	20·4	4·5	8·6	38·4

Compiled figures for my Department's expenditure on environmental protection before 1985-86 are not readily available. Overall expenditure by my Department on environmental protection in 1991 prices from 1985-86 to 1990-91 is as follows. Details of this expenditure are given in figure 6, page 11 of the Department's 1991 annual report.

	£ million
1985-86	89·9
1986-87	118·3
1987-88	167·7
1988-89	73·3
1989-90	145·1
1990-91	218·5

Development Plans

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will lay before Parliament the new regulations on development plan procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales today laid before Parliament the Town and Country Planning (Development Plan) Regulations 1991—SI 1991/2794. The Departments are also issuing today a circular describing the arrangements for handling the transition from the current development plans system to the new.

The regulations take account of the responses made to the proposals issued for consultation in September. Overall, the response to our proposals has been positive, with those responding welcoming the standardisation and rationalisation of the different arrangements currently applying to different types of plan. A list of the responses to the proposals, and to the consultation draft planning policy guidance issued at the same time, will be placed in the Library of the House; copies of individual responses may be obtained through the Library.

All the responses have been carefully considered. As a result, we have made some changes to the published proposals. The main changes are:

- a new requirement for local authorities to have regard to environmental considerations in preparing their plans, and to indicate what regard they have had to such considerations;
- English Nature, the Countryside Commission, the Countryside Council for Wales, English Heritage, the National Rivers Authority, and the Secretary of State for Transport to be added to the list of those who must be consulted by authorities on all plan proposals before they are put on deposit; and
- authorities to put on deposit, along with their plans, a statement of the publicity and consultation they have carried out in formulating their plan proposals. The statement should list those whom they have consulted, in addition to the prescribed consultees, and any steps they have taken to publicise their proposals and to provide an opportunity of making representations on them.

A number of those responding expressed concern about our proposal to leave pre-deposit publicity and consultation to authorities' discretion, subject to the list of prescribed consultees. Clearly, authorities should ensure that there is adequate publicity for and consultation on their plan proposals before they are put on deposit, but rather than prescribing such an approach in regulations, we believe that it is right to let authorities use their judgment to determine what degree of publicity and consultation is appropriate. This will give authorities the flexibility to tailor their approach according to circumstances. For example, they may conclude that proposals for a new or replacement plan warrant much wider publicity and consultation than proposals for a relatively minor alteration to an existing plan.

Nevertheless, we intend to make it clear in guidance how important it is for authorities to give their plan proposals adequate publicity and to give people an adequate opportunity to comment. Authorities should also consult organisations with a particular interest in the proposals, including coservation and amenity groups and business, development and infrastructural interests. The knowledge that they will have to prepare a statement of publicity and consultation should encourage authorities to consider carefully those whom they will need to consult at the pre-deposit stage.

It is important that local people and other interested bodies should be able to let authorities know what they think of plan proposals from the earliest stages. In this way they can be fully involved in decisions about the pattern of development in their area. We shall keep the flexible approach to publicity and consultation under review to ensure that it is working satisfactorily. We shall remind authorities that the Secretary of State has reserve powers to direct an authority to carry out further public participation, which he will be prepared to use if he considers that to be necessary in any particular case.

Today's announcement represents another important step in the development of our planning system. The new development plans process, as part of a plan-led system, will require a positive and constructive approach by all those with interests in development and conservation. We hope all those concerned will rise to this challenge.

Coalite, Bolsover

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the results of testing for dioxins in emissions from the Coalite works, Bolsover, carried out by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, will be available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution today released a report on its investigation into dioxins in emissions from the Coalite chemical works incinerator and the Coalite smokeless fuel plant.

The maximum emission of dioxins to atmosphere, calculated on the basis of the measurements made, from the stack on the Coalite Chemicals incinerator was 18 nanogram/m^3 (toxic equivalent). The maximum measured emission of dioxins to atmosphere at Coalite Fuels was 1·2 nanogram/m^3 (toxic equivalent)

Based on the maximum emission level recorded during the sampling, calculation of the atmospheric dispersion of dioxins from the two Coalite plants gives a maximum predicted concentration in air at groundlevel of 0·05 picogram/m^3 and an associated rate of deposition of 0·0006 picogram/m^2/s. The calculation suggests that these air concentrations and deposition rates would occur in the vicinity of the farms that currently have restrictions placed upon their milk. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has concluded from the results that such emissions from the Coalite Chemical incinerator would probably account for only a part of the dioxins which have been found in the milk on the affected farms. The atmospheric discharges from Coalite Fuels contribute only a few per cent. of the values reported.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution is to test for dioxins in soil samples taken at various distances around the Coalite plants, to complement the work already being undertaken by MAFF. The work is expected to begin in the new year and will take six months to complete.

The incinerator at Coalite Chemicals was closed down by the company during November, to allow substantial modifications to it. When it has been redesigned it will be regulated by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which requires control on releases to all media.

Deposit Refund Systems

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the study commissioned by the Departments of Trade and Industry and the Environment on the subject of deposit refund systems.

Mr. Baldry: The study, carried out by the consultants Environmental Resources Limited, has been published today in a report entitled "Deposit Refund Systems for Beverage Containers and Batteries". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The report is available on sale from HMSO book shops.

The Government had indicated in the last year's environmental White Paper that this work would be undertaken. The report's finding are now being considered, and will be taken into account during the further formulation of the Government's waste minimisation and recycling policy. We would welcome any comments that interested parties may have on the report.

Halons

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the use of halons as fire-fighting chemicals in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department considered a study, from C. S. Todd and Associates, on halon use in the United Kingdom, which is published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The report shows that consumption of halons has fallen by about 25 per cent. since 1986, and that most uses of halons, particularly in portable extinguishers, could be substituted now. It gives a clear indication to industry of the areas where more work is needed to find alternative means of fire protection.

Halons have a very high ozone depletion potential, and therefore we have proposed to other European member states that production and supply of virgin halon should be phased out by 1 January 1995, subject to provisions for essential uses, when we revise the Montreal protocol next year.

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be replying to the European Commission's letter of 17 October 1991 alleging infraction of directive 85/337/EEC on environment assessment.

Mr. Heseltine: The United Kingdom responded on 17 December within the two months requested by the Commission.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for the years 1979-80 to 1991-92 for each service control total a comparison between actual local authority outturn expenditure and the relevant grant-related expenditure assessment or standard spending assessment.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The service expenditure control totals used in the rate support grant settlements from 1982-83 to 1989-90 are shown in the table. Information on expenditure control totals is not available for years prior to 1982-83.

It is not possible to construct comparable figures for outturn expenditure on the basis of the available returns from local authorities.

The standard spending assessment service control totals used in the 1990-91 and 1991-92 revenue support grant settlements together with budgeted expenditure by local authorities on these services are as follows:

Move-on Programme

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many young people have been housed under the move-on programme.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 16 December 1991]: A total of 1,550 people aged 16 to 25 moved on from hostels, shared housing, bed and breakfast or other similar temporary accommodation into permanent housing provided by housing associations between 1 July 1990 and 30 June 1991.

Under my Department's rough sleepers initiative in central London, some 600 people aged 16 to 25 had been housed in hostels, flats and houses at the end of September 1991.

Air Pressure Gauges

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce new standards for the maintenance of air pressure gauges on garage forecourts.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has no plans to introduce requirements relating to the maintenance of air pressure gauges on garage forecourts. The testing of hot tyres can produce misleading or inaccurate readings however accurate the gauge might be. Tyres should always be tested cold.

Motorists should therefore use their own gauges to check their tyres when cold. This is why my Department has approved British standard 4613 on portable gauges for the purposes of the general safety requirement under section 10(3) of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the information from the 1991 new earnings survey data on respectively, the numbers of full-time employees on adult rates in (a) greater Manchester, (b) Merseyside, (c) Cheshire, (d) Lancashire and (e) the north west region, whose weekly earnings excluding overtime were less than £185, less than £140 and less than £130 per week for (i) manual males, (ii) non-manual males, (iii) all full-time males, (iv) manual females, (v) non-manual females and (vi) all full-time females, giving the total sample size in each case.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey is given in the table.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey is given in the table. The information is not available for part-time male employees.

EC Social Charter

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he proposes to introduce legislation to implement the EC proposals under the social charter in addition to those which relate to the working hours of miners in British collieries following the proposed repeal of the Coal Mines Regulation Act 1908.

Mr. Forth: Matters relating to the repeal of the Coal Mines Regulation Act are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Many of the proposals in the European Commission's social action programme are still being considered or have yet to be published. Where legislation is required to implement directives already agreed, proposals will be brought forward within the timetable for implementation set out in each proposal.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Forth: The Department runs or supports three schemes providing help or advice for small firms as well as local schemes through training and enterprise councils. These are:

Information counselling and consultancy
Locally tailored schemes through Training and Enterprise Councils.

Training
Locally tailored schemes through Training and Enterprise Councils.

Finance
Enterprise Allowance through Training and Enterprise Councils.
The Loan Guarantee Scheme
Loan Funds of the Prince's Youth business Trust/Prince's Scottish Youth Business Trust.
Informal Investment projects.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Supply

Sir Gerrard Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made since publication of the Government's White Paper in relation to the development of proposals for the introduction of competition in the supply of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Proposals for the introduction of competition in the supply of electricity have now been drawn up. They provide for a staged transition from the present situation in which Northern Ireland Electricity enjoys a monopoly position, to the creation of a market in which generators and suppliers will be able to compete freely, with consumers benefiting from the resultant downward pressure on costs. Faster progress to full supply competition is prevented by the physical constraints of the Northern Ireland Electricity system.

This transition is likely to be achieved in three distinct phases. In phase I, immediately following privatisation, authorised alternative suppliers—second tier suppliers—will be able go compete with NIE (Transmission, Distribution, Supply) in the supply of electricity to end users. This will allow consumers choice between suppliers or, in the case of large consumers, allow them to make arrangements to supply themselves under licence.

Phase II will be an intermediate step and will establish a partial electricity trading system which will permit direct trade between some generators and suppliers. The Director General of Electricity Supply will be responsible for the development of this arrangement, in consultation with all interested parties, and, as a further spur to the growth of competition in supply, the Director General of Electricity Supply will have powers to cancel selected power purchase agreements betwen NIE (TDS) and the generators in tranches between November 1996 and 2010. Appropriate safeguards for NIE (TDS) and the generators will be incorporated in the licences.

Phase III will achieve full supply competition in which generators and suppliers will be able to trade freely, thus allowing consumers to derive the maximum benefit from competition in this market. This will probably necessitate the introduction of some form of pooling and settlement arrangement. No date for achieving this has been set.

Cross-border Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arrests have been made in the Irish Republic in connection with Republican terrorist incidents with a cross-frontier element which have occurred in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1990; what charges have been brought; what convictions achieved; and if he will give details.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 December 1991]: This is a matter for the authorities in the Republic of Ireland. Records are not kept in a way which enables statistics of arrests, charges, and convictions in the Republic of Ireland to be linked meaningfully to terrorist incidents with cross-border element. However, statistics on extraterritorial prosecutions in the Republic, which involve a cross-border element in the sense that the offender has fled to the Republic, were given in replies by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) on 19 December 1988, Official Report, column 94; to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 14 May 1990, Official Report, column 280; and by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington on 11 November 1991, Official Report, column 352 and 2 December 1991, Official Report, column 13.

PRIME MINISTER

EC Social Chapter

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the propositions in the social chapter of the treaty on European Union which (a) have not already been implemented in the United Kingdom and (b) would have to be implemented if the United Kingdom were a signatory to the social chapter; and what is his assessment of the effect on British industry of each of the propositions in (b).

The Prime Minister: The treaty on European union confirms that the social provisions chapter within the existing treaty of Rome will be maintained without change. The chapter contains no propositions, but establishes the basis upon which the Community may support member states in the pursuant of their objectives. It is, and will remain, the basis for the development of a sensible social dimension respecting national diversity and subsidiarity and consistent with the priority of employment creation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Kashmir

13. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Kashmir in the near future.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to visit Kashmir.

Brazil

14. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the President of Brazil to discuss relations with Brazil.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans.

Abu Dhabi

15. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens remain unable to leave Abu Dhabi until they receive their passports.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our embassy in Abu Dhabi knows of four such British passport holders. There may be others who have not informed the embassy.

European Community (Presidency)

16. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific plans he has for when the United Kingdom next has the presidency of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Detailed plans for the United Kingdom presidency will be made nearer the time in the light of progress during the Portuguese presidency. Among the issues likely to be at the top of the United Kingdom's agenda are completion of a liberal single market by the end of 1992 and preparations for the future enlargement of the Community. There will be a number of events connected with our presidency including a European organ festival in Bolton.

East Timor

17. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is currently taking to make clear Her Majesty's Government's position to Indonesia in respect of its occupation of East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indonesian authorities are well aware that we do not recognise their annexation of East Timor.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is now in a position to make a further statement on the incident at Santa Cruz cemetery, Dili, East Timor, on 12 November.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have condemned the killings in Dili. We will discuss with our EC partners what further action, if any, might be appropriate when the contents of the report of the Indonesian national commission of inquiry are known.

38. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to receive a report of the investigation into the recent killings in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We expect the draft report to be available soon.

30. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government has made in the United Nations about the situation in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We continue to support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General to bring about a solution to the problem of East Timor.

Maastricht

18. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advantages he expects to flow from the Maastricht summit.

20. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the discussions at Maastricht.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friends to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 11 December. In the ways which my right hon. Friend set out, the Maastricht agreement will equip the Community and its member states to work more closely together, organising each aspect of their work in the most effective way rather than forcing it into a single pattern. We believe that this will add to the strength of the work.

37. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Maastricht negotiations.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 11 December. The agreement reached at Maastricht is good for Britain and for Europe. It provides for strengthened intergovernmental co-operation in the field of foreign policy and in combating cross-border crime, drugs trafficking and in other areas of interior and justice policy. It will make the Community more efficient and accountable. The Community is now in good shape to face the challenges of the rest of the 1990s, including enlargement.

EC Foreign Policies

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European Community foreign policies.

Mr. Hurd: I meet my European Community partners regularly. The common foreign and security policy agreed at Maastricht will strengthen intergovernmental co-operation and joint action with our partners in agreed areas of policy.

Ukraine

21. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on political and commercial relations with the Ukraine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are developing an active political and commercial relationship with Ukraine. A British official is based in Kiev to establish a permanent British mission. The British Council also is establishing a prescence. A senior Foreign Office official held talks in Kiev with the Ukrainian leadership on Saturday. Earlier this month a Ukrainian delegation visited Britain, including the deputy chairman of the Ukrainian Parliament and the chairman of the national bank. The know-how fund has sponsored a food distribution project and is looking at projects in banking and privatisation. There are several joint ventures and a number of British companies have offices in Ukraine.

34. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to recognise Ukraine as an independent state.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ukraine and the other republics of the Soviet Union are discussing among themselves their future relationships and their approach to the union's international obligations. We therefore have not taken a decision on recognition, but a British representative now based in Kiev is working to establish a full diplomatic mission there.

28. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to meet the President of Ukraine to discuss the establishment of closer relations following the outcome of the recent referendum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We actively are developing closer relations with Ukraine. A British representative now based in Kiev is working to establish a permanent British mission. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs very much looks forward to meeting President Kravchuk in due course.

EC Association Agreements

22. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards EC association agreements with Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I am delighted to be able to tell the House that the European Community's association agreements with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, which were the result of a United Kingdom initiative in 1989, were signed in Brussels on Monday 16 December 1991. The agreements contain a variety of measures designed to bolster the economies of these countries and bring them closer to the Community and its member states. They include trade liberalisation provisions to promote economic development through the gradual establishment of a free trade area. The agreements will also help prepare them for the eventual membership of the Community which they seek.

Burma

24. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts Her Majesty's Government are making to increase the pressure on the military Government of Burma to hand over power to the National League for Democracy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have repeatedly called on the Burmese military junta to respect the results of the elections in May 1990 which the National League for Democracy won by a landslide. The EC suspended all non-humanitarian aid to Burma in 1988 and in 1991, at British initiative, imposed an embargo on defence sales to Burma. On 30 November, we co-sponsored a United Nations General Assembly resolution calling for an improvement in the human rights situation and for progress towards democratic government in Burma.

Tibet

25. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Tibet.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We regularly express concern to the Chinese authorities about reports of human rights abuses in Tibet and press them to provide an acceptable degree of autonomy there.

Indonesia

26. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of Indonesia to discuss human rights issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs summoned the Indonesian ambassador on 13 November, to express our grave concern about recent human rights abuses in Indonesia.

Our position has also been clearly set out in EC/Council of Europe declarations and in the presidency statement to the third committee of the United Nations on 19 November.

Soviet and Yugoslav Republics

23. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The tragedy of Yugoslavia is one of my main preoccupations. We and our EC partners are devoting great effort to working for a settlement. We hope that the conditions necessary for the deployment of a United Nations peace-keeping force can be met soon. A long-term solution will be possible only when the Yugoslavs themselves show a genuine political will to reach a peaceful settlement.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will recognise Croatia and Slovenia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: EC Foreign Ministers agreed on 16 December to recognise those Yugoslav republics which meet certain conditions. A final decision on implementation will be taken on 15 January after advice from the arbitration commission of Lord Carrington's conference on Yugoslavia.

27. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current policy on recognition of the Soviet and Yugoslavian component republics as they seek or achieve independence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The republics of the Soviet Union continue to discuss among themselves their future relationships. We therefore have not yet taken decisions on recognition.

On Yugoslavia, we fear that recognition now would increase the danger of civil war spreading and undermine current international efforts to negotiate peace. This position is under constant review.

33. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the total number of casualties in Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Conflicting reports and an absence of reliable independent sources mean that it is difficult to give precise figures for casualties in Croatia. Most estimates fall between 5,000 and 10,000 deaths.

Afghanistan

29. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards a solution of the conflict in Afghanistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations, in line with the United Nations Secretary-General's peace proposals of 21

May continues to play a key role in seeking a political solution. The United Nations is hoping to convene a meeting of representatives of all significant Afghan opinion in the near future to discuss the establishment of a transitional administration.

The United States and Soviet Governments have agreed to end their supply of arms to all sides in the conflict by 1 January 1992. Furthermore, a mujaheddin delegation recently reached a substantial measure of agreement with Soviet leaders on principles regarding transitional arrangements within Afghanistan and the return of prisoners.

All these developments represent encouraging progress towards a resolution of the conflict in Afghanistan.

Middle East

31. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the Israeli Foreign Minister in order to discuss the middle east conference.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs saw the Israeli Foreign Minister in September. He has no plans at present to meet him again, but we have frequent discussions with members of the Israeli Government about the middle east peace process. I met Mr. Netanyahu on 26 November.

EC Union

32. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what definition of subsidiarity it is his policy to accept in the context of EC union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We strongly endorse the definition of subsidiarity agreed at Maastricht. This is a clear, justiciable definition which states that the Community shall take action only if the objective cannot be sufficiently achieved by the member states.

Cuba

35. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet with representatives of the Cuban Government to discuss that country's role in the security arrangements for the central American region.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans.

Cyprus

36. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations between the United Kingdom and Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have close and friendly relations with Cyprus. We continue to work actively in support of the United Nations Secretary-General's efforts to promote a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the intercommunal dispute.

Iran

39. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Iranian relations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We restored diplomatic relations with Iran on 27 September 1990 on the basis of mutual respect and non-interference in each others affairs. We are grateful for the role the Iranian Government played in securing the release of British and other hostages. We hope that the relationship with Iran will continue to evolve in a positive direction.

Congo and Gabon

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what administrative arrangements following the closure of the British embassies in Brazzaville and Libreville have been made for the citizens of the Congo and Gabon to acquire visas to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Citizens of Congo and Gabon may apply to the British embassy in Kinshasa, which now has responsibility for diplomatic relations with Congo and Gabon, or to British diplomatic missions on their travel routes, for example, Paris, Amsterdam or Rome.

Spain

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador in Madrid to request that the Spanish Government investigate the circumstances in which the defective water heater, held by a British inquest to be the cause of the death of Petty Officer John Black, disappeared from the apartment in Sabinillas, Spain, in which he died.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. Both Spanish and British investigations concluded there were no suspicious circumstances surrounding Petty Officer Black's tragic death. The second inquest held in this country in April this year returned a verdict of accidental death.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Thanet

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Thanet: Gateway to Europe in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Leigh: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 17 February to Friday 21 February.

European Postal Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the Green Paper on European postal services.

Mr. Leigh: I understand that the EC Commission currently expects to publish its Green Paper on European postal services early in the new year.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contacts he has had with the European Commission about the framework for control of state aids in the Community in the fibre, textile and clothing industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department maintains contact with the Commission on all state aids matters, including the rules affecting the textile and clothing sectors. The synthetic fibres discipline which has served United Kingdom industry well was renewed on 11 July 1991 for a further year. The Department will continue to monitor its application.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the European Commission has yet succeeded in enforcing the repayment by the Beaulieu carpet group in Belgium of illegally granted subsidies; what information he has on other instances where textile and clothing companies in EC member states have not yet complied with Commission decisions that illegal aid must be repaid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I fully share the hon. Member's concern that in a number of cases in the textile and clothing sector illegal aid has not yet been repaid. The Beaulieu case referred to by my hon. Friend is at present before the Belgian courts for resolution. The Department takes every opportunity to press the Commission to remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs. As a result of the treaty agreed at Maastricht the European Court will in due course have the power to fine member states not complying with its judgments. I hope that this will ensure swifter compliance in future.

Defective Water Heaters

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the introduction of European Community directive 90/396/EEC, relating to appliances for burning gaseous fuels; and whether he will draw it to the attention of Her Majesty's consuls in Spain and Portugal, following the deaths of British subjects as a result of defective water heaters in their holiday apartments.

Mr. Leigh: The European Community Directive 90/396/EEC relating to appliances burning gaseous fuels was adopted by the Council of Ministers in June 1990 and will shortly be implemented in United Kingdom legislation and that of the other member states of the Community. However, transitional arrangements will not give mandatory effect to the requirements of the directive until 1 January 1996. It is the responsibility of the Spanish and Portuguese authorities to implement and enforce the directive in their territories.

Cosmetics (Animal Testing)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has met representatives of the Body Shop to discuss their campaign for a ban on animal testing of finished cosmetic products within the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Department's consumer safety unit is considering with the industry's trade association what can be done to reduce animal testing of cosmetics. It has informed the Body Shop that when the unit has the views of the industry as a whole they will be pleased to talk to individual companies.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects discussions to take place within the EC Council of Ministers on the draft Cosmetics and Toiletries directive COM (96) 488; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The European Parliament is expected to give its opinion on the proposed sixth amendment to the Cosmetics Directive in February. Meanwhile work has been continuing in the Council working group to agree a draft for submission to the Council of Ministers which is expected to be taken forward in the new year under the Portuguese presidency.

Bicycles

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the effect on the United Kingdom bicycle manufacturing industry of the importation of cheap bicycles manufactured in the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 December 1991]: I am well aware of the concerns of the United Kingdom bicycle manufacturing industry. Last September, import duty was reimposed on imports into the Community of bicycles from China for the remainder of 1991.

The European bicycle industry has made an anti-dumping complaint against bicycles from China and this is currently being investigated by the European Commission.

Regional Assistance

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was provided for regional preferential assistance in constant prices for each year, by region, for the period 1979-80 to 1990-91.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1991]:

The amounts spent on regional preferential assistance in Great Britain for the period 1979-80 to 1990-91 are set out in the table. The values are all expressed in terms of 1989-90 prices.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poultry

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the differences between tests applied in the United Kingdom and in other EC countries with regard to frozen and fresh poultry presented for export.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of any tests specifically required within the European Community with regard to frozen and fresh poultry presented for export, although individual third countries may impose their own requirements.

Eggs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what labelling or other requirements exist to enable United Kingdom consumers to exercise informed choice about the bacteriological standard of the eggs they purchase.

Mr. Maclean: The labelling of eggs is governed by the European Community Egg Marketing Regulations. These contain no provision for labelling on bacteriological quality. However, all food, including eggs must comply with the requirements of the Food Safety Act 1990.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to place in the public domain full details of all licences issued under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991; if he will ensure that such information specifies the named persons to whom licences have been issued, to which setts they refer, for which purposes they have been authorised, and the duration for which they are valid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It is intended that cumulative information on licensing under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 will be made available, but it is not Government policy as a general rule to release information on individual licences under wildlife legislation.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will include provision in the section 4 licensing scheme under the Badgers Act 1991 for the return of a written report from each licensee stating the circumstances and outcome of each case of sett interference; and for such reports to be made public.

Mr. Maclean: It is intended that licence holders will be required to submit a report on actions taken under the authority of their licence, but these reports will not be made available to the public.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that any licences issued under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 take into full account the codes of practice of the Masters of Fox Hounds Association forbidding fox hunts, dogs from entering or digging into badger setts.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 12 December 1991, Official Report, column 550.

Tobacco

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current tonnage and value of the EC tobacco mountain; if he will list the places where it is stored; what will be its eventual destination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission's most recent figures show 36,480 tonnes of tobacco in intervention. Definitive figures for intervention of the 1990 and 1991 crop are not yet available. The tobacco is held in a number of intervention stores, mainly in Italy and Greece. Its market value depends on the state of the market when it is put up for sale by tender by the Commission. Destination is a matter for the purchaser who is not obliged to inform the Commission.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority about the implementation of the recommendations of the report on the north east drift net fishery, with particular reference to the conclusion that this fishery should be phased out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: On the day this review was presented to Parliament, my right hon. Friend the Minister wrote to the chairman of the National Rivers Authority explaining the Governments position and seeking the authority's response. He has discussed this issue, among others, with the chairman; and his officials have also been in close contact with the NRA. The phasing out of the north-east coast salmon drift net fishery is one of a number of recommendations made in the review. The NRA will let us have its proposals for implementing the recommendations as soon as they are able.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Maclean: Nearly all farms are small firms and the wide ranging help and finance available from the Department is set out in the booklet "At The Farmer's Service" available in the House of Commons Library. In addition marketing and other help is provided, under various schemes, to businesses, many of which are small firms, in the food and drink sectors, through Food From Britain, and also in the fisheries sector.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the extent to which papain is currently being used in United Kingdom slaughterhouses.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that about 2 per cent. of cattle are treated with the enzyme Papain before slaughter. Single market rules on the production and marketing of fresh meat, Directive 91/497/EEC, due to come into effect on 1 January 1993, will prohibit such treatment. The Government welcome this.

Pesticides and Herbicides

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of the number of prosecutions by his Department under the Health and Safety Legislation of importers of unregistered pesticides and herbicides for the past calendar year; and how many were successful.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has taken enforcement action against a number of importers, but there have been no prosecutions.

Regional Panels

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members of each of his regional panels currently in existence; if he will give the remit of these panels and the criteria for membership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The membership of my five existing regional panels is as follows:

The regional panels are non-statutory advisory bodies and provide an independent two-way communication link between my Department and the agricultural and food industries and consumers. The panels can also be called upon to advise on matters in dispute between farmers and officials, for example on decisions on grant and subsidy schemes. Panel members act in an entirely independent capacity, not as the Ministry's agents.

The composition of the panels is designed to reflect the farming systems and food and farming industries in the various regions. Members include farmers, land owners, farm workers, a trade union official, representatives of the food industry and consumers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the nine regional panels he intends to appoint, to which he referred in his answer of 23 July 1991, Official Report, columns 455-56, to the hon. Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine), including the remit of the panels, the criteria of membership and the numbers of members who will be appointed; when he expects them to be in operation; and whether he will appoint people who are currently represented on his regional panels.

Mr. Gummer: The new regional panels will have the same remit as the old ones. They will provide an independent two-way communication link between my Department and the agricultural and food industries and consumers. They will also be available to advise on matters in dispute between farmers and officials, for example on decisions on grant and subsidy schemes.

The new panels will come into operation on 1 April 1992. Their composition and membership are currently under consideration.

Regional Reorganisation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current regional and divisional offices which deal with his Ministry's grant, subsidy licensing and other work that are due for closure prior to the regional reorganisation; how many staff in each are to be made redundant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: As a result of the restructuring of my Department's regional organisation, grant and subsidy work, licensing and other administrative functions will be transferred from the following regional and divisional offices to the new regional service centres:

Regional Offices
Leeds
Wolverhampton

Divisional Offices
Beverley
Chelmsford
Gloucester
Guildford
Huntingdon
Lincoln
Maidstone
Newcastle Norwich
Oxford
Preston
Taunton

The location of the regional service centre for Devon and Cornwall is still under review. Meantime grant and subsidy processing and other administrative work will continue to be carried out at the divisional offices at Exeter and Truro.

It is projected that the regional reorganisation will result in a net loss of about 150 posts across the country as a whole. Where posts are to be lost every effort will be made to find staff alternative jobs. We shall be doing all we can to avoid compulsory redundancies.

Chemical Residues

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the levels of maximum daily intakes of Di-(2-ethylhexyl) adipate, acetyltributyl citrate, epoxidised soya bean oil and polymeric plasticisers; the method used to calculate these maximum daily intakes and any assumptions used in the calculations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Estimated maximum daily intakes of the four plasticisers referred to are as follows:

Di-(2-ethylhexyl) adipate	8·2 mg/day
Acetyltributyl citrate	1·5 mg/day
Epoxidised soya bean oil	1·0 mg/day
Polymeric plasticisers	0·4 mg/day

The assumptions and method of calculation used to obtain these figures are described in detail in food surveillance papers Nos. 21 and 30, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has introduced regulations under the Food Act 1984 to ban the use of mineral hydrocarbons as food additives and in food processing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We have consulted widely over amendment of the current regulations on mineral hydrocarbons in food. This consultation has brought to light a number of complex issues and further research has been requested. I shall make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the closure dates for the veterinary investigation centres at (a) Bangor, (b) Cambridge, (c) Lincoln, (d) Norwich, (e) Reading, (f) Worcester, (g) Wye and (h) Truro; and what is the latest position in plans for the new VICs at Bury St. Edmonds and in Warwickshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 21 October 1991, Official Report, column 415. As far as the Truro Centre is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 23 July 1991, Official Report, column 454. The latest position in respect of the two new centres at Bury St. Edmunds and Luddington in Warwickshire is that planning approvals have been obtained for both sites, detailed design work has almost been completed, the tender for enabling works at Bury St. Edmunds has been let and the main contracts for both sites are expected to go out to tender early in the new year. Completion is scheduled for both projects in mid to late-1993.

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to introduce further measures to ensure consumers are protected from residues of veterinary medicines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: New regulations under the Food Safety Act to strengthen existing controls on veterinary residues have been laid before the House today. These controls include the following main features:

to make it an offence to use unauthorised drugs in food producing animals;

to enable animal carcases found to contain residues of illegal drugs, or residues of authorised animal medicines in excess of certain prescribed maximum residue limits (MRLs), to be condemned as unfit for human consumption;

to make it an offence to sell for slaughter animals containing unauthorised drugs or medicinal residues in excess of the prescribed MRLs; to make it an offence for shops to sell meat containing such residues; to require farmers using authorised animal medicines to observe specified withdrawal periods prior to slaughter;

to give new powers to Ministry veterinary officers and other officials to detain and check animals or meat if misuse is suspected.

Our record of surveillance on residues in meat is an excellent one. The Ministry carries out a comprehensive programme of sampling checks on animals at slaughterhouses and farms and on meat and meat products obtained from retail outlets and elsewhere. The results tell a good story, but consumers of British meat can now be doubly sure that harmful residues of animal medicines are not being passed on to the food chain.

The new controls provide a mechanism for firm action to be taken, should this be required. Consumers have every right to demand the highest standards. These additional controls will help ensure that British meat stays safe to eat, and at the top of the quality league.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Meals (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the school meals census for the Durham area or equivalent statistics for each year since 1980.

Mr. Fallon: A table showing school meals information for maintained primary, secondary and special schools within Durham local education authority, for each year from 1982 to 1989, follows. Information prior to 1982 and for 1985 is not available. School meal information by school type prior to 1989 is not available for every year. I would refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 11 December 1991, Official Report, column 450, which gave the school meal information for 1990 and 1991.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has no specific schemes to provide help or finance to small firms. However, the Department operates a purchasing policy including small firms on tender lists where appropriate.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Natural Environment Research Council for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The annual report of the Natural Environment Research Council has been submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend, under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being placed in the House today.

I was most interested to read the report of the council's 25th anniversary year. The report highlights research concerned with detecting and understanding changes in environmental systems, the enhanced collaboration between NERC institutes and the higher education sector, and the work of NERC scientists in the forward planning of important international programmes on the environment. I was particularly impressed to learn more about:

(a) the urgent response on environmental issues connected with the Gulf war including development of a model which successfully predicted the fate of oil released into the sea and of environmental impact assessments.

(b) the launch of a new terrestrial initiative in global environmental research—TIGER—to provide data on the carbon cycle, trace greenhouse gases and water and energy balances on land, and on ecosystem impacts, including the monitoring of environmental change.

(c) the expansion of the universities global atmospheric modelling programme, to concentrate on two main themes: natural variability of the atmosphere and its response to greenhouse forcing; and stratospheric chemistry, dynamics and prediction of ozone depletion.

(d) the completion of the 15-year main run of the fine resolution Antarctic model integrated on the research council's Cray X-MP supercomputer. This is the first eddy-resolving model of the southern ocean and represents an important first step in the running of sophisticated, coupled ocean-atmosphere models needed for climate prediction.

(e) the receipt by NERC of the Queen's award for technological achievement, jointly with VG Elemental, for the development of the inductively coupled plasma mass spectrometer, which is of particular value to earth and hydrological scientists.

(f) the countryside survey 1990 undertaken by NERC's institutes of terrestrial and freshwater ecology and the joint NERC/ESRC land use programme at the university of Newcastle upon Tyne, which will, for the first time, use field survey accompanied by satellite remote sensing to produce a digital map of land cover for the whole of Great Britain

I congratulate the Council on these and its many other achievements, and I commend its report to hon. Members.

SCOTLAND

Forestry Commission

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much land has been sold by the Forestry Commission in each year since 1989; and what was the amount of revenue raised thereby;

(2) if he will list the areas of land, planted and unplanted, which have been sold by the Forestry Commission in (a) 1989, (b) 1990 and (c) 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

1989	3,786	3,889	7,675	12·6
1991	3,273	4,155	7,428	12·1

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what safeguards for the rights of access are normally incoporated into the terms of sale of land by the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Forestry Commission gives advance notice to local authorities of intended disposals of woodlands under its management, and offers to enter into legal agreements with them which will provide for continued public access to the woodlands after sale.

The Forestry Commission has drawn up guidelines on these arrangements, in consultation with the countryside commissions and the local authority associations, a copy of which is in the Library.

Evening Betting

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to permit the opening of off-course bookmakers shops during evening hours.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are considering the various responses to our consultation document, issued on 14 October, on whether licensed betting offices should be open in the evenings and, if so, at what times.

Bail (Re-offenders)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have re-offended whilst out on bail under the terms of the Bail (Scotland) Act 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1990, 2,742 persons were proceeded against where the main offence was under section 3(1)(b) of the Bail Etc. (Scotland) Act 1980, which includes re-offending while on bail.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many United Kingdom fishing vessels have been reported to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland as having failed to notify the Department before crossing the 4 deg. west line as required under the Sea Fish Licensing Order 1989, as amended; and how many masters of such fishing vessels have been (a) warned, (b) cautioned and (c) charged under the relevant Fisheries Acts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The requirement for certain United Kingdom fishing vessels to contact a designated office of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency before crossing the 4 deg. west line was introduced in March 1989. Since that time the agency has taken action on 734 occasions where there have been reasonable grounds to believe that the reporting-in arrangements have not been complied with. These suspected infringements have been dealt with as follows:

	Number
Warnings issued	538
Cautions issued	196
Charged by prosecuting authorities	7

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his department takes to monitor transhipments of fish to factory vessels in Scottish waters; and what breaches of the regulations have been detected as a result of these checks in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency restricts both the number of ports where transhipments may take place and the hours during which such operations may be carried out to assist in the control of transhipments of fish to factory ships. This allows for a high degree of monitoring. Fishery Officers have in 1991 inspected some 1,900 catching vessels before they begin to transfer fish to factory ships. This accounts for 95 per cent. of transhipment activity. Full monitoring of quantities while fish are being transferred to factory ships takes place in selected cases. This was undertaken in 336 cases in 1991. Monitoring of documents and returns submitted by catching and receiving vessels further assists in controlling transhipments.

The number of offences detected as a result of the above procedures in each of the last five years are:

	Number
1987	6
1988	13
1989	8
1990	3

[1] To date.

These detections relate mainly to attempts to understate the quantities of fish which are being transhipped.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any works of art accepted in lieu of inheritance tax have been allocated since he last made an announcement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Arts, announced on 26 April 1991 at column 594 that the following works had been accepted in lieu of inheritance tax.

Item	Amount of Tax satisfied
The C. H. Brackenbury Memorial Collection of Wind Instruments	£126,956

I am pleased to announce that I have decided to allocate these works to the University of Edinburgh where they have been on loan since 1980.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by local authority area in Scotland the proportions of local authority finance derived from central Government, business rates and poll tax for 1990-91 and the estimates for 1992-93, including the estimate for the replacement of poll tax with community tax for 1993-94.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The information for 1990-91 is given in the table. It is not possible to provide figures for 1992-93 and 1993-94 in advance of local authorities setting their local taxation levels for these years.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representations from the public he has had in favour of Foresterhill hospital's application for trust status;

(2) what representations from the public he has had (a) in favour (b) against Foresterhill hospital's application for trust status.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 December 1991]: As I indicated in my statement on 3 December, representations, both for and against Foresterhill applications, were made during the public consultation period. I very much welcome the comments made since the announcement by many associated with Foresterhill pledging themselves to ensure the success of the trust in the interests of improved patient care.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value of the Foresterhill site claimed by the proposed trust as part of its application for national health service trust status.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The total value of property assets declared in the trust application was £119 million. This will be revised as at 1 April 1992, the date the trust comes into operation, to reflect the situation then prevailing.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that standards of education and training at Foresterhill hospital are maintained when it becomes a trust.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Trusts, like directly managed hospitals, will be required to participate fully in national education and training arrangements. This obligation was reflected in the Foresterhill hospital's trust application.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will address a public meeting in Kincardine and Deeside to discuss the Foresterhill hospital complex following his approval of the trust application.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 December 1991]: I expect to undertake a number of public engagements in Grampian in the coming months.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Raeden complex is to be part of the Foresterhill trust.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 December 1991]: As was made clear in the decision letter sent to the trust sponsors on 3 December, a copy of which was placed in the House Library, the Raeden centre will not form part of the Foresterhill trust.

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the business plan and details of the application for trust status for the Foresterhill hospital complex.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Copies of the detailed application and of the executive summary were readily available throughout the public consultation period. Grampian health board reports that 639 copies of the former and 956 copies of the latter were issued.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of introducing a 100 per cent. rebate for community charge payers on income support and equivalent incomes in 1992-93, assuming that no compensatory reduction is made to benefit levels.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure on community charge benefit is affected by the community charge levels set by local authorities. The latest estimate is that the cost of introducing 100 per cent. rebates for people on income support or equivalent incomes in 1992-93 would be around £500 million. A maximum community charge benefit of 100 per cent. of the liability would affect all people receiving community charge benefit, including those on income support and equivalent incomes.

Source: Expenditure modelled using data drawn from the 1986-87-88 Family Expenditure Surveys at 1991-92 prices and benefits.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will carry out a review of the present income maintenance system for pensioners;

(2) whether the review of the present income maintenance system for pensioners will include the removal of direct and indirect negative discrimination on grounds of age and sex.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to carry out such a review. The discussion document "Options for Equality in State Pension Age" published today, sets out information on equalising pension ages.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that invalid care allowance will be paid at the same level as other long-term income maintenance benefits.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so at present. Unlike most other income maintenance benefits, invalid care allowance is subject to neither contribution conditions nor a means test. The cost of increasing it to the level of basic retirement pension or invalidity benefit, for example, would be £126 million and would need to be considered in the context of other demands on available resources.

Pensions

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will bring forward proposals to decrease the time between the announcement of pension increases and their implementation.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 7 November at column 240.

Carers Allowance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce a flat-rate carers allowance which is not meanstested and is disregarded for means-tested benefits.

Mr. Scott: Invalid care allowance (ICA) is a flat-rate non means-tested social security benefit specifically for carers. The number of people in Great Britain receiving the benefit at any one time has increased from 5,000 in 1978-79 to about 155,000 in 1991-92 and the amount spent has increased from £4 million to an estimated £260 million over the same period. We introduced a carer premium (currently £10·80 a week) into the income related benefits in October 1990 specifically to help the less well-off carers. ICA is an income maintenance benefit and to disregard it for income-related benefits would result in double provision from public funds.

Tax/Benefit Model Table

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish figures similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for a lone mother with two children aged four and six years working four hours a day, five days a week for £2 an hour (a) under the 1991-92 benefit system and (b) under the benefit system as proposed for 1992-93, with Family Credit being paid for work of 16 hours or more a week, at 1991-92 rates;

(2) if he will publish figures similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for each of a single wage married couple (a) with two children aged four and six years and (b) with three children aged three, eight and eleven years working four hours a day, five days a week for £2 an hour (i) under the 1991-92 benefit system and (ii) under the benefit system as proposed for 1992-93, with Family Credit being paid for work of 16 hours or more a week, at 1991-92 rates;

(3) if he will publish figures similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for a single wage married couple with no children working four hours a day, five days a week for (a) £2·00, (b) £2·50 and (c) £3·00 an hour (i) under the 1991--92 benefit system and (ii) under the benefit system as proposed for 1992-93, with Family Credit being paid for work of 16 hours or more a week, at 1991-92 rates.

Mr. Jack: Anyone in receipt of income support at the moment of change in the rules at the start of 1992-93, will retain entitlement to income support and, therefore, their income need not change. Families with children can obtain advice from the Benefits Agency as to whether or not it would be better for them to claim family credit. Couples without children are not entitled to family credit.

The following table shows the net weekly spending power for people at 1991-92 rates (a) in 1991-92, and in 1992-93 if they choose to remain on income support; and (b) for those newly claiming in 1992-93.

It should be noted that the results in the tables remain arbitrary. They cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use hypothetical rents so they do not reflect the full range of housing costs which people can pay.

The figures in column (b) do not include the increased benefit rates coming into effect from April 1992, when child benefit will be increased by 4·1 per cent. and income-related benefits will be increased by 7 per cent.

Family type	Gross pay £ per hour	(a) Net weekly spending power £ per week	(b) Net weekly spending power £ per week
Lone parent (as specified)	2·00	99·33	111·55
Married couple with two children (as specified)	2·00	106·54	107·54
Married couple with three children (as specified)	2·00	129·57	128·25
Married couple with no children	2·00	65·37	38·12
	2·50	65·37	48·12
	3·00	65·37	56·35

Concessionary Coal

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current arrangements for converting a concessionary coal allowance into cash when a house is no longer heated by coal; and what impact this has on entitlement to benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: British Coal is responsible for the arrangements for converting concessionary coal into a cash allowance.

All payments in kind, including the value of concessionary coal, are ignored in the income-related benefits. Payments of cash made in lieu of concessionary coal are available for normal living expenses in the same way as a retirement or occupational pension and are therefore taken fully into account. However, where a person's income is above the level of his or her applicable amount, the operation of "tapers" in housing benefit, community charge benefit and family credit enable the person to keep some of that extra income.

The tapers are applied to any income above the applicable amount and the answer offset against the maximum benefit payable. In housing benefit the taper is 65 per cent., in community charge benefit it is 15 per cent. and in family credit it is 70 per cent.

Heating Bills

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help is now available to people on low incomes for paying their heating bills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The rates used in the assessment of the income-related benefits are to cover normal day to day living expenses, including heating.

In addition householders in receipt of income support, family credit, housing benefit or community charge benefit may be eligible for a grant towards the cost of loft, tank and pipe insulation and draughtproofing under the home energy efficiency scheme. The Government also have a number of programmes designed to help local authorities improve the condition of their housing stock, including the heating and insulation.

In the event of exceptionally cold weather, social fund cold weather payments are available to people who receive income support and either have a child under five or receive a pensioner or disability premium. Improvements in this scheme were set out by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 18 November at columns 4-5.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Divorce

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General what response he has made to the Law Society memorandum on maintenance and capital provision on divorce.

The Attorney-General: The Government have in hand a staged review of the family justice system, and will ensure that the Law Society's recommendations are taken into account as the review considers the areas of law concerned. The society's recommendations include proposals in relation to a formula for calculating child maintenance, which were considered during the passage of the Child Support Bill. Also included are proposals for a system of pension-splitting on divorce, which raise matters of pension law, which is a subject currently under review by the Department of Social Security.

Magistrates, Newcastle

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Attorney-General if he will name the members of the Newcastle magistrates advisory committee on appointments to the Newcastle upon Tyne bench.

The Attorney-General: The names of the members of the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee for Newcastle upon Tyne are—

Miss E. D. Barraclough
Mr. J. Burn
Mr. J. L. Curry
Miss A. F. Irwin
Mrs. L. M. Kennedy
Mrs. F. F. Southern
Miss J. R. Straker
Mr. D. I. Williams

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Attorney-General what priority he gives to ensuring an even representation of all geographic areas in Newcastle upon Tyne upon the magistrates bench.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor expects all his advisory committees to put forward candidates who are suitable for appointment. Subject to this, he requires them to seek to achieve a bench which is broadly representative of the community it serves. To this end, he expects them to take into account geographical and other factors.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Adult Education

Dame Elaine Kellet-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the names and locations of each adult education centre, other than colleges of further education, funded by local education authorities.

Mr. Eggar: It is not possible to give names and locations of adult education centres. Much further education for adults is not run within a specific centre. It may be provided as an adult education service run in a variety of locations and using a combination of premises, such as purpose-built centres, school premises, church halls and FE college premises.

Dame Elaine Kellet-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the local education authorities which are currently funding colleges of adult education.

Mr. Eggar: Local education authorities may provide further education for adults by way of separate centres or as integral provision within further education colleges. The most recently available expenditure information submitted by LEAs indicates that the following authorities provided further education for adults in separate adult centres or in adult education centres conducted separately on the premises of further education colleges:

EC Directives

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all directives from the European Community issued since May 1979 which are (a) now active in the field of education and (b) under consideration.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are two current EC directives of significance to the field of education agreed since May 1979: the Council directive of 21 December 1988 on a general system for the recognition of higher-education diplomas awarded on completion of professional education and training of at least three years' duration; and the Council directive of 28 June 1990 on the right of residence for students which falls to be implemented by 30 June 1992. A proposal for a Council directive on a second general system for the recognition of professional education and training which would complement directive 89/48/EC is currently under negotiation.

Unemployed People

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance his Department gives to schools regarding offers of voluntary assistance from unemployed people with relevant skills, as a means of helping them to find employment.

Mr. Eggar: None. The use of voluntary help in schools is a matter for local management.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, 13 December, column 560-61, he will give the names of the 106 grammar schools which have ceased to exist since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The situation is much more complicated than suggested in the question. It is not true that 106 schools have closed. Some schools will have merged to form other schools; others will have become independent and moved out of the maintained sector; others will have changed their status and become comprehensives and some comprehensives will have become grammar schools. Without painstaking investigation we cannot know how many schools fall into each category. It is likely that we would need to list considerably more than 106 schools in order to provide a clear picture.

This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what dates he received applications by certain Ealing schools for grant-maintained status and by the borough of Ealing for its schools reorganisation programme; when he expects to announce his decisions on those applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Eight Ealing schools applied for grant-maintained status on dates ranging from 27 February to 3 July 1991. Ealing local education authority and the governors of the voluntary aided schools published proposals on 3 May 1991 to reorganise all primary and secondary schools in the borough.

Where there are conflicting proposals, my right hon. and learned Friend is obliged to consider one set of proposals against the other and then decide on the grant-maintained proposals first, followed by the proposals from the local education authority and the governors of the voluntary-aided schools. There are more than 100 schools involved and the issues are complex and require detailed examination. He expects to announce his decision in January.

Standard Assessment Tests

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now publish the aggregate results for the standard assessment tests for key stage one, by local education authority.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has today, published the national results of this summer's tests on seven-year-olds, together with the results of LEAs in England. Copies have been placed in the Library.

County Schools (Funding)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on capital allocations for county schools for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Local education authorities have today been informed of their annual capital guidelines—ACGs—and supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—for education for 1992-93. These figures again amount to a substantial increase in local education authorities' borrowing power for education capital expenditure. They build further on the increases in the last two years.

Allocations for education capital—in the form of ACGs and SCAs—will total £590 million compared with £538 million in 1991-92, a rise of over 9·5 per cent.

A total of £524 million is available for schools—an increase of 11 per cent.—and £66 million for further education.

Within the schools sector I have again given priority to:

Second and third-year expenditure on work covered by ACGs in earlier years.

Projects to provide new school places in areas of population growth.

New projects to implement approved proposals to remove surplus places.

Making a bigger contribution towards getting rid of deficiencies in existing school buildings and for work needed for the effective delivery of the national curriculum. A total of £148 million is available for such improvements in 1992-93, an increase of 36 per cent. on the equivalent figure for 1991-92.

A total of £15 million of this latter sum, as my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) announced on 4 December, is to be allocated in the form of SCAs to LEAs bidding for their schools to become technology schools as part of the technology schools initiative. The remainder has been distributed to LEAs by formula passed on numbers of pupils and substandard places in schools.

Because of the proposals in the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament to transfer all sixth-form colleges to the new further education sector, I am also issuing SCAs to LEAs in respect of their capital expenditure at sixth form colleges. This will enable LEAs' expenditure to be separately identified so that they can be recompensed by the proposed funding council for any outstanding debt.

Within the further education sector, my programme includes allocations of £43 million to meet commitments arising from 54 major buildings projects with a total completion value of £150 million. In addition, I have awarded allocations of £14 million for minor works and equipment. This will help colleges to prepare for the reforms proposed in the Further and Higher Education Bill now in Parliament. A further £9 million will be allocated during 1992-93. All allocations for further education will be by SCAs, hypothecated for particular purposes.

My programme and the SCAs announced today do not represent the full total of funds available to LEAs for capital expenditure. Authorities are also able to spend additional sums from capital receipts and from their revenue budgets if they so choose.

The 9·5 per cent. increase in ACGs is well ahead of the rate of inflation and purchasing power is further boosted at a time of lower building tender prices. The figures for 1992-93 represent a 22 per cent. increase over two years and a 93 per cent. increase since 1987-88. For schools alone the figure has doubled since 1987-88. This underlines the Government's continuing commitment to secure improvements to our school buidings.

Lists of ACGs and SCAs allocated to individual local authorities are as follows:

Sport

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the Government's statement on sports policy and its response to the Education Science and Arts Committee's Fourth Report of Session 1990-91, "Sport in Schools"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Government's review of sports policy was initiated; and if he will make a statement on progress towards its completion.

Mr. Atkins: I am happy to announce today that we are publishing a statement which sets out clearly and comprehensively our policies and priorities for sport and active recreation. It focuses largely on England and Wales, although where appropriate it covers United Kingdom issues. We are also publishing today the Government's response to the Education, Science and Arts Committee's report, "Sport in Schools".

Very substantial sums are now available to sport from the private sector, including funds from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts and the Football Trust, assisted by recent reductions in the rate of pool betting duty. We now propose to establish a business sponsorship incentive scheme for sport similar to that run for the arts and targeted at the grassroots level. Its initial funding for 1992-93 will be in excess of £3 million and it will cover England, Scotland and Wales.

The statement reaffirms our belief that sport should be free from Government intervention, but that the principle of channelling assistance for sport through independent but accountable bodies remains sound. The present structure, however, is in need of reform and in the statement we announce proposals for replacing the present Great Britain Sports Council with a United Kingdom Sports Commission and a Sports Council for England. These proposals are broadly in line with those which the Great Britain Sports Council itself made in the course of the review which would require the surrender of its royal charter.

The statement, and our response to the Committee, set out a number of ways for improving opportunities for young people to take part in sport particularly by promoting partnerships between schools and other organisations in the local community. We intend to publish guidance on good practice in promoting such partnerships next year. Guidance is also to be issued to schools on the information they should make regularly available to parents on sports facilities and sporting achievements.

These proposals build on existing decisions:—

to make PE a compulsory subject in the national curriculum until the age of 16; to require all school children to be taught to swim by the time they leave primary school; to institute a champion coaching pilot scheme for the extra-curricular coaching of school children; to support legislation which will allow school governors to enter into dual use agreements for the joint management of school premises out of school hours; to provide financial resources to promote the greater integration of disabled sport and able-bodied sport;

to encourage the establishment of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts providing some £40 million per annum extra finance for sport; to introduce proposals to create a new criminal offence of providing anabolic steroids to minors, and further research to ascertain the extent of the steroid problem; to encourage sporting contact with South Africa on a sport by sport basis for racially integrated sports; and to provide up to £2 million for feasibility studies which will assist Government in reaching a decision on whether to offer support for the Manchester Olympic bid.

This statement represents a comprehensive summary of the Government's initiatives and proposals to take sport and active recreation towards the next century.

LINC Project

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last had discussions with Nottingham university concerning the progress of the language in the national curriculum project.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions, but officials have maintained contact with the project's director.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the National Association for the Teaching of English and with the National Association of Advisers in English with reference to the language in the national curriculum project.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such discussions.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the university of Bath concerning its recent findings on the efficacy of the language in the national curriculum programme for teachers.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such representations from the university of Bath.

ILEA Art Collection

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science where the former Inner London education authority art collection is now kept; and what are the arrangements for the distribution or sale of the collection.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

Under-fives

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the figures for 1991 for the percentage of under-fives in (a) nursery schools, (b) nursery classes, (c) infant classes and (d) in total, by local education authority in England, in rank order.

Mr. Eggar: Provisional information on the percentage of under-fives, in each of the categories requested, within each local education authority in England in January 1991, and the rank order of each local education authority, is given in the table.

Number of pupils under 5 in Maintained schools shown as a percentage of the estimated 3 and 4 year old population within each LEA in England, as at January 1991[1,2,3]

School Playing Fields

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he intends to take to safeguard school playing fields from re-development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Local Education Authorities are responsible for taking decisions on whether or not to dispose of school playing fields. It is the Government's policy to encourage authorities to dispose of land and buildings which have become surplus to requirements through the rationalisation of school provision. However, in view of public concern over the continuing loss of school playing fields to redevelopment, I have to-day written to the local authority associations seeking their comments on a letter I propose to issue to all local education authorities. The letter will ask LEAs not to dispose of school playing fields unless they have first investigated and established that they will not be needed in the long term for school or community use. It will also say that in future when considering proposals involving school closures my right hon. and learned Friend will take account of authorities' plans for the retention of playing fields that may be needed to remedy any deficiencies in playing field provision at neighbouring schools.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many departmental officials, at what grade, and with what responsibilities, attended the round table briefing meeting on arms control and disarmament hosted by his Department for non-governmental organisations on 26 November; and what was the cost to his Department of the meeting.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The meeting was chaired by Mr. David Summerhayes, disarmament adviser and those attending included the heads of the arms control and disarmament, security policy and non-proliferation and defence departments of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and the head of the disarmament and arms control unit of the Ministry of Defence. The cost of the meeting has not been calculated.

Visas

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what responsibility the European Community will have for visa lists following the Maastricht meeting of Heads of Government; and what effect this will have on Commonwealth citizens applying for visas to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Once the revised treaty of Rome has entered into force, the Council of Ministers will be responsible for drawing up the list of countries, which may include Commonwealth ones, whose nationals must have a visa when crossing member states' external frontiers.

Fiji

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to persuade Fiji to adopt a revised constitution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. Fiji's new constitution is essentially an internal matter which is for the peoples of Fiji to decide.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he plans to send observers to the next Fijian elections.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No, but the British embassy in Suva will be reporting on the elections in the normal way.

Mr. Muhummad al Fasi

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Saudi Arabian Government regarding Mr. Muhummad al Fasi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Euratom

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what competence Euratom will have over United Kingdom military nuclear activities following the agreements made at the Maastricht meeting of the intergovernmental conference on European political and economic union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None. The Maastricht European Council made no substantial amendments to the Euratom treaty, although some consequential amendments will be necessary to reflect EC institutional changes.

Geneva Convention

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will be in a position to ratify the additional protocols to the 1949 Geneva convention.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We hope to be in a position to make a decision on ratification of the additional protocols to the 1949 Geneva conventions very soon.

CSCE

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Governments of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia respectively signed the charter of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe; and what discussions he or departmental officials have had with counterparts in the Baltic states over their accession to the treaty on conventional forces in Europe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Presidents of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania signed the charter of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe on 6 December.

Foreign Office and Ministry of Defence officials visited Estonia on 13 and 15 October to discuss a range of issues, including the treaty on conventional armed forces in Europe, the CFE treaty. We have had discussions at ambassadorial level with the Governments of the other Baltic states in their capitals and in Vienna. We expect to follow up these contacts with further visits in the new year. It is for the Baltic states themselves to decide whether to accede to the CFE treaty.

Maastricht

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish details of the redefinition or extension of Community competence in relation to (a) education, (b) training, (c) cohesion, (d) research and development, (e) environment, (f) trans-European networks, (g) industry, (h) health, (i) culture, (j) consumer protection and (k) development co-operation, resulting from the Maastricht agreement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The redefinition or extension of competence in all these areas is clearly set out in the relevant provisions of the treaty on union agreed at Maastricht, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Korea

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the recent agreements between the Governments of North and South Korea on the de-nuclearisation of the Korean peninsula under international verification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We warmly welcome the outcome of the recent north-south prime ministerial talks in Seoul, including the wish to replace the armistice by a peace agreement and to strengthen bilateral links and exchanges. There remains much to be done but we see these as positive steps forward.

We also welcome the south's offer of simultaneous inspection of sites to further help resolve the issue of nuclear safeguards. We hope the north will reciprocate.

THE ARTS

Northern Arts

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the amount of grant given to Northern Arts for each year since 1980.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is as follows

ACGB grant to Northern Arts

Years	£
1980-81	1,306,630
1981-82	1,456,051
1982-83	1,733,236
1983-84	1,819,020
1984-85	1,938,659
1985-86	2,086,802
1986-87	3,424,500
1987-88	3,510,500
1988-89	3,526,910
1989-90	3,626,775
1990-91	3,951,000
1991-92	4,426,914

Following the excellent 13·9 per cent. increase for the Arts Council which I announced last November, I am delighted that the Arts Council has decided to pass on to every regional arts board at least the same level of increase for next year. For 1992-93 Northern Arts will receive £5,043,000.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Central Statistical Office

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the quality and output of the Central Statistical Office; and what steps he is taking to improve them;

(2) what recent changes have been made to the structure and functioning of the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Maples: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies the Chancellor gave to my hon. Friends for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) and for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 19 November, at columns 139-41.

Taxpayers

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1992-93 the number of taxpayers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, giving numbers separately for employees and self-employed.

Mr. Maude: The number of taxpaying individuals, classified by main source of income in 1992-93, is estimated to be as follows with the illustrative assumption of 4 per cent. indexation of allowances from the autumn statement 1991:

	Million
Employees	19·3
Self-employed	2·8
Other[1]	2·9

[1] Includes pensioners and those with no earned income.

Separate figures for Great Britain and Northern Ireland are not available.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 the number of taxpayers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland who have taxable income less than (a) £500, (b) £1,000, (c) £1,500 and (d) £2,000.

Mr. Maude: Information for the United Kingdom is given in the table. Estimates for 1992-93 are approximate and are based on the illustrative 4 per cent. indexation of allowances from the autumn statement 1991.

Estimated number of taxpayers (millions)

Taxable income[1] £ per year	1991-92	1992-93
Less than 500	1·1	1
Less than 1,000	2·3	2¼
Less than 1,500	3·4	3¼
Less than 2,000	4·3	4¼

[1] Income for income tax purposes less allowances and reliefs.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 the number of taxpayers in Great Britain and Northern Ireland who have gross income (i) less than £10,000, (ii) between £10,000 and £20,000, (iii) between £20,000 and £30,000 and (iv) between £30,000 and £40,000.

Mr. Maude: Information for the United Kingdom is given in the table. The estimates for 1992-93 are approximate and are based on the 4 per cent. illustrative indexation of allowances from the autumn statement 1991.

Estimated numbers of taxpayers (millions)

Gross income £ per year	1991-92	1992-93
Less than 10,000	10·2	9½
10,000 to 20,000	10·5	10½
20,000 to 30,000	2·9	3¼
30,000 to 40,000	0·8	1
Over 40,000	0·7	¾
Total	25·1	25

I regret that it is not possible to provide separate estimates for Northern Ireland.

66. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent estimates for 1991-92 of (a) how many taxpayers get additional personal allowance and widows' bereavement allowance, (b) how many of these also get one parent benefit and widowed mothers' allowance and (c) how many of these are also receiving means-tested benefits in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: The information is as follows:

(a) About 500,000 taxpayers benefit from the additional pesonal allowance, and 100,000 from the widows' bereavement allowance.

(b) The estimated average numbers in Great Britain receiving one parent benefit and widowed mothers' allowance in 1991-92 are 785,000 and 65,000 respectively. However, the benefits system cannot distinguish between taxpayers and non-taxpayers or identify those who benefit from a specific tax allowance.

(c) Estimates are not available of the numbers at (b) who are also receiving income-related benefits.

Medical Insurance

59. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for the cost to the Exchequer in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of tax relief for private medical insurance premiums for persons aged over 60 years.

Mr. Maude: The estimated cost of the relief in respect of 1991-92 is expected to be about £60 million. The cost in respect of 1992-93 will depend on the level of premiums paid.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (a) £10,000, (b) £15,000 and (c) £20,000 a year with (i) the current tax allowances and reliefs and (ii) limiting all income tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, giving the revenue from each relief separately, the total revenue and the numbers of people affected, for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the introduction of the upper limits specified would yield the following:

£ million

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs	Yield in a full year under the current tax regime	Yield following restriction of all reliefs and specified allowances to the basic rate
£10,000	590	390
£20,000	140	90

The estimated yield from restricting all allowances, except the basic personal allowance, to the basic rate is about £300 million. The estimated yield from restricting all reliefs to the basic rate is £600 million. Of this figure, about £250 million results from restricting relief on employee contributions to occupational pensions and about £150 million results from restricting relief on personal pension contributions.

National Insurance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue yield in (a) the first year and (b) a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, of extending national insurance contributions to all employee taxable benefits in kind, for employees in Great Britain and Northern Ireland who earn over £8,500, distinguishing between employee and employer contributions, listing the revenue from each benefit and assuming the abolition of the national insurance upper earnings limit.

Mr. Maude: The additional revenue for the United Kingdom in a full year at 1991-92 levels is shown in the table which gives the available analysis by type of benefit. The estimates are based on an employee contribution rate of 9 per cent. and an employer contribution rate of 10·4 per cent. The estimates are calculated using the taxable value of the benefits. The yield in the first year would depend upon the administrative arrangements made to collect the new charge.

Revenue yield[1]

Type of benefit	From employees	£ million from employers
Car	400	[2]0
Car fuel	40	[2]0
Private medical insurance	40	40
Home telephone	10	10
Beneficial loans	20	20
Other benefits	200	230
Total	710	300

[1] For a full year at 1991-92 levels of income and benefit.
[2] These items are already subject to employer contributions.

ECOFIN

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Council of Economic and Finance Ministers.

Mr. Maples: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels on 16 December. I represented the United Kingdom with the Minister for Corporate Affairs.

The Council discussed the Portuguese Government's programme for economic convergence, and welcomed their ambitious targets for reducing inflation to a ceiling of 4 per cent. by the end of 1995, the general Government deficit to no more than 3 per cent. of GDP by 1995 and lowering the debt ratio. But the Council stressed that the achievement of these targets is highly dependent on the budget for 1992, the growth rate that is realised and the appropriate mix of policy instruments. The Council invited the Commission and the monetary committee to monitor the implementation of the programme and to report back to the Council before the end of 1992.

The Council confirmed the agreement in principle reached at the Foreign Affairs Council that morning on a new package of emergency food aid to the value of 200 mecu for Moscow and St. Petersburg, and, if appropriate, other cities. Of this aid, 100 mecu can be released immediately and a further 100 mecu following consultation of the European Parliament in mid January. The earlier proposals for a loan totalling 1·25 becu for three years was also formally adopted and it was agreed that the first tranche, of 500 mecu should now be released as soon as possible.

The Council discussed the ideas for a carbon/energy tax contained in the Commission's communication and took note of reports from the fiscal aspects group and the conclusions of the joint Energy and Environment Council held on 13 December. It was agreed that the fiscal aspects working group should undertake work on the basis of additional analysis of the issues by the Commission and that the Council would re-examine the question before May in preparation for the UNCED Council in Rio.

The Council discussed several matters relating to the abolition of fiscal frontiers, and formally adopted the directive on the VAT transitional arrangements to apply after 1992.

Political agreement was reached on the draft directive on the arrangements for the holding, movement and control of goods subject to excise duty. This agreement includes satisfactory provision for minimum indicative levels to distinguish between commercial and private transactions in tobacco products and alcoholic drinks, since commercial transactions are taxed in the country of destination while private transactions are taxed in the country of origin. The minimum indicative levels agreed were as follows:

Item	Amount
Cigarettes	800
Cigarillos	400
Cigars	200
Smoking tobacco	1kg
Spirits	10 litres
Intermediate products	20 litres
Wine	[1]90 litres
Beer	110 litres

[1] Including a maximum of 60 litres of sparkling wines.

Above these levels, the transaction may be taken to be of a commercial character unless the person concerned can establish to the satisfation of the fiscal authorities that it is not.

For limited period, Ireland will be able to apply minimum indicative levels for wines and beer at 50 per cent. of the levels generally agreed. Special arrangements were also agreed to allow Denmark to continue to apply its current travellers' allowances on spirits and tobacco after 1992.

Subject to parliamentary scrutiny, agreement was also reached on extended and modified derogations for Ireland and Denmark from the directive on travellers' allowances, to apply during 1992.

Denmark will continue to apply its current levels of travellers' allowances, while for Ireland, the agreement provides for the following revised allowances:

	Current allowance	Allowance to apply in 1992
Cigarettes (number)	150	300
Smoking tobacco (grams)	400	400
Spirits (litres)	0·75	1·5
or
Intermediate products and sparkling wine (litres)	1·5	3
Still wine (litres)	2·5	5
Beer (litres)	[1]12 and 25	[1]15 and 30
Other products (ecu)	[2]110	[3]175

[1] for travellers out of the Republic for less and more than 24 hours respectively
[2] subject to a single item limit of 95 ecu
[3] subject to a single item limit of 150 ecu for travellers out of the Republic for more than 24 hours, 110 ecu for less than 24 hours.

The Council also took note of a progress report by the Dutch presidency on the last six months and the work to be done before 1 January 1993.

The Community's acceptance of the "Helsinki package" of reforms to the OECD consensus on export credits was confirmed. This agreement incorporates a welcome reduction in trade distorting export credit subsidy to the benefit of taxpayers and a tightening of the rules on the provision of tied aid subsidies so that these are better targeted on aid-worthy projects in aid-worthy countries.

The Council took note of a report from the Commission on a proposal for a directive on withholding taxes on interest and royalty payments and remitted the proposal to a working group for further work.

The Council also took note of a joint report from the Commission and the European investment bank on lending by the European investment bank outside the Community.

The conclusions of that morning's meeting of the Transport Council on road transport taxation were remitted to an ad hoc working group for further discussion.

The investment services directive was also discussed in a group of personal representatives at which the Minister for Corporate Affairs represented the United Kingdom. No decisions were reached.

Uncollected Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, columns 37-38, he will publish a table showing the levels of uncollected tax at the end of the financial year 1989-90 and 1990-91 for (a) value added tax, (b) income tax, including schedule D and (c) corporation tax, excise duties and capital gains tax, expressed both as a sum figure and as a percentage of total tax due for each category.

[redacted]an Shephard [holding answer 12 December 1991]: Information on average daily arrears of value added tax, on the basis of financial years, and on income tax, corporation tax, and capital gains tax arrears at years ending 31 October can be found in "Volume 12: Classes XVIII to XIX" of the 1990-91 appropriation accounts, pages vii and xiii respectively. A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

Arrears of excise duty on drink, tobacco and road fuel are not collated centrally. However, these duties are either paid in cash on clearance to home consumption or by duty deferment backed up by a financial guarantee. In either case the possibility for arrears is minimal. Arrears of car tax, and betting and gaming duty can however arise and were as follows:

	Arrears £ million	As percentage of receipts
31 March 1990	48·9	2·0
31 March 1991	6·9	0·3

In general, the bulk of the sums of tax in arrears are collectable and remain outstanding only for short periods, possibly days. Sums outstanding for longer periods risk incurring penalties or interest charges. Ultimately the Revenue Departments write off only those sums indicated in the reply of 2 December 1991, Official Report, columns 37-38. Write-offs occur mainly through insolvencies or from traders becoming untraceable.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage corporation tax would have to be increased to raise an amount equivalent to the amount raised by the uniform business rate in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 16 December 1991]: Assuming no changes in company behaviour, the corporation tax rate, applied to profits from 1 April 1988 onwards, would need to have been more than 20 percentage points higher to yield a sum over these two years equivalent to the amount raised from non-domestic property by way of rates.

In the absence of rates, the required increase would have been significantly less because rates are allowed as a deduction in computing profits for corporation tax. Information required to quantify the level is not available.

Rates raise revenue to pay for services provided by local authorities by taxing the occupation of non-domestic property. As such, they are levied on unincorporated businesses, partnerships and the self employed who are liable to income tax, as well as the corporate sector which is liable to corporation tax.

Self-employed and Partnerships

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the Exchequer's revenue of applying corporation rather than income tax to the self-employed and partnerships.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 December 1991]: There would be an effect on the timing of tax payments. Partnerships and the self-employed pay tax for income tax years in two instalments, three months before and three months after the end of the tax year. Corporation tax is paid in one instalment nine months after the end of the accounting period. There would also be an effect on the amount of tax paid, but the extent would depend on how the rules for taxing companies were adapted to tax the self-employed and partnerships.

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the tax consequences of the privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity.

Mr. Maude: The Electricity (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 provides for the transfer of the business assets and liabilities of Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE) to a number of successor companies into private ownership. Under normal tax rules a number of tax consequences would arise solely as a result of the pre-privatisation reorganisation of NIE into the successor companies. We intend to introduce legislation in 1992 designed to treat the reorganisation on a tax-neutral basis in accordance with the Government's general policy on privatisation.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public funding has been given since the establishment of the London Docklands development corporation to the London Arena development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The total public sector contribution to the capital cost of the London Arena is £3·425 million.

Caravan Site, Basingstoke

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of establishing under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 the site at Peak Copse, Dummer, Basingstoke, including all the preliminaries, the cost of the public inquiry and the cost of actual construction.

Mr. Yeo: The cost of the preliminary work on the planning application concerning the site and of the public local inquiry which was held in January 1989, fell principally on Hampshire county council. The costs of the inquiry inspector, which were borne by the Secretary of State, are not separately identifiable.

The actual cost of constructing the site will not be known before completion of the scheme in mid 1992, but the tender accepted by the Hampshire county council in the sum of £616,738 is within the approved estimate for gipsy site grant.

Cycling (Royal Parks)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the provision of cycling facilities will be considered by the independent review group on royal parks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The royal parks review group is considering the provision of cycling facilities in Hyde park and Kensington gardens and will report its conclusions on this and other matters early next year.

Private Tenancies

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received about the practice of certain private landlords of requiring a tenancy to be terminated when a baby is born to the tenant; what information he has as to how widespread this practice is; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any plans to prohibit private landlords from terminating tenancies when a child is born to the tenant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations. Landlords may obtain possession from an assured tenant to whom a child has been born only if a term of the tenancy agreement has thereby been breached, or if the landlord is otherwise entitled to possession. In either case a court order is necessary and the landlord must satisfy the court that it is reasonable to grant him possession for a breach of the terms of the tenancy. A tenant will therefore be aware of the likelihood that he will not be able to remain after a child is born at the point where he accepts the tenancy. We have no plans to change the law in this respect.

West Kent Housing Association

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant was given by his Department to West Kent housing association in respect of the proposed voluntary transfer of housing stock.

Sir George Young: My Department has not given any grant to the West Kent housing association in respect of the proposed transfer of the new town housing stock at Basildon nor are there any powers so to do. However, in accordance with the provisions of the New Towns (Transfer of Housing Stock) Regulations 1990, as amended, the Commission for the New Towns will pay the reasonable costs incurred by both the West Kent housing association and Basildon district council in connection with a ballot of tenants.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy, the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 2 December at column 42, on energy efficiency investment, if he will break down the figure of £900 million into its component parts.

Mr. Yeo: A breakdown of the figure of £900 million for the financial year 1990-91 is not available. However, the 1986 English house condition survey indicated that of all major expenditure on the public sector stock, directed at the improvement of heating and insulation, some 73 per cent. was for installing or repairing central heating and nearly 9 per cent for other heating. Around 17 per cent was spent on wall insulation and some 1 per cent on loft and roof insulation.

Planning Zones

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in order to encourage local planning authorities to make simplified planning zones on appropriate cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Planning and Compensation Act 1991 provides for substantial simplification and streamlining of the procedure for making simplified planning zones—SPZs. Regulations for the detailed implementation of this will be laid before the House in due course.

I have today issued a consultation paper setting out our proposals for such regulations, and for the revision and inclusion in a single document of the Department's guidance to authorities on the making of SPZs.

Authorities have a duty under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to keep under review the desirability of making SPZs for parts of their area.

National Wildlife Parks (Military Use)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on whether military use is permitted of national and wildlife parks in each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 18 December 1991]: Military use is permitted in protected areas in other European Community countries, but information for each member country is not readily available.

Windscale Inquiry

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are to publish the study by Lyons (CB) Ltd. of press reporting of the Windscale public inquiry.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

This report was commissioned for the Health and Safety Executive's internal use and there are no plans to publish it.

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the design of the next phase of the new parliamentary building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The consultant architect appointed by my Department, Michael Hopkins and Partners, completed their preliminary sketch plan stage proposals in October. These were presented to the New Building Sub Committee which endorsed the way the scheme is developing. A text of the letter I received from the Chairman, the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) and of my reply along with copies of Hopkins' report are being placed in the Library.

Design work, and discussions with London Underground Ltd. on the integration of the scheme and the proposed new Westminster station are continuing. It is planned to publish the final sketch plan proposals early next year.

The letter from the hon. Member for Ogmore and my reply to him are as follows.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HOUSE OF COMMONS (SERVICES): NEW BUILDING SUB-COMMITTEE

22nd October 1991

Dear Michael

Bridge Street Phase 2

At its meeting last Tuesday the New Building Sub-Committee received a presentation from Mr. Michael Hopkins on his Preliminary Sketch Plan Report for Phase 2 of the new parliamentary building project. As the Sub-Committee will shortly cease to exist, and as there may be a lengthy interval before the new Accommodation Committee is set up, I thought it would be helpful if I wrote to inform you of the Sub-Committee's present views in regard to Phase 2.

In general the Sub-Committee is very pleased with the way the designs are shaping up. Last week we were shown elevations of the proposed building for the first time, and I think I speak for all my colleagues who were present in saying that these were very encouraging. We appreciate, of course, that Mr. Hopkins is still actively developing his views about the appearance of the building, and that it will not be until next Spring that the plans are finalised.

We approved the proposals for Members' offices contained in the PSP Report. In particular we are content with the proposal that about 104 "sets" should contain ensuite accommodation for Members' staff, while in a further 92 "sets" space will be shared with other Members' staff.

Mr. Hopkins's proposals for the internal layout of the building, especially on the ground and first floors, are still being developed. We regard the proposals to roof in either the inner courtyard (at second floor level), or the outer space formed between Phase 2 and Norman Shaw South, as interesting, and we certainly think Mr. Hopkins should further investigate each possibility in order to establish its pros and cons. We are sure that he will bear in mind the importance of ensuring, if at all possible, that the minimum allocations of space for specific functions as set out in the Services Committee's Initial Brief are adhered to in whatever emerges as his favoured layout.

We approved Mr. Hopkin's new proposals to carry the load of the building on its perimeter walls and on six columns extending downward to the base of the station, rather than on a horizontal concrete "raft". We think it essential, however, that whatever means are chosen to separate the parliamentary building from the London underground station below it, the highest priority must be given to ensuring that noise and vibration from the trains do not disturb Members and staff in their offices.

Mr. Hopkins reported to us on the difficulties which have arisen in relation to the siting of ventilation shafts. This is a matter which will clearly have to be looked at in detail by our successors, but we wish to put on record our concern at the proposed introduction of such shafts within the parliamentary estate. The aesthetic and other disadvantages that might arise from such a proposal will need to be carefully evaluated.

Finally, we note that a number of issues remain to be resolved in discussions with London Underground. Our successors will need to satisfy themselves that suitable arrangements have been made with regard to the location of the temporary ticket hall, achieving an early start to the construction of the parliamentary building, shared use of the site during the construction period, future ownership of the land, and provisions to insulate the parliamentary building from noise and vibration. It will also be important to receive confirmation from London Underground that the construction timetable they have previously outlined in evidence to the Service Committee is still operative.

We understand that London Underground propose shortly to introduce a further private bill dealing with the Jubilee Line. Our successors may well wish to enquire into any proposals in this bill which directly impinge on the parliamentary estate, and to report to the House on them before the bill is given a second reading. This would be a similar procedure to that which the Services Committee adopted with regard to the original Jubilee line bill in Session 1989-90.

Subject to progress in resolving these issues, and to the satisfactory passage of the London Underground Bill through Parliament, we see no reason why the target of Spring 1992 for the commencement of work on site should not be achieved. We wish to put on record our thanks to Mr. Hopkins, and to his junior colleague Mr. John Pringle, for all the work they have done and for the constructive and creative way in which they have sought to interpret their necessarily complex brief.

15 December 1991

Dear Ray,

NEW PARLIAMENTARY BUILDING

Thank you for your letter of 22 October recording the outcome of the New Building Sub Committee's consideration of Michael Hopkins and Partners proposals for the next phase of the New Parliamentary Building. Before dealing with the issues you raise may I congratulate you first on becoming Chairman of the new Accommodation and Works Committee. I am sure it is very important to the development of the proposals for the new building that there should be this continuity with the depth of knowledge it brings to the scheme.

I had the opportunity last week to visit Hopkins' office to see their proposals. He has done considerable work since the presentation to the Sub Committee and it is quite clear that there are the makings of a fine scheme. The massing, scale and silhouette of the building are now becoming much clearer and will, I think, contribute greatly to the important views across the River Thames as well as the more oblique views from Parliament Square. The choice of materials is of great importance. There is a very difficult balance to be struck between the red brick of the Norman Shaw buildings and the lighter brown stone used on the Palace. I know from our discussions that Michael Hopkins is very conscious of this point.

It is, I believe, essentially a matter for the House to determine the priorities for the use of the accommodation which can be provided in the building. I note that your Sub Committee was content with the proposals for Members' offices and I think you will find that the most recent work to develop the proposals for the ground and first floors will not only result in an exciting space but will assist considerably in increasing the amount of accommodation available without in any way overdeveloping the site.

It is quite clear, both from your letter and the reports I have received, that there is still a considerable amount of work to be done to integrate successfully the proposed extension to the Jubilee Line with the new building. I consider it very important therefore that the discussions involving my officials, London Underground and the House should be pursued rigorously to try to achieve the timetable you set out so that all the necessary information is made available to enable the House to take an early view on the impact of the proposed Extension and to reach agreement on the way ahead without delaying unnecessarily the new building.

I shall be keeping in touch as the design continues to develop and look forward to seeing a fully worked up scheme early in the New Year.

Yours faithfully,

MICHAEL HESELTINE

Bottled Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations exist to control bottled (a) mineral water and (b) spring water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The Natural Mineral Water Regulations 1985 control the exploitation and marketing of natural mineral waters in Great Britain. Similar controls apply in Northern Ireland. Regulations laying down specific controls for other bottled waters are currently being drafted.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Lilley: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Export Licences

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will name the destinations for which export licence applications are subject to special consideration for strategic and proliferation reasons.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have decided to publish a list of destinations for which export licence applications are subject to special consideration to serve as a guide to industry. The list, which is subject to regular review, is based on strategic and proliferation concerns and other criteria, including the risk of diversion and the lack of effective export controls. The destinations are as follows:

Afghanistan
Albania
Algeria
Angola
Argentina
Brazil
Bulgaria
Burma
China
Cuba

Czechoslovakia
Egypt
Estonia
Hungary
India
Iran
Iraq
Israel
Latvia
Libya
Lithuania
Mongolia
North Korea
Pakistan
Poland
Romania
Somalia
South Africa
South Korea
Soviet Union
Syria
Taiwan
Vietnam

Export licence applications will continue to be considered on a case by case basis in accordance with stringent criteria. The inclusion of a destination on the list does not in itself preclude the granting of an export licence. Normal licensing procedures continue to apply in respect of exports to other destinations.

Executive Directors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to amend company law so that a non-executive director who has been chairman of the remunerations sub-committee of the board of directors of a public company cannot himself or herself be subsequently appointed to executive director posts whose remunerations were determined by that sub-committee.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 17 December 1991]: Detailed internal arrangements of companies and their boards are a matter for companies, operating in the case of listed companies under stock exchange rules.

The Secretary of State has no plans to amend company law, which provides for proper disclosure of remuneration of directors and chairmen and gives shareholders an adequate measure of control over the appointment and remuneration of directors.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Vietnam

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on progress made in allocating the £1 million set-aside in May 1990 for a special joint funding scheme in Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: The £1 million set aside under this scheme has been fully committed to 18 projects in those areas of north Vietnam from which boat people have predominantly come. The British non-governmental organisations—NGOs—with whom we are co-operating are Action Aid, Safe the Children Fund, Care and Marie Stopes International. Projects cover a wide range of community development activities, including water supply and irrigation, income generation schemes in afforestation, aquaculture and smallholder farming, mother and child health and family planning.

In addition, under ODA's regular joint funding scheme, we have made further substantial commitments to NGO projects in other areas of Vietnam. These now total just over £850,000.

Renewable Natural Resources

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what activities have been funded by the ODA under the strategy for research on renewable natural resources.

Mrs. Chalker: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the annual report 1990-91 on the strategy for research on renewable natural resources. The report gives an overview of the objectives and achievements of work undertaken in 1990-91 and outlines the direction of future work.

Iraq

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he plans to provide further humanitarian assistance to civilians in Iraq.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes. Since April we have spent over £44 million in aid for the people of Iraq. This figure continues to rise. We are supporting the work of British and British-based Iraqi relief organisations, and United Nations agencies, and are in constant touch with them about how we can help further.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will bring forward legislation to provide that Secretaries of State must be members of the Cabinet;

(2) if he will bring forward legislation to amend the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975 to allow the Lord Chancellor to be a Member of the House of Commons;

(3) if he will bring forward legislation to abolish the post of Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chancellor's Department, and to establish in their place a Secretary of State for Law and a Department of Law;

(4) if he will bring forward legislation to replace the title of Secretary of State by the title of Cabinet Minister;

(5) if he will bring forward legislation to provide that the Attorney-General must be a member of either the Commons or the Lords.

The Prime Minister: No.

Soviet Republics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to make available to the Governments of the Republics of the former Soviet Union, United Kingdom expertise in (a) civil and military nuclear technology, (b) environmental pollution abatement and (c) food distribution.

The Prime Minister: United Kingdom expertise in civil uses of nuclear power and food distribution can be made available to the republics of the former Soviet Union under the auspices of our know-how fund. A separate fund for tackling environmental problems will come into operation next year. We are studying how we might help the republics reduce the risks of the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Maastricht

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list in the Official Report those topics on which the institutions of the European Community will not possess a basis of views for any opinion, recommendations, legislation, expenditure or adjudication, consequent to the adoption of the draft treaties agreed at Maastricht.

The Prime Minister: The provisions of the treaty on European union agreed at Maastricht, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, make clear the conditions under which the institutions of the European Community may act.

Lord Chancellor

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the legal qualifications necessary for appointment as (a) Lord Chancellor and (b) Attorney-General.

The Prime Minister: The Lord Chancellor must be a person able to discharge duties as the president of the supreme court of judicature—that is, the Court of Appeal, the High Court and the Crown court—and also as the presiding chairman of the House of Lords in its judicial capacity. In order that he or she may represent the Crown in each of the Queen's courts in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, the Attorney-General is a member of the Bar of England and Wales.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 19 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRANSPORT

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the allocation of the transport supplementary grant and credit approvals for capital expenditure on local roads in England for 1992-93.

Mr. Rifkind: A total of £370 million transport supplementary grant—TSG—plus £510 million in annual capital guideline—ACG—and supplementary credit approval—SCA—are to be allocated to local highway authorities in England for capital expenditure on their roads in 1992-93. With the help of capital reserves and developer contributions, I therefore expect authorities to be able to spend well over £1,000 million in total.

Table 1 sets out the national totals for different types of expenditure. Table 2 shows the total amounts of TSG, credit approval and gross approved expenditure for each of the 108 local highway authorities. They are being notified today of their allocations by the Department's regional offices.

Leaving aside the grant newly allocated for structural maintenance in 1991-92 and 1992-93, there is to be about the same amount of TSG as for 1991-92, but it is 18 per cent. more than for 1990-91.

Authorities will be able to make a start on the 37 new major schemes listed in table 3, which are to be newly accepted for TSG. Authorities will also be able to make progress with certain other major schemes using only credit approvals.

These new major schemes will, like the 274 others which continue to receive TSG support, relieve communities of the noise and danger of heavy through traffic, aid inner city regeneration and help to open up new opportunities for development and growth.

There is to be a 17 per cent. increase in minor works expenditure and, within that, a 38 per cent. increase in expenditure ear-marked for local safety schemes.

I am pleased with the start that local authorities have made in using the money we allocated for local safety schemes for 1991-92. Even if they spend no more than the grant and credit approvals that we have given them, over 1991-92 and 1992-93 they will have had the potential to carry out around 7,700 local safety schemes which could save 170 lives and prevent 2,200 serious injuries and 9,000 other casualties in any 12-month period.

The £110 million accepted expenditure for bridge maintenance, which is 22 per cent. more than for 1991-92, will enable authorities to maintain the momentum of this important programme of work and the £95 million allocated for maintenance of the roads which form part of the primary route network will help ensure that these important transport links are properly maintained.

Marchioness

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans any further inquiry following the report by the Marine Accident Investigation Branch on the Bowbelle and Marchioness disaster.

Mr. Rifkind: The marine accident investigation branch carried out a thorough inspector's inquiry into this accident; the report included 27 safety recommendations. Action on 20 of them is complete and the remainder are being implemented. In addition, the MAIB report included criticism of some aspects of my Department's and the maritime industry's approach to river safety in earlier years. Although the MAIB considered that there have been recent improvements in this respect, I have concluded that it would be desirable to set up an independent investigation into these matters.

I am pleased to be able to announce that Mr. John Hayes, Secretary General of the Law Society has agreed to carry out an investigation with the following terms of reference:

"In the light of the BOWBELLE/MARCHIONESS disaster, to examine the handling since 1980 by the Department of Transport of its responsibility for the safety of vessels on rivers and inland waters and to report on the effectiveness of the present approach. The investigation should take account of developments in the field of marine safety at the international level."

Mr. Hayes will be assisted by an expert adviser. He will start work as soon as possible in the new year. Mr. Hayes will be inviting all those who may wish to do so to put their views to him. His report will be published.

Plymouth City Airport

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what attempts were made by his Department to consult about levels of public safety with the Civil Aviation Authority and Plymouth city council before the approval in 1987 of the extension and reorientation of Plymouth city airport main runway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Aerodrome licensing and aircraft safety are the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. The extension and realignment of Plymouth airport's main runway required planning permission and had to meet the authority's licensing criteria. I understand that there were extensive consultations between the authority and Plymouth city council prior to the extension and realignment of the runway.

Airline Baggage

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether international passenger airline operators using United Kingdom airports are required to prevent unaccompanied baggage being carried unless indentified and subject to security control before it is carried; what are the International Civil Aviation Organisation requirements on this matter; whether they are enforced in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what interpretation has been given to the British Government by the Joint International Air Transport Association—Air Transport Association baggage security group on ICAO standard 5.1.4.; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what directives or regulations were in force to ensure that no unaccompanied baggage was carried on international flights at the time of the Lockerbie bombing; and what new requirements have been enforced since in regard to unaccompanied baggage;

(4) what steps have been taken since the Lockerbie bombing to ensure that there is a positive reconciliation of passenger with baggage; and how he ensures that the airlines carry out his policy.

Mr. McLoughlin: The ICAO standard, both as it stood at the time of the Lockerbie disaster and as revised subsequently, requires that baggage belonging to passengers who are booked to joint a flight but fail to do so should be identified, and the baggage should not be carried unless it is first subject to security controls. The United Kingdom was one of the first countries to make this a mandatory requirement. It did so in 1985, by means of a direction to aircraft operators under the Aviation Security Act 1982.

Both the ICAO standard and the United Kingdom requirement apply only to bags belonging to "no show" passengers. At present it is not possible to identify other unaccompanied bags, such as ones which have been misrouted, mishandled or misconnected and which are being returned to their owners, except by what are essentially manual methods. These are slow and cumbersome, and all leading aviation countries accept that it is not practicable to require their use at major airports because it would seriously reduce the capacity of the international air transport system.

It is recognised internationally that this problem can be overcome only by the development of sophisticated systems capable of identifying unaccompanied bags automatically. With this in mind, and building on proposal put forward by the joint IATA/ATA baggage security group, the European civil aviation conference has drawn up and published guidelines setting out the criteria that such systems will need to meet.

Several manufacturers are currently developing systems designed to meet these criteria. The results of initial trials are encouraging, although at present there are still a number of problems which need to be overcome. We in the United Kingdom have brought the manufacturers of the systems and the airlines together in an attempt to ensure that the problems are resolved as quickly as possible; and we have made it clear that, once they are resolved, we shall announce a date by which airlines will be required to identify all unaccompanied baggage loaded or transferred at our airports. No other country has yet made such a firm declaration of intent.

Tees and Hartlepool Trust Port

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a full investigation of the circumstances of the sale of the Tees and Hartlepool trust port; if he will make public his discussions with those representing the Tees and Hartlepool trust port management buy-out at the meeting planned for 17 December 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My. right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that the board of the Tees and Hartlepool port authority has conducted the sale of its undertaking with all due propriety, and in accordance with the provisions of the Ports Act 1991. There is no need for any investigation.

I met the Earl of Stockton and representatives of the senior management of the Tees and Hartlepool port authority on 18 December at their request. I regard our discussions as having been conducted in confidence.

Sealink Stenna

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of any discussions he or his Department have had with Sealink Stenna concerning the future of its ferry operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: We are keeping ourselves informed about developments within the Sealink Stenna cross-channel ferry operation. Decisions relating to the future of the services concerned are however a commercial matter for the company's management alone.

British Rail (Compensation)

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the financial compensation for commuters who suffer from BR services which do not reach the Government's performance standards announced in respect of Kent coastal services will be extended to users of the Greatly, Andover, Whitchurch and Overton services of British Rail.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his setting of new performance standards for the Kent coastal services from 1 January 1992 will apply to (a) London to Dover services via Tonbridge, (b) London to Hastings services via Tonbridge and (c) London to East Kent services via Maidstone East.

Mr. Freeman: The BR passengers charter will set individual objectives for all fifteen of the Network SouthEast route groups. BR will compensate season ticket holders if the service delivered falls significantly short of the published standards.

Trust Ports

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each trust port those parties which have expressed an interest in purchasing the respective trust port.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. That is a matter of commercial confidence between the trust port authority, as vendor of the port undertaking, and the parties concerned.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give an update of those trust ports which have lodged a scheme with his Department as required by the Ports Act 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: The situation remains as stated in the answer which I gave the hon. Member on 12 November 1991, at column 431.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give full details of those bids which the trust port authority is recommending the Secretary of State to accept.

Mr. McLoughlin: The only trust port authority which has as yet recommended a bid for my right hon. Friend's consent is the Tees and Hartlepool port authority, in respect of a bid from Teeside Holdings Limited. Details of that bid were set out by my right hon. and learned Friend in his answer of 18 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin).

Citizens Charter (Airlines)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to include British airlines within the provisions of the citizens charter; and if he will make a statement on passenger compensation for delayed or cancelled flights.

Mr. McLoughlin: The citizens charter is a programme to improve public services. I have no plans to extend its scope to cover British airlines, which all operate in the private sector.

Passenger compensation for delayed or cancelled flights is a matter for the commercial judgment of the airlines concerned.

Bus Companies

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what encouragement he is giving to bus companies to purchase environmentally friendly new vehicles to help ease current congestion and pollution.

Mr. Freeman: We are taking a number of steps to ease congestion and pollution by encouraging both greater use of the bus and more environmentally friendly buses. I announced a package of measures on 16 December, including the provision of at least £10 million over the next two years to fund demonstration projects to promote bus use; publication of the Department's "Keeping Buses Moving"—a guide for local authorities on the provision of bus priority measures; much tighter controls of the amount of pollutants which can be emitted from new heavy diesel vehicles from 1993 onwards; and the introduction in 1992 of an instrumented smoke emissions test for in-service vehicles, together with tough roadside enforcement.

Ashford Station

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department first gave consideration to an alternative cheaper international station at Ashford.

Mr. Freeman: I visited Ashford station in the company of British Rail officials on 30 May to see for myself what potential there might be for an alternative cheaper option for the international passenger station, and asked British Rail to examine the feasibility of my own ideas. This study proved abortive, but a proposal subsequently advanced by Eurotunnel has been a catalyst for plans for a cheaper station to be examined further.

Inland Waterways

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the successful bids for section 8 freight facilities grant schemes in respect of inland waterways.

Mr. Freeman: There have been seven successful applications for Inland Waterway freight facilities grant under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981. The awards have been as follows:

Millgate Investments Ltd., Gainsborough, Lincolnshire	369,340
Varma Services Ltd., Deptford, London SE	859,200
Sheffield Haulage and Storage Ltd., Rotherham	61,375
West Country Fuels Ltd., Gloucester	26,950
Colwick Petroleum Ltd., Nottingham	63,494
Sand and Gravel (Leeds) Ltd.	20,640
Wimpey Hobbs Ltd., Greenwich, London, SE	402,832

East Coast Line

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to combat the recent episodes of vandalism to equipment on the east coast line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that BR has been suffering very serious problems of vandalism on the east coast main line in recent weeks, particularly involving cutting and removal of signal cables at various points over a 100-mile stretch of the route in north-east England. The British Transport police, in co-operation with British Rail, have been undertaking a large-scale operation to contain and reduce the vandalism, and I understand that there have been some 50 arrests. British Rail is also speeding up the removal of redundant cabling and is taking measures to improve the security of key installations.

EMPLOYMENT

EC Earnings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the information he has of the level of national average earnings in each EC country at the present time, or the latest period for which information is available, both in that country's currency and in the sterling equivalent.

Mr. Forth: The information sought is set out in "Rapid Reports—Population and Social Condition, 1991/5; Earnings in Industry and Services", published by Eurostat, a copy of which is currently available in the Library. Data are given in national currencies, ecu, and purchasing power standards. At present there are 0·7 ecu to the pound.

Mr. Lewis Drake

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the actions taken by the Health and Safety Executive in connection with the fatal accident to Mr. Lewis Drake on 7 November at A. H. Markes Ltd., Low Moor, Bradford.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive investigation into the fatal accident to Mr. Lewis Drake at A. H. Marks and Co. Ltd., Bradford, began on 8 November 1991 and is continuing. The circumstances leading to the accident and the working procedures being followed, are under investigation by the HSE which has also examined the plant involved and given advice about its reinstatement.

Travel-to-Interview Scheme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) whether he has any plans to review the travel-to-interview scheme;

(2) if he will make it his policy to relate the money offered to interviewees under the travel-to-interview scheme to the benefits the interviewee is receiving rather than the salary of the job offered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The effectiveness of all the Departments programmes are continually monitored. As a result it was recognised that the salary limit applied to the travel-to-interview scheme was out of date. The limit will therefore be increased from £16,500 to £25,000 a year from 2 January 1992. We expect this will have significantly, increased the number of people helped.

The new salary covers 90 per cent. of all wage earners and will avoid the administrative complexities of a benefits based scheme. A link with benefits could in fact lead to more restricted eligibility than currently exists.

EC Social Action

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he proposes for his presence and participation in the European Community Social Affairs Council of Ministers meetings, when the other member states' Ministers are discussing matters arising under the social protocol agreed at the Maastricht summit meeting.

Mr. Forth: The treaty on European union agreed at the Maastricht European Council confirms that the social chapter within the present treaty—articles 117-122—will be retained without change and the United Kingdom will continue to participate fully in all relevant discussions about the development of the Community's social dimension.

A protocol to the treaty on European union notes that the 11 other member states wish to continue along the path laid down in the social charter, which they signed in 1989, and have adopted among themselves an agreement to that end. The conduct of business under that agreement is a matter for the 11 Governments concerned. The United Kingdom shall not take part in their deliberations, and any decisions taken by them shall not be applicable to the United Kingdom.

HM Dockyard, Portsmouth

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he plans to open for inspection to the public, all or in part, the file on the approval of ventilation arrangements at HM dockyard, Portsmouth, October 1933 to October 1968, ref. LAB 14 478, file no. SHW 4207 1960.

Mr. Forth: In accordance with the terms of the Public Records Acts, this file will be opened to the public after 30 years in January 1999.

ENERGY

European Energy Charter

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a report on his participation in the European energy charter signing ceremony on 16 and 17 December; what are the United Kingdom's primary objectives in signing the charter; if he will place a copy of the charter and the text of supporting in documents in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I attended the international conference on the European energy charter in the Hague on 16 and 17 December 1991. In addition to signing the charter on behalf of the United Kingdom, I made a short statement welcoming agreement of the charter as a political declaration and looking forward to negotiation of legally binding agreements and protocols to implement the principles and objectives of the charter.

I am pleased that the charter was signed on behalf of 31 European countries, the European Community, nine Soviet republics and the inter-state economic committee of the Soviet Union, and four non-European countries.

The United Kingdom's primary objective throughout the charter process has been to promote more open, non-discriminatory energy markets across Europe and throughout the world, and to assist in the achievement of economic efficiency and environmental benefits, particularly in the countries of eastern Europe and in the Soviet republics.

I will place a copy of the charter and the concluding document of the conference in the Library of the House.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of fossil-fuelled power stations have been fitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment in each EC member state in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department does not have this information.

Research and Development

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to strengthen his Department's research and development programme in the energy efficiency field after the current financial year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We will continue to develop the best practice programme which started in 1989. Expenditure on research, development, demonstration and dissemination of energy efficiency technology is planned to increase by some 14 per cent. in the coming financial year, and by further amounts in each of the succeeding two years.

The continuation of the development of best practice is in line with our commitments under the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" and with the recent recommendations by the Advisory Council on Research and Development and the Advisory Council on Science and Technology.

Gas Purification

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what evaluation he has made of the Haldor Topsoe SNOX flue gas purification plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department is aware of a large number of flue gas purification processes. It is the responsibility of plant operators to choose the most cost-effective means of meeting statutory limits on gaseous and other emissions.

Kozlodny Power Station

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the forms of assistance being provided by the British nuclear electricity industry via the World Association of Nuclear Operators for safety improvements, repairs and training at the Kozlodny nuclear power station in Bulgaria; how this aid is co-ordinated with the technical and financial assistance being arranged for Bulgaria by the G-24 group of nations; and when and under what conditions he expects Kozlodny to meet WANO safety standards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In response to recommendations from the G7 London summit in July 1991, the G24 group of countries has recently agreed procedures for co-ordinating the programmes of nuclear safety assistance which are being provided to central and eastern Europe by individual member countries and international organisations. The overall objective of the G24 assistance is to help the countries of central and eastern Europe to exercise their responsibilities in nuclear safety in an informed and effective manner in conformity with best international practice. The EC emergency assistance programme for Bulgaria will now fit within this co-ordination framework.

The World Association of Nuclear Operators is managing two aspects of the emergency programme of nuclear safety assistance to Bulgaria financed under the European Community's regional PHARE programme for 1991. These comprise urgent "housekeeping" measures to improve the physical condition of the older VVER 230 units at Kozloduy nuclear power plant and ensure the effective operation of safety systems, and a twinning programme under which western operators are providing guidance on operational safety improvements. In addition WANO is overseeing a six-month programme of generic design safety studies on the VVER 230.

An engineer from Scottish Nuclear is a member of the "housekeeping" team. Nuclear Electric has provided a quality assurance expert to assist in the implementation of the six-month programme and expects to send two more experts to Kozloduy in the new year. The United Kingdom nuclear industry is bidding for contracts under the six-month programme. The United Kingdom Government have also provided two experts to assist the European Commission with overall supervision of its programme of assistance.

Under the same emergency programme a consortium of EC safety authorities is undertaking safety analysis of the Kozloduy reactors and providing assistance to the Bulgarian regulatory authority. The UKAEA and the nuclear installations inspectorate are members of this consortium.

Decisions on further action to be taken to improve the safety of the reactors are the responsibility of the Bulgarian Government.

Wood Fuel

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what progress has been made since the "Wood: Fuel for Thought" conference in Bristol in October to exploit short-term arable coppice as a wood fuel.

Mr. Moynihan: I can today announce the setting up of the farm wood fuel and energy project in which five farms will grow short-rotation arable coppice as a commercial enterprise to produce wood fuel. The farmers who have agreed to participate are:

John Willmer Esq. of Clanfield, Oxford
Brian Maggs Esq. of Compton Dando, Bristol

Robert Goodwin Esq. of Kelvedon, Colchester
Christopher Barnes Esq. of Morebath, Tiverton and Lord Falmouth of Tregothnan, Truro

R. H. and R. W. Clutton, chartered surveyors and land agents, will be assisting these farmers to establish this energy crop and in due course will identify energy markets for the wood fuel.

The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service will independently monitor the commercial viability of these enterprises in order to inform other farmers interested in arable coppice. Environmental Research Limited will be carrying out an assessment of the environmental impact of the crop. I expect this project to be the first step in the realisation of the very significant potential for energy crops in the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the newly appointed head of the Security Service will meet hon. Members of Parliament formally to discuss her job.

Mr. Kenneth Ba[illegible]: The Security Service Act 1989 placed on a statutory footing the previous convention, under which the Director General of the Security Service was regarded as responsible to Ministers for the work of the service, and Ministers were in turn accountable to Parliament. There are no plans for any change in this framework.

Safer Cities Campaign

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given by his Department to (a) Swansea and (b) Cardiff in regard to involving those cities in his safer cities campaign.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office safer cities programme does not extend to Wales and consequently Cardiff and Swansea were not eligible for consideration. Separate arrangements for providing support for local crime prevention activity apply in Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the cities in the United Kingdom which were eligible under the criteria for the safer cities campaign and the figure granted to date to each of these cities.

Mr. John Patten: The following is a list of the 20 local authority areas in England selected for inclusion in the Home Office safer cities programme showing the amount of grant approved up to 17 December 1991 in support of local crime prevention activity:

Area	Grant approved
Birmingham	916,000
Bradford	966,000
Bristol	984,000
Coventry	939,000
Derby	[1]nil
Hartlepool	696,000
Hull	602,000
Leicester	[2]nil
Middlesbrough	[1]nil
Nottingham	793,000
Rochdale	655,000
Salford	697,000
Sunderland	586,000
Wirral	762,000
Wolverhampton	792,000
London Boroughs
Hammersmith and Fulham	[3]nil
Islington	853,000
Lewisham	1,031,000
Tower Hamlets	539,000
Wandsworth	531,000

[1] Project established October 1991.
[2] Project established September 1991.
[3] Project established December 1991.

The safer cities programme in Scotland and the safer towns initiative in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Scottish Office and Northern Ireland Office respectively.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any towns which were not formally in possession of city status were (a) considered and (b) offered involvement in the safer cities campaign.

Mr. John Patten: The term "safer cities" is a working title intended to denote the programme's concentration on inner-city and similar urban areas. All 57 district, metropolitan district and London borough council areas in England covered by the urban programme were considered for possible inclusion in the safer cities programme: a number of those invited to join, and in which safer cities projects have subsequently been established, do not have city status.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been (a) budgeted, (b) allocated and (c) paid out in respect of the safer cities campaign in the present financial year.

Mr. John Patten: In 1991-92 the estimate of the costs of the 20 local projects in the Home Office safer cities programme is £7·1 million. Of this £5·1 million is for grants to support local crime prevention activity all of which has been allocated to project areas. As at 9 December, £3·8 million of this grant money had been paid out or firmly committed to local crime prevention schemes.

City Centre Monitoring

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the use of closed-circuit television as a means of monitoring city centre activity with a view to targeting the deployment of police resources.

Mr. John Patten: The use of surveillance systems is an operational matter for chief officers. The Home Office crime prevention centre conducted a survey last year of more than 100 CCTV schemes in England, Wales and Scotland, and the results have been circulated to police forces.

Young Offenders

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange to the young offender institution at Hatfield during September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty one.

Closed-circuit Television

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been undertaken by or for his Department on the use of closed-circuit television in regard to criminal activity.

Mr. John Patten: Research is being undertaken by the Home Office on the effect of closed-circuit television on public order and the level of crime committed on the streets in Birmingham city centre.

Refugees

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for the issue of a travel document to a refugee residing in the United Kingdom who has the status of exceptional leave to remain.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Home Office certificates of identity are issued at the discretion of the Secretary of State and on payment of a fee of £15 to overseas nationals who have exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom where it can be shown that normal passport facilities have been refused by the authorities of their country of nationality or where it would be unreasonable to expect them to apply for national passports. A certificate of identity can be used as a travel document if recognised by the country of destination. People recognised as refugees under the terms of the United Nations refugees convention would normally be issued on request with a United Nations travel document.

Private Security Industry

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made for the regulation of the private security industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government believe that access to criminal records would be an essential ingredient of any statutory scheme for the regulation of the private security industry. They have, however, accepted the recommendation of the recent report on the scrutiny of criminal records that there should be no further extension of the arrangements for access to these records in advance of their computerisation. This is not expected to be completed until the mid-1990s. It is the Government's intention to publish a consultation paper towards the end of next year outlining our proposals for new disclosure arrangements.

For this reason alone, therefore, it is not appropriate at this time to consider statutory regulation of the private security industry. Other factors, however, also support the case against statutory regulation. The present level of offending by private security personnel does not justify the introduction of an inevitably expensive and bureaucratic licensing system. And although the Government recognise concerns about the quality of service provided by some private security firms, it believes that issues such as quality, training and wages are fundamentally matters for the industry and its customers. The Government therefore believe that the most appropriate position is for the industry to strengthen the existing self-regulation mechanisms.

The industry has already made considerable progress in self-regulation. Recent important developments include: the merging of the National Supervisory Council for Intruder Alarms and the security systems inspectorate of the British Security Industry Association to form the National Approved Council for Security Systems; the formation by the International Professional Security Association of the British Security Registration Board; and the involvement of the International Professional Security Association in plans to reconstitute the manned services inspectorate of the British Security Industry Association to make it independent of its parent body, thereby allowing it to offer its inspection services to non-members of the British Security Industry Association, as well as to members.

The adoption of standards, and the invocation of sanctions against those who fail to meet them, are an important part of the the industry's work in this area.

The Government commend the industry's efforts to develop self-regulation, and in particular the projected enhancement of the manned services inspectorate. The extent to which the new arrangements achieve their objectives will, however, be monitored and the position will be reviewed when computerisation of the criminal records has been achieved.

The Government reserve the option of requiring the industry to pay for any statutory regulation from its own resources should self-regulation prove ineffective.

The Government's position is set out more fully in a background paper which has been placed in the Library and which is being sent to all interested parties in the industry and to the Association of Chief Police Officers.

Terrorist Firebomb Attacks

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the number of terrorist firebomb attacks there have been in each year since 1973 in (a) London and (b) Great Britain; what was the amount of damage caused, the number of persons arrested, charged and convicted, in respect of the attacks; and if he will give the rate of conviction in each year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The number of terrorist incendiary attacks in each year since 1973 is given in the tables.

[1] To 18 December 1991.

This information relates to Irish and international terrorism; it does not include domestic extremist attacks. The figures given are for the number of locations attacked and not the number of incendiary devices used.

The information requested regarding the amount of damage caused and the convictions of those responsible for carrying out the attacks could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. M. Khan

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the refusal of an extension visa for Dr. M. Khan, Ref. No. TH/23660/91; and whether he will now allow a visa until the Royal College of Surgeons examinations in February.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Dr. Khan came to the United Kingdom on 11 May 1990 as a visitor and was admitted for six months, which is the maximum period under the immigration rules allowed to visitors. He then applied to remain here to resit examinations for the Royal College of Surgeons of England which he had previously failed. That request was granted exceptionally outside the immigration rules. He subsequently asked for further leave to remain to sit examinations—to take place in September 1991—for the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons in Glasgow. That application was refused. His subsequent appeal to the independent adjudicator was dismissed and leave to appeal to the immigration appeal tribunal refused. I do not believe I would be justified in affording further exceptional treatment to Dr. Khan, and he should now make arrangements to leave the United Kingdom.

Animals (Scientific Experiments)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry into the scientific validity of animal experiments in assessing the effects of pesticides upon human health.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is not one of the Ministers responsible for the national and international regulations under which the safety testing of pesticides is required. His responsibility is for controlling the conduct of scientific procedures on living animals. Where validated alternatives to the use of living animals in scientific research for whatever purpose are available, authority under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to use living animals in research will not be granted.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his proposals for the future organisation of the magistrates courts in the light of the Le Vay review.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government have now completed their review of the organisation of the magistrates courts service in England and Wales. In addition, because that review made it timely to do so, they have also considered how responsibility for the service should be allocated within government.

As to organisation, the Government have concluded that, in the light of extensive consultations following the scrutiny of the magistrates courts service and of a study of costs undertaken by independent consultants, it would not be right to bring forward legislative proposals to reconstitute the service as an executive agency. However, there has been a widespread acceptance of the need to modernise the management structure of the service with a view to improving its performance and strengthening lines of accountability while at the same time maintaining the independence of the judicial process and the valuable contribution of local magistrates in the local management of the service.

Some useful first steps have already been taken since the scrutiny. But in order to achieve these aims and to take forward the application to this service of the principles of the citizens charter we propose to work with the service to introduce a range of improvements, upon some of which an early start can be made while others will require legislation. They include progress towards the establishment of an inspectorate, to provide an effective management audit and to promote the spread of best practice; a strengthening and clarification of the management role of magistrates courts committees; the introduction of systematic performance review and planning throughout the service; and a more coherent geographical structure, taking account as necessary of the review of the structure of local government as a whole which has now begun. On the other hand, no immediate change is envisaged in the balance between central and local financing of the service.

It will be important to ensure that the new arrangements are strong and flexible, enabling the service to adapt to changing circumstances while at the same time guaranteeing a satisfactory career structure for court staff, high standards of performance, and effective working relations with other parts of the criminal justice system throughout England and Wales.

As to responsibility, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has concluded that, in the light of the proposals outlined in this answer, it will be appropriate for the responsibilities in relation to the finance, organisation and management of the magistrates courts which are now assigned to the Home Secretary under the Justices of the Peace Act 1979 and related legislation to be exercised from 1 April 1992 by the Lord Chancellor in the same way as he holds those responsibilities for the Crown court. This brings to an end the divided responsibility for the magistracy. My right hon. Friend has also decided that, in these circumstances, it would be appropriate for him to appoint a junior Minister in the Commons in the Lord Chancellor's Department. The appointment will be announced in due course.

The necessary instruments will be brought before Parliament as soon as possible. I shall continue to answer to Parliament for the criminal and procedural law of the magistrates courts in the same way as for the Crown courts. The Government intend to set out these proposals in more detail in a White Paper and to continue to consult interested bodies as necessary.

Metropolitan Police (Early Retirement)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers, and of what rank, have taken early retirement, for medical or for other reasons, while under investigation into possible disciplinary offences within the last two years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. However, information is given in his annual reports about the number of officers who resigned before disciplinary charges could be preferred against them, the number of these officers who were medically discharged and the number of officers who resigned while under investigation for disciplinary matters.

Stop and Search (Ethnic Origins)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in respect of the provisions of section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, whether he intends to make public information on the ethnic origin of those stopped and searched by police officers in the Metropolitan district.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the information that will be published in respect of the provisions of section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 are under consideration.

Irish Citizens

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what record is kept of the citizens of the Irish Republic who come to live in the United Kingdom, but have little or no means of support.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: We are not aware of any such record.

Terrorism and Crime Guide

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ban the sale in the United Kingdom of the guide to terrorism and crime computer disk version three and the soon to be released updated version four; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is for the police, in the first instance, and the Crown prosecution service to consider whether to bring proceedings against a particular publication contravening the criminal law.

Royal Pardons

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many royal pardons have been granted in each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of free pardons granted
1986	28
1987	41
1988	39
1989	50
1990	47
[1]1991	37

[1] To 18 December.

These figures are in respect of summary convictions. No free pardons have been granted in the past five years to persons convicted after a trial on indictment.

HEALTH

Dental Treatment

Mr. Terry Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will publish the latest information in the possession of his Department as to the coverage of dental treatment on the national health service; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) how many dentists, since the inception of the new dental contract, in each regional health authority have ceased to offer treatment on the national health services, are still offering normal treatment on the national health service and have reduced the range of treatment they offer on the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is not available to make a direct comparison between the NHS services dentists were offering before the introduction of the new dental contract and those they are offering now. However, the table shows the numbers of dentists practising now.

The number of dentists at 30 September 1990 compared with the number of dentists at 30 September 1991 for each Regional Health Authority is as follows:

Regional health authority	Number of dentists at 30 September		Difference
	1990	1991
Northern	869	881	12
Yorkshire	1,094	1,092	−2

Hospitals (Crown Immunity)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if NHS trust hospitals are covered by Crown immunity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Crown immunity, with the exception of a small number of limited immunities, has been removed from health service bodies, including NHS trusts. Details are contained in a health notice, HN(90)27, "The NHS and Community Care Act 1990 Removal of Crown Immunities", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Children's Homes

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to ensure that local authorities employ mature women who have brought up a family, or have direct experience thereof, to supervise children's homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are sure that many mature women could play a more substantial role in the management of children's homes.

It is for authorities to decide the qualifications and experience that are appropriate for posts carrying different responsibilities within a home's staff establishment and to organise recruitment and/or training accordingly.

Training opportunities have been enhanced by a number of initiatives taken by the Department, including acceptance of the recommendations in Sir William Utting's report "Children in the public care" that all heads of residential children's homes should be professionally qualified.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was spent on the NHS in absolute and in real terms in 1979; spent on the NHS in 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1978-79 gross NHS expenditure in England was £6·5 billion—£17·7 billion in today's prices, 1991-92. This year gross expenditure on the NHS is expected to be £26·6 billion, a real-terms increase over the period of over 50 per cent.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected capital spending in the national health service in the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 5 November 1991, c. 313-14]: The amounts in column 1 of the table will be allocated to the English regional health authorities for capital spending in 1992-93. Their residents will also benefit from the capital investment which first wave national health service trusts are authorised to undertake —column 2. The regional provision for capital spending taking the main allocations for regional health authorities and national health service trusts together is shown in column 3.

Region	(1) Regional health authority main allocation £ million	(2) First wave trust capital £ million	(3) Capital investment in region £ million
Northern	92·5	4·2	96·8
Yorkshire	85·7	35·0	120·7

North Western	106·7	17·9	124·6
ALL REGIONS	1,234·8	243·2	1,478·0

The external financing limits for individual national health service trusts are being announced separately.

St. Stephen's Hospitals

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current position with the building and equipping programme of St. Stephen's hospital, London, and the expected changes in the scale of operation of other London hospitals whose patients will be treated at the new hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: The construction of the new Westminster and Chelsea hospital on the site of the former St. Stephen's hospital is proceeding on schedule. The building should be completed in November 1992 and be fully operational by April 1993. It will replace facilities currently provided by the Westminster hospital and the Westminster children's hospital. Sir Bernard Tomlinson is currently heading a study group, commissioned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, which is looking into the future provision of health care across London.

Census Information

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prosecutions have been brought under the provisions of the Census (Confidentiality) Act 1991 or any other enactment for the unlawful disclosure of census information.

Mr. Dorrell: No prosecutions have so far been brought with respect to unlawful disclosure of 1991 census information. One enumerator was prosecuted following the 1971 census.

Sellafield (Childhood Cancer)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment to report on its review of the incidence of childhood cancer in the vicinity of Sellafield.

Mr. Dorrell: As my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) announced on 10 January 1990 at column 662, and 3 May 1991 at column 369, since 1989 the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment—COMARE—has been reviewing epidemiological and dosimetric data which have become available since the publication of the Black advisory group's report to Government in 1984[1], and of COMARE's first report in 1986[2]. Copies of both reports are in the Library. Much of this information has become available as a result of studies commissioned by the Government. In addition, some documents relating to radioactive discharges from Sellafield in the early 1950s have been drawn to the attention of COMARE. A preliminary review of all this information has caused COMARE to ask the National Radiological Protection Board to produce a comprehensive reassessment of dose and risk estimates in respect of the local population. I am advised that this reassessment will substantially delay COMARE's review and the completion of a final report to Government.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the amount of money in pounds sterling repaid to his Department under the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme and the number of companies which have made these payments.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The current pharmaceutical price regulation scheme was introduced from 1 October 1986. Since that date, there has been a total of 102 repayments, from 38 companies. The total amount repaid is £61,379,286.

Prescriptions

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the gross profit, expressed in pence per prescription, paid to pharmacist contractors in England and Wales for each of the last 10 years at actual and constant prices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The amounts due for profit which include interest on capital employed are shown in the table. The Pharmacists' Review Panel report on profit recommended that the pure profit percentage should be reduced from 2 to 1 per cent. This was implemented in 1988-89. Details are as follows:

Year	Interest		Pure Profit
1981	8·61	15·43	6·81	12·20

[2] Constant Prices calculated using 1991-92 prices as the base.

Following the new arrangements for remuneration of pharmacists from April 1989 onwards, estimates of the amounts due for profit are no longer calculated as separate items of remuneration.

Insulin Injections

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the comparative cost over two years of an insulin injection pen with appropriate needle and a disposable insulin syringe based upon two injections per day.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not possible to make a detailed cost comparison in the way requested because of variations in patients' dosages and injecting habits and the types and pack sizes of insulin and their costs. On the basis of information submitted by the manufacturers to the Department, assuming no reuse of needles and a pen system that lasts for less than two years, the cost of an injection pen system would exceed the current cost of disposable syringes.

Community Care

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent to which consideration by a health authority of the establishment of a village community for mentally handicapped patients is consistent with his policy on community care.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has recently reviewed its policy on residential and other services for people with learning disabilities—mental handicap—in the light of the community care reforms and issued draft guidance for consultation. This envisages village communities as being an acceptable but not essential part of a range of community based residential settings. We are currently considering comments received as a result of this consultation.

St. Charles Youth Treatment Centre

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals he has to change the security status of the St. Charles youth treatment centre, Brentwood;

(2) what is the purpose of his proposal to erect a 17 ft wire fence outside the 40 ft perimeter wall of St. Charles youth treatment centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local management is considering the need for an open facility to support secure units on the Brentwood site, but the Department has yet to receive recommendations. We are having exploratory discussions with local managers about whether or not to build a fence and if so how extensive that should be. The local planning authority has been approached about an option to enclose the site entirely. Its views are awaited.

North East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding of the North East Thames regional health authority broken down by region between 1978-79 and 1991-92; and the projected funding for 1992-93.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 December 1991]: Information derived from the annual accounts of the health authorities comprising the North East Thames region is shown in table 1.

Over a period expenditure figures will exceed fundings allocated because in meeting their expenditure health authorities have the use of additional resources such as local receipts. Basic revenue allocations for the region for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are currently £1,332·5 million and £1,448·2 million respectively. Allocations to district health authorities within the region are a matter for the North East Thames regional health authority.

Table II shows analysis of the region's total expenditure figures to authority levels for the years since the establishment of district health authorities—1 April 1982.

Annual accounts of the regional Health Authority and the district health authorities comprising the North East Thames region.

Notes to the table:

1. 1990-91 figures are provisional (as yet subject to audit).
2. Figures have been expressed at 1991-92 prices by the use of Gross Domestic Product deflators.
3. Expenditure on HCHS covers all services directly managed by the health authorities including hospital, patient transport (i.e. ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
4. The pattern of expenditure at district levels varies between 1984-85 and 1985-86 reflecting a change in the methodology for determining the fundings and the accounting arrangements for long-stay patients in the region.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on national health trust hospitals.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1991, c. 111]: The external financing limits for 1992-93 for the 57 NHS trusts which have been operational since 1 April 1991 and 98 NHS trusts which are to become operational on 1 April 1992 are set out in the tables. The limits do not include provision for 1991-92 outturn adjustments, resource management funding, or supra-regional developments which will be added subsequently.

Capital expenditure by NHS trusts forms part of the public expenditure provision in the health programme. The NHS and Community Care Act 1990 provides no power for the NHS management executive to fund NHS trusts directly or to give them cash limits. NHS trusts can obtain funding only from the income they receive from purchasers or from borrowing. An annual external financing limit—EFL—controls access by NHS trusts to external finance. The EFL is a net financing concept measured by the new loans taken out by the NHS trust less loans repaid plus or minus changes in deposits.

Regional Health Authorities (Revenue Allocation)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce regional health authorities' revenue allocations for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1991, c. 199-200]: The cash-limited general medical services provision for 1992-93 will be £659 million. This covers direct reimbursement to GPs of their expenses on practice staff and premises improvements, the development of computerisation in general practice, and the management of practice funds. I am making today allocations to regional health authorities covering £628 million of that total. The allocations to regions are:

WALES

GPs (Prescribing)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to what variations are to be found in the prescribing patterns of general practitioners in Wales; what is the average inpatient and cash terms; what are the highest and lowest variations of any individual practice; and what variations can be found between similar practices with similar demographic compositions.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on GP prescribing is provided by the prescription pricing division of the Welsh Health Common Services Agency to family health services authorities, which, as part of their responsibilities, examine the cost of GP prescribing, including reasons for variations between GP practices with similar characteristics. However, the information is not collated in such a way as to provide the information my hon. Friend requires, except at disproportionate cost.

I have put work in hand to refine the information system so that it will supplement the standard reports with a faster, more efficient and more detailed service for those who require information to be analysed according to their individual needs.

Vacant Council Properties

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available numbers of vacant council-owned properties for each district council in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information my hon. Friend requires is given in the table:

Homelessness

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available numbers for those registered as homeless for each district council in Wales; and what information he has to show separately those who are sleeping rough.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No information is available centrally as to the cause and location of any persons who may be sleeping rough. The number of cases accepted as homeless, within the terms of the Housing Act 1985 and the number of persons associated with these cases, is given in the table:

Plas Newydd (Grants)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the grants awarded by the Historic Buildings Council of Wales to (a) the Marquess of Anglesey and (b) the National Trust in respect of Plas Newydd during the last 10 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department grant aids the costs of restoring eligible historic buildings on the advice of the Historic Buildings Council for Wales. The council itself does not make grants. In the last 10 years the following grants have been awarded:

(a) Marquess of Anglesey—1987—£892 (repair of Nelson Monument).

(b) National Trust (for Plas Newydd—1985—£102,100 (repair of roof, rainwater goods and chimney heads).

Sunday Trading

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received from Wales about Sunday trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Seven letters have been received by the Welsh Office on this subject.

Chernobyl (Lambs)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what area of Gwynedd remains restricted as regards lamb sales to market as a consequence of the Chernobyl nuclear power station explosion in 1985; what the total cost in compensation has been since in each year since 1985; and what is the scientific prognosis for 1992 grass growth and saleable lamb meat production in Gwynedd.

Mr. David Hunt: As the question refers to the post-Chernobyl situation in Wales, I am responding to the hon. Gentleman.

The area of Gwynedd currently under restriction comprises approximately 75,483 hectares—about 186,519 acres. This compares to about 300,890 hectares—about 743,500 acres—when restrictions were first introduced in June 1986. A copy of a map illustrating the current restricted area which accompanied a recent press release was placed in the Library of the House on 16 December 1991.

The total cost in compensation paid to farmers in the restricted area of North Wales, in each of the years since the introduction of restrictions is as follows:

1986-87	2,638,691
1987-88	679,228
1988-89	578,868
1989-90	620,069
1990-91	613,548
[1]1991-92	460,452
Total	5,590,856

[1] (to 29 November).

Grass growth within the restricted area has not been affected to any significant degree by the Chernobyl deposition. However, the amount of radiocaesium in the root matt and surrounding soil which is taken up by vegetation can vary from year to year. This is due to the complex interactions of several factors such as weather, soil type, drainage and sheep grazing habits which are still the subject of research. It is not possible therefore to forecast the radiocaesium levels for 1992.

The arrangements operated from the movement and marketing of sheep from the restricted area have proved to be a satisfactory way of enabling farmers to continue with normal husbandry and marketing practices whilst ensuring the safety of the food chain. This year fewer than 2 per cent. of sheep leaving the Gwynedd restricted area for movement and marketing have recorded above the safety level of 1,000 Bq/Kg.

My Department will continue to study the results from the monitoring of sheep under the movement and marketing arrangements, and from regular monitoring of sheep at selected sites throughout the area. Assessment of these results has enabled suitable areas to be identified for intensive monitoring, which has made it possible to lift restrictions in two small areas this year. Work will continue to be carried out to achieve further derestriction as soon as it is safe to do so.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the date of commissioning and terms of reference of the Adams report on the future of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools service in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The report was commissioned on 24 May with the following terms of reference:

To review the role and organisation of HM Inspectorate in Wales in the light of the Government's policies for Education, and the particular character and needs of educational provision in Wales to secure that;

(i) the public at large can be informed about the quality of the education provided by Schools and Colleges;

(ii) funding agencies (including the Funding Councils and Local Education Authorities) can have access to independent quality assurance advice on which they can rely, drawn from inspection of and reporting upon those institutions and forms of provision to which HMI statutorily have access;

(iii) the management of Schools and, for the foreseeable future, Colleges in the Further Education sector, are supported by a system of quality assurance derived from inspecting and reporting on which they can draw in the exercise of their responsibilities;

(iv) officials, both in the Welsh Office Education Department (WOED) and in other parts of the Welsh Office as necessary and Ministers continue to receive independent advice on education policy issues derived from the evidence of objective inspection.

The review should take into account the existence and future development of other quality audit or assurance arrangements at departmental, local authority funding council—as envisaged in the White Papers—and institutional level and report on how HMI might relate to and interact with them. The review should also consider a widening of the role of HMI to include managerial and value-for-money issues in addition to educational and professional ones.

To examine the feasibility and desirability of different organisational models which could deliver these objectives, assessing and comparing their advantages and disadvantages, considering in particular HMI:

(i) being established wholly independent of Government;

(ii) becoming a Next Steps Agency accountable to the Secretary of State;

(iii) remaining part of the Welsh Office in the way it is now.

As part of that examination to identify for each model:

(i) the implications for staffing (including numbers and grading), for support services and for accommodation;

(ii) its costs;

(iii) the earliest date when it could be implemented and the steps and timetable which would need to be followed (including any changes in legislation which would be required) in order to achieve it.

And in undertaking this review:

(i) to take account of the separate review being undertaken in England;

(ii) to consult WOED and HMI within the Welsh Office;

(iii) to seek guidance as need arises from Ministers, the Permanent Secretary and Deputy Secretaries;

(iv) to submit a preliminary report of progress to the Permanent Secretary within two months, for discussion with him and Deputy Secretaries;

(v) to report to the Permanent Secretary with recommendations within three months.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will extend the period for consultation on groundwater in relation to the Cardiff Bay barrage for a period equivalent to that during which the advertising campaign by the development corporation adjudicated to be misleading by the Advertising Standards Authority was on display.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assurances he has given the Wales region of the National Rivers Authority regarding control of the Blackweir diversion and feeder canal during periods of drought; what discussions he has had with the Cardiff Bay development corporation and Associated British Ports regarding the necessary legal and financial arrangements flowing therefrom; when he anticipates the completion of these agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill requires the development corporation, before it commences construction of the barrage, to submit for the approval of the rivers authority details of the steps which it proposes to take to enable it to comply with the authority's water flow requirements. As I explained to the hon. Gentleman on 4 December detailed negotiations between Cardiff Bay development corporation and Associated British Ports are a commercial matter for the two parties.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date he expects Cardiff Bay development corporation to have complied with the ruling of 6 December 1991 by the Advertising Standards Authority.

Mr. David Hunt: The ASA reported to CBDC's advertising agents on 6 December on complaints about a CBDC poster. The authority considered that using the word "creating" in the phrase "Cardiff Bay—creating a superb waterfront environment", had given the impression that construction of the Cardiff Bay barrage was assured when this was not the case. At the time the poster appeared the barrage had yet to be put forward to Parliament in the form of a Bill. The advertisers were requested to ensure that no implication that the barrage would certainly be built should be given until it had achieved the necessary parliamentary approval. The authority also criticised the breach of confidentiality by which some complainants made public the conclusion of the case before it had been ratified by the ASA council.

The corporation has already complied with the ruling. Its advertising agency have proposed to the ASA an amendment to the copy of the magazine advertisement to read "The proposed construction of a barrage . . . would create a 500 acre freshwater lake".

The advertising agency has reported to the corporation that the ASA are content for it to continue to use the words

"Creating a superb waterfront environment".

Safer Cities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration he has given to the need for the safer cities campaign to be applied to cities in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The safer cities programme was launched by the Home Secretary in 1988 and reached its target of 20 projects this month. It is part of the "Action for Cities" initiative which is concerned with the regeneration of the inner cities in England. Wales did not participate in these programmes, preferring to pursue its own distinct regeneration strategies, such as the valleys programme, and to provide substantial assistance to Welsh communities for crime prevention measures under the urban programme.

A key feature of the safer cities programme is the establishment of multi-agency steering committees in each approved project area to promote and consider crime prevenion measures. In Wales a similar partnership approach has been achieved by providing funds under the urban programme, which has enabled county crime prevention co-ordinators to be appointed in six of the eight counties of Wales. The Welsh Office has also made funds available to the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders to assist with the development of crime prevention initiatives at a local level in south-east Wales. Crime prevention projects developed under these initiatives may themselves be eligible for funding under the urban programme.

Factory and Office Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give figures for regional development grants and regional selective assistance grants repaid because of factory or office closures within four years of the payment of the grant, separately for each of the past five years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested would be available only at a disproportionate cost. However, the table gives details of regional selective assistance and regional development grant repayments over the last five years.

	£ thousands
1986-87	2,335
1987-88	2,410
1988-89	1,982
1989-90	1,146
1990-91	370

Usk Barrage Bill

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what account he is taking of the planned Cardiff bay barrage in determining his policy towards the Usk Barrage Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government's policy towards the Usk Barrage Bill will be determined according to its view of the merits of that Bill.

Wentloog Lagoon

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what undertakings were given to the Countryside Council for Wales on 6 December regarding the relative timing for construction of the Wentloog lagoon and the Cardiff bay barrage; what trials regarding the use of the lagoon by wading birds are proposed; what policy considerations relating to the lagoon will govern the decision to effect final closure of the barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The undertakings given to the Countryside Council for Wales were that the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill will be amended in the course of its passage to reinstate the requirement of the private Bill that if the barrage is built the lagoon must also be built; the lagoon will be constructed before impoundment behind the barrage.

The Cardiff Bay development corporation will be discussing with the Countryside Council for Wales measures for ensuring the maximum effectiveness of the lagoon. The Countryside Council for Wales did not seek undertakings in respect of trials.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the cash granted by his Department this year and in each of the last five years to assist crime prevention initiatives (a) in respect of each district and (b) in respect of each county council in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The table sets out details of allocations to district and county councils under the urban programme for crime prevention initiatives and a grant to the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders under section 64 of the Health Service and Public Health Act 1968.

I am sure the hon. Gentleman will be pleased to see the steady increase in support for crime prevention programmes which includes a nearly sixfold rise in funding in four years.

Nebulisers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the provisions of additional funding for the supply on loan of nebulisers as standard national health service items on prescription by NHS consultants; what discussions he has had with other health authority chairmen; and what proposals he has for dissemination of information to those requiring nebulisers.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State discussed this matter with health authority chairmen at his meeting with them on 20 November. At our request, all district health authorities are reviewing their policies and practices on the provision of equipment, including nebulisers and investigating individual cases where patients have claimed that they were advised to purchase such equipment. When this exercise has been completed we will consider whether further action is needed.

South Glamorgan TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will be making a grant towards the costs of the new office for the South Glamorgan training and enterprise college's new headquarters.

Mr. David Hunt: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment gave on Tuesday 17 December, at columns 125-26.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will respond to the third report of the Welsh Affairs Committee, Session 1990-91, "Arrangements for Handling Serious Outbreaks of Food Poisoning in the light of the Salmonella Outbreak in July and August 1989 in North Wales" (HC Paper 328).

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the response has been published today as Command Paper 1789.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which units in Wales have been invited to prepare applications to become national health service trusts in April 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received proposals from almost half the units in Wales to establish national health service trusts. The "expressions of interest" cover ambulance, community and mental health services as well as acute care. I am inviting the following to prepare formal applications to become NHS trusts in April 1993.

Clwyd Acute North Unit
Clwyd Acute South Unit
Clwyd Community and Mental Health Unit
Gwent Community and Mental Health Unit
South Gwent Health Unit
Ogwr Health Unit
Llanelli-Dinefwr Health Unit
Ceredigion Health Unit
Carmarthen-Dinefwr Health Unit
Powys Health Unit
Llandough Hospital Unit
West Unit, West Glamorgan
East Unit, West Glamorgan
Gwent, Powys and South Glamorgan
Ambulance Service

Taken together, these units involve a total of 82 hospitals, 11,000 beds, and contractual income for 1991-92 of £592 million and point the way forward for the delivery of effective and patient responsive services in Wales.

Applications are due to be submitted in the summer of 1992, but the decision to prepare application rests entirely with the units concerned. My decisions on the submissions will be taken following statutory consultation process.

I was not able to invite an application at this time from Llandudno general hospital. However, I have confidence that the hospital has the potential to become a successful trust and will benefit from having more time to further develop its proposls. I have also deferred decisions on the expressions received from the Cardiff royal group of hospitals and to establish a mental health NHS trust in South Glamorgan to take account of the conclusions which will emerge from the recently announced joint strategic review by South Glamorgan and Mid Glamorgan health authorities.

Including the Pembrokeshire NHS trust with the units now invited to apply for NHS trust status some 65 per cent. of acute services in Wales could be trust based by April 1993.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Gwylim Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress his Advisory Committee for Wales on National Rivers Authority functions has made since its establishment in 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The committee's first annual report has been published today and I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Appointments

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will update his answer of 12 March 1991, Official Report, columns 448-58, to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside listing the full-time and part-time public appointments for which he is responsible, together with the salary and the date when each appointment is due for renewal, including those posts which are not salaried.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1991, c. 534-39]: I am now in a position to provide details of non-salaried appointments. These are shown in the table, together with a further list of salaried appointments.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishment (Contract Labour)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the possession of a criminal record automatically bars an applicant for contract labour at Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Atomic Tests (Christmas Island)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new medical evidence he has received regarding the connection between the atomic tests on Christmas Island and subsequent cancer and cancer-related disease.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence will pay appropriate compensation whenever the Crown's legal liability is established. There is, however, no firm evidence to show that any ill-health suffered by those who attended the tests was caused by their participation. This is supported by the last report on the subject by the National Radiological Protection Board—which continues to accumulate data and will produce a further report.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the difference in pension payments for the ranks of (a) major, (b) commander and (c) group captain between those who retired (i) just before the Prices and Incomes Act affected the calculations, (ii) those whose pension calculations were affected and (iii) those who retired after it had been repealed; and what would be the total cost of ending the anomaly.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Maximum rates of retired pay which can currently be received by officers who retired in particular months immediately before, during, and immediately after the period of pay restraint policy operative from 1976 to 1978 are as follows:

Month of retirement	Retired pay (£) Major Original award	Major Current rate	Commander Original award	Commander Current rate	Group Captain Original award	Group Captain Current rate
March 1976	2,957	13,358	3,617	16,339	4,380	19,786
April 1976	3,108	11,156	3,768	13,525	4,380	15,721
April 1977	3,210	10,039	3,870	12,104	4,481	14,015
April 1978	4,220	11,545	5,091	13,927	6,062	16,584

Original awards were calculated, and have subsequently been increased, in accordance with the normal regulations of the scheme. There are no alternative rates of award from which the cost requested could be calculated.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the maximum number of nuclear warheads the United Kingdom's Trident missiles will be capable of carrying;

(2) what potential exists for the number of warheads on the United Kingdom's Trident missiles to be increased during their operational lifespan.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The actual number of warheads which will be carried by the D5 missile in United Kingdom service, and the maximum number that could be, is classified information. The Government have, however, made it clear that each United Kingdom Trident submarine will carry no more than 128 warheads.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the maximum number of nuclear warheads that the United States Trident D5 missiles are capable of carrying.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Warhead numbers on the United States' Trident missiles are a matter for the United States Government. In their joint summit statement of December 1987, however, the United States and Soviet Governments confirmed the assumption that the United States Trident II (DS) missile would be deployed with eight warheads.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what payments have already been made by Her Majesty's Government to the United States Government towards the research and development costs of the warhead for the United Kingdom's Trident missiles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much the United Kingdom is paying the United States Government towards the research and development costs of the warhead for the United Kingdom's Trident missiles; if this is a fixed amount; and how the payments are made.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom has developed its own warhead for use with the Trident missile system. It is not in the national interest to reveal research and development costs of such projects.

Polaris

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the effectiveness of the Polaris nuclear deterrent for the remainder of its operational life.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We remain satisfied with the continuing credibility and effectiveness of the Polaris strategic deterrent.

Tactical Air-to-Surface Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 13 November, column 615, what are the implications for the United Kingdom's decision on procuring a TASM of President Bush's decision to cancel the SRAM-T programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are continuing to consider a number of possible options for the replacement of our WE177 free-fall bombs. No decision has yet been taken.

Short-range Attack Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations took place between his Department and the United States Government concerning President Bush's decision to cancel the SRAM-T programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: This issue was covered in the consultation between our two Governments which preceded President Bush's nuclear initiative of 27 September.

Anti-ballistic Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer, Official Report, 13 November, column 614, what is his policy towards the negotiated deployment of strategic defences within the terms of the ABM treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on 13 November.

Soviet Nuclear Weapons

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to providing assistance to the International Atomic Energy Agency to assist in monitoring the destruction of Soviet tactical nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are considering with our NATO allies a range of nuclear issues arising from political developments in the Soviet Union. There has been no initiative to provide assistance to the International Atomic Energy Agency, whose activities are, in any case, restricted to the field of civil nuclear energy.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to match the offer made by the United States Government to the leadership of the former states of the Soviet Union to purchase redundant nuclear warheads for safekeeping.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are considering with our NATO allies a range of nuclear issues arising from political developments in the Soviet Union. No decisions have been reached.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information and material assistance he has provided to his Soviet counterpart (a) to ensure the physical security of Soviet nuclear weapons and (b) to help them destroy nuclear weapons;

(2) what discussions he has had with his Soviet counterpart regarding the physical security and command and control arrangements for Soviet tactical nuclear weapons;

(3) what information he has received from the Ukraine, Byelorussia, and Kazakhstan regarding the physical security and command and control arrangements for nuclear weapons in these areas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We and our allies have made clear on many occasions to the authorities in the Soviet Union and republics both our concern about these matters, and our willingness to provide assistance and advice where necessary and practicable.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his assessment of the current physical security and command and control arrangements for (a) Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles, (b) Soviet strategic bomber forces, and (c) Soviet sea-launched ballistic missiles;

(2) what is his assessment of the security and control arrangements for Soviet nuclear weapons manufacturing technology.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We believe that effective procedures exist for central control of all strategic nuclear forces and nuclear weapons manufacturing facilities, and for their protection. Nevertheless we are conscious of potential problems which may be caused by the break-up of the Soviet Union.

Transport Helicopters

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and type of transport helicopters deployed with the RAF for each year since 1980.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not readily available in the form requested. The number and types of transport helicopter deployed by the RAF has not, however, changed significantly since the introduction of the Chinook into RAF service in the early 1980s and thus the numbers are broadly in line with those I gave in my answer on 12 December 1991, Official Report, column 546.

Parachute Regiments

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral statement of 10 December, Official Report, columns 743-744, on the recruiting level of 15 Parachute Regiment, what are the recruiting levels of the other two parachute regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Housing

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 546, on housing, whether he will place in the Library a copy of the letter which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces sent to Lady Anson; and if he will place in the Library copies of all the letters he has received from the Association of District Councils, the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on the subject of housing for ex-service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have arranged for a copy of my noble Friend's letter to be placed in the Library of the House, together with a copy of Lady Anson's letter of 16 August. No other correspondence has been received from the Association of District Councils, the Association of County Councils or the Association of Metropolitan Authorities.

Vehicles (Review)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors have been considered as part of his review of armoured personnel carrier and heavy armoured combat vehicle numbers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All relevant factors are being considered as part of the review of armoured personnel carrier and heavy armoured combat vehicle numbers.

Regiments (Recruitment)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will change his policy on the release of information on the recruiting levels of individual regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the recruiting levels of individual regiments is not available centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what capability the Atomic Weapons Establishment has to dismantle nuclear warheads and nuclear delivery systems.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer), on 21 October 1991, Official Report, column 453.

Science and Peace Conference

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department was represented at the international congress of scientists and engineers on challenges of science and peace in a rapidly changing environment held in Berlin on 29 November to 1 December; and what is his policy towards the attendance at conferences of officials in his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ministers and officials attend conferences when they are relevant, and the timings and dates are convenient. No Defence Minister attended the conference in question; nor did any official attend on their behalf.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension Age

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women go on working one year, two years, three years, four years and five years after reaching pension age.

Miss Widdecombe: Activity rates for women in the five years after pension age are set out in the table. These figures are based on sample estimates from the labour force survey and are subject to greater sampling variability than are estimates for broader age groupings.

Great Britain—1990

Age	Per cent.
60	29
61	27
62	22
63	20
64	15

Note: The figures represent numbers of women in employment or unemployed, on the internationally agreed ILO definition, expressed as percentage of the population of women of each age.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of (a) reducing the pension age by one year to 64, (i) as gross cost, (ii) what the savings would be in terms of income support and community charge and housing benefit and (iii) net cost, (b) what the same figures would be for a reduction of two years to 63, (c) three years to 62, (d) four years to 61 and (e) five years to 60; and by what amount national insurance contribution would have to go up to meet in full such changes.

Miss Widdecombe: The discussion paper published yesterday includes the costs of a range of options for equalisation of state pension age.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will initiate a survey into whether skill shortages would be likely to occur if pension age for men was lowered by one year, two years, three years, four years or five years.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to initiate such a survey.

Pension Funds

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what action he proposes to take to prevent employers diverting their employees' pension fund moneys either to parent companies or to other corporate interests;

(2) what plans he has to ensure that occupational fund assets are retained for the exclusive benefit of its members and pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: Safeguards already exist in trust law to protect the interests of members of occupational pension schemes. Trustees have a duty to act, at all times, in the interests of all the beneficiaries of the scheme in accordance with the trust deed. Additional safeguards are in place for schemes that are used for contracting out of SERPS.

This Government have already brought into force a provision which restricts an employer's ability to receive funds from a related pension scheme unless the scheme already increases pensions in payment at least in line with prices up to a maximum of 5 per cent.

In addition we will bring forward, early next year, regulations to restrict to 5 per cent. the level of a schemes self investment in a sponsoring, associated or connected company.

Pensions

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the level of retirement pension to 33 per cent. of national average earnings for a single person and 50 per cent. of average earnings for married couples; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. If the basic state pension had been increased this April in the way suggested by the hon. Member, the extra cost to the national insurance fund would be £25 billion this financial year which would imply an increase of £33 per week in the total contribution for a person on average male earnings and the employer.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards increases in the state retirement pension.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are committed to ensuring that state pensions are increased in line with prices thus ensuring a secure foundation in retirement. Further, we have created an economic environment in which pensioners' overall net incomes have increased by 34 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1988.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to bring into force regulations requiring employers to make good deficiencies upon the winding up of occupational pension schemes.

Miss Widdecombe: This provision in the Social Security Act 1990 was closely linked to the provision for limited price indexation on which we have delayed implementation in the light of the uncertainties arising from the Barber judgment. In the light of the Maastricht protocol on Barber, we are considering whether and when the necessary regulations should now be introduced.

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to ascertain whether the Occupational Pension Board has fulfilled its duty to ensure that the resources in the pension funds of the companies of which the late Robert Maxwell was a director were and are sufficient to provide guaranteed minimum pensions for beneficiaries who had contracted out of SERPS.

Miss Widdecombe: The Occupational Pension Board relies on certificates signed by actuaries to satisfy itself that the resources of an occupational pension scheme used for contracting out of SERPS are sufficient to meet the guaranteed minimum pension liability to its members. Certificates are submitted to the board every three and a half years.

Additionally, in the case of self-administered schemes, an annual statement—signed by the scheme administrator, auditor or trustee—is required concerning the audit of scheme accounts, the receipt of contributions, and any self-investment or concentration of investment.

I understand from the board that the documentation required in respect of the eleven pension schemes in the "Maxwell Group" was received and is in order. I also understand from the board that none of the certificates and statements gives any indication that there was anything wrong with the schemes at the relevant time.

Damages for Injuries

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the 1990-91 income arising from the provisions of the Social Security Act 1989 for full recovery of state benefits from tort damages for injuries and the administrative costs involved; how many recipients were required to repay in full the state benefits they received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Appeal Tribunals (Remuneration)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what remuneration will be paid to chairpersons and other members of social security and disability appeal tribunals from April 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The fee payable to social security tribunal chairmen from April 1992 will be £115 per half-day session. Social security tribunal members are not paid a fee.

The fee payable to disability appeal tribunal chairmen from April 1992 will be £115 per half-day session. There will be two rates payable to disability tribunal members: the lay members will be paid £53 per half-day session; the fee for the medical member—in practice a GP—will be in excess of this, but has not yet been fixed.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, and in what circumstances, a person entitled to family credit will be allowed to claim disability working allowance instead; what benefits to which family credit is a passport will not be similarly available to persons receiving disability working allowance; and what will be the highest marginal tax rate, including loss of benefits, to which persons receiving disability working allowance will be exposed (a) in April 1992 and (b) after the introduction of council tax benefit.

Mr. Scott: A person is disqualified from claiming disability working allowance—DWA—if he, or any member of his household, has a current award of family credit. If he wishes to claim disability working allowance instead he will be able to make an advance claim during the period when he would normally be able to renew his family credit award so that there will be no break in payment.

Family credit is a passport to free national health service prescriptions and to help with other NHS charges. People who get DWA will be able to apply for help with NHS charges through the NHS low income scheme.

DWA, like family credit, will be assessed on the basis of net income so that people will gain something from each extra pound they earn. However, some people will be subject to marginal deduction rates of 96 per cent. from April 1992 and 97 per cent. after the introduction of council tax benefit.

Vibration White Finger

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the rates of gratuity awards, in terms of gratuity per percentage disablement from 1 per cent. to 15 per cent. for those awarded, in each of the past three years, in respect of a disablement allowance for vibration white finger.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those areas where the cold weather payments have been authorised currently, the number of areas where no such payments have been authorised; and the estimated percentage of pensioners in all who will be receiving the payments arising from the above.

Mr. Scott: By 18 December cold weather payments had been triggered by 26 of the 63 weather stations. Areas covered by 18 of the weather stations have already been authorised for payment. The remaining eight areas will be authorised for payment this weekend, 21 December 1991. The relevant weather stations are in the table. Information relating to the percentage of pensioners who will be receiving a payment in the areas which have triggered is not available.

Kidney Dialysis Patients

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce a dietary allowance for social security claimants who are kidney dialysis patients and have to have a special diet.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. I am advised that the dietary regime which kidney dialysis patients may be advised to follow need not result in any additional costs.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce an additional heating allowance for social security claimants who undergo kidney dialysis at home and have to keep their houses at a constant temperature.

Miss Widdecombe: People who undergo kidney dialysis at home are able to qualify for attendance allowance under special rules. This is currently worth at least £27·80 a week. In addition, attendance allowance attracts the disability, or higher pensioner, premium in income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit and is normally disregarded in the calculation of those benefits. We have no plans to introduce any further allowances for this group.

Concessionary Coal

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the circumstances under which payment in lieu of concessionary coal can be disregarded when claiming community charge benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 18 December.

Income Support (Mortgage Interest)

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to make payments of income support in respect of mortgage interest payable direct to the lender.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House earlier today.

Mr. R. Long

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is able to inform Mr. R. Long of Buochli, 6373 Ennetburgen, Switzerland of his decision as to Mr. Long's national insurance liability during the period April 1986 to December 1987.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 November 1991]: We have concluded discussions on the interpretation of the regulations governing Mr. Long's case and have written to both Mr. Long and his former employer to inform them of the outcome. We are now awaiting their response. Provided that both Mr. Long and his former employer accept the interpretation and that agreement by the Swiss authorities is obtained, the Secretary of State will then be able to give his decision.

SCOTLAND

Council Tax

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary fo State for Scotland what council tax rates would be in 1991-92 for each band in each district and island council area for (a) households of average size and (b) two-person households.

Mr. Lang: The average bills for households of a given size will depend on the number of adults in the households. Illustrative figures on bills for households of one, or two or more adults, under the proposed council tax were issued by the Government on 23 April.

Police Numbers

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the latest establishment figures for uniformed police in each police authority; and if he will give actual staffing figures.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Authorised police establishment and number of officers in post as at 30 September 1991

	Establishment	[1] Number in post
Central Scotland Police	643	624
Dumfries and Galloway Constabulary	384	357
Fife Constabulary	780	758

Lothian and Borders Police	2,487	2,418
Northern Constabulary	654	635
Strathclyde Police	6,954	6,712
Tayside Police	1,057	1,016

[1] The above figures exclude officers on secondment to other forces, central service, and so on.

Crime

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table on a comparable basis to his answer in the Official Report, 9 December, columns 344-46, with information on crime rates in Scotland since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table.

Notes:

1. Data for 1979 have been regrouped on the basis of the current Scottish Office Home and Health Department classification of crimes and offences which was revised in 1980.
2. Prior to 1980, the return included crimes and offences reported to the Procurator Fiscal by agencies other than the police in which a prosecution was taken. Since 1980, these cases have been excluded. In 1982, there were about 6,400 such cases in Scotland, of a total of 762,483 crimes and offences.
3. Most of the increase in crimes in Group 5 is in recorded cases of re-offending while on bail which may in part be explained by changes in recording practice.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of (a) total crimes and (b) violent crimes in (i) each police force area and (ii) across all of Scotland in 1979 and 1990, and the percentage increase in each authority area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. Figures for numbers of violent crimes recorded in 1979 provided on 27 March 1991, Official Report, columns 440-41, have been found to be in error, underestimating the amount of violent crime recorded in 1979. The following table contains revised figures for the number of violent crimes recorded in 1979.

Notes

[1] Comprises groups 1-5 of the Scottish Office Home and Health Department (SOHHD) classification of crimes and offences.

[2] Comprises groups 1-7 of the SOHHD classification of crimes and offences, ie all crimes and offences.

[3] Comprises group 1 (non-sexual crimes of violence), the sexual assault category from group 2 (crimes of indecency) and the petty assault category from group 6 (miscellaneous offences) of the SOHHD classification of crimes and offences.

[4] Revised.

Details of the SOHHD classification are given in the SOHHD statistical bulletin "Recorded crime in Scotland 1990", a copy of which is in the library.

Degrees

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria he will apply in granting degree awarding powers to Scottish higher education institutions beyond the present universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly.

Rents-to-Mortgages Scheme

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the way in which rents to mortgages was marketed to the initial group of eligible tenants and then to local authority tenants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The pilot rents-to-mortgages scheme became available to eligible tenants of Scottish Homes and the new town development corporations in Scotland on 30 October 1989. Scottish Homes produced an explanatory leaflet which was distributed to each of its eligible tenants. Supplies of the leaflet were also made available to new town development corporations.

The pilot scheme was extended to local authority tenants in Scotland on 1 April 1991 and was publicised by a campaign on television, in the national and local press and on radio. This was necessary because of the difficulty of contacting local authority tenants directly. An explanatory leaflet was also produced, and around 20,000 inquiries were received. The television advertising campaign was repeated in October. All eligible tenants interested in the scheme are offered detailed counselling and advice about the scheme and about the consequences of becoming a home owner.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the results of research into consumer satisfaction with services following the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has today published the report on market research, conducted in nine Scottish local authorities by the MVA Consultancy, into consumer satisfaction with refuse collection and street cleaning services both before and after the introduction of competitive tendering for those services. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The report shows little change in consumer satisfaction. Where change has occurred it has generally been for the better. The results of the research support the Government's view that competitive tendering can bring benefits without an unacceptable reduction in service standards. They provide no comfort to those who have claimed that saving from competitive tendering have been secured at the expense of quality of service.

Farm Woodland Premium

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to prevent the postponement of planned tree planting on farms pending the introduction of the farm woodland premium scheme on 1 April 1992.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced on 19 November 1991 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) (Official Report, columns 135-36) that a successor to the farm woodland scheme—to be called the farm woodland premium scheme—will be introduced on 1 April 1992. In the meantime, applications to enter the existing scheme may be lodged for an extended period up to and including 31 March 1992.

We are conscious that the proposals for the new scheme, which have recently been circulated for consultation, may encourage farmers to consider postponing their planting plans for the present season. In order to avoid a hiatus of this kind pending parliamentary agreement to a revised statutory instrument for the farm woodland premium scheme, we have decided that any planting approved under the current farm woodland scheme which is undertaken on or after 1 October 1991 will be eligible for the full planting grants under the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme, including payment of the better land supplement where appropriate. In all other respects the existing rules of the farm woodland scheme, including the rates of annual payments, will continue to apply.

Any higher grants to be paid under these interim arrangements will be met by the Forestry Commission from existing resources.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The framework documents for my three agencies set out the following key performance measures:

Registers of Scotland

turn round times in respect of the Land and Sasine Registers unit costs for the primary products of the Land and Sasine Registers backlog arrears comparisons in the Land and Sasine Registers evidence of customer satisfaction, eg error rates attributable to the Agency and indemnity claims progress on extending the Land Register to the whole of Scotland income/expenditure comparisons.

Historic Scotland

number of ancient monuments newly scheduled number of completed units of the resurvey of listed buildings number of general Historic Building Repair grant cases in payment conservation backlog on monuments in care value for money savings in maintenance of monuments in care number of visitors to monuments in care where an admission charge is made total income

surplus on commercial activities exchequer contribution to Historic Scotland's work.

Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency

aerial surveillance—per cent. of hours flown on task[1]

cost per aircraft sighting

marine surveillance—number of boardings at sea

marine surveillance—cost per boarding

Sea Fisheries Inspectorate—cost per £1 million of fish landed prosecutions—proportion of cases reported for prosecution within required timescales number of cases where court proceedings are taken as percentage of offences report for prosecution.

Performance measures operative prior to agency status were: for the Registers of Scotland, turn round times, backlog arrears and indemnity claims; for Historic Scotland, increases in visitor numbers, income targets and numbers of historic buildings repair grants; and for the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency, numbers of boardings at sea.

[1] "Time on task" is the time that the aircraft spends looking for fishing vessels. It excludes transit time between airports and fishing grounds and flights for crew training, aircraft testing, and so on.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those new facilities for staff, including nurseries and health care schemes, which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment.

Mr. Lang: [holding answer 17 December 1991]: None.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was born by the parent Department or the new agency.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The information is as follows:

	Costs borne by
	Agency	Parent Department
Registers of Scotland	8,000	—
Historic Scotland	2,700	300
Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency	300	340

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The holding of a degree is not mandatory for the post of chief executive of any of the three agencies for which I am responsible. As the information requested is personal to the individual concerned, it is not appropriate to divulge it.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in each of his Department's executive agencies.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: No.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies were established; and how many staff are in post now in each case.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The information is as follows:

Staff in post	At Launch[1]	1 December 1991
Registers of Scotland	997	1,302
Historic Scotland	610·5	627
Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency	196·5	218·5

[1]The Registers of Scotland was launched as an agency on 1 April 1990. The two other agencies were launched on 1 April 1991.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The first annual report for the Registers of Scotland was published on 23 July 1991 and placed in the Library. Historic Scotland and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency became agencies on 1 April 1991 and have not therefore published annual reports as yet. In the case of each of the agencies, the next annual report will be published as soon as possible after the end of the 1991-92 financial year.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including preformance-related elements, in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above, since their establishment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: One such appointment has been made, at grade 7. The remuneration is within the relevant civil service pay scale for the grade. It would not be appropriate to identify the specific post.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The information is as follows:

Registers of Scotland: as for a Grade 4 civil servant; 5 year contract from 6 June 1990;

Historic Scotland: as for a Grade 3 civil servant; open contract; it is intended that the post will be filled by open competition in due course;

Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency: as for a Grade 5 civil servant; appointment for 3 years from 1 April 1991.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and provide a break down by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each new agency.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1991]: None.

Foresterhill Hospital

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether the Foresterhill hospital trust will purchase or lease land and property which is to be part of the trust but is currently owned by Aberdeen university;

(2) whether compensation will be paid to Aberdeen university for land and property allocated to, or to be used by, the Foresterhill trust, but owned by the university.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The greater part of the property to be transferred to the Foresterhill national health service trust is currently held in joint title in the names of the Secretary of State and the university of Aberdeen. It is intended that the Secretary of State's interest in such property would transfer to the trust. I see no reason why the present arrangements between the Foresterhill group of hospitals and Aberdeen university over use of facilities on the site should change. It is not envisaged that a Foresterhill national health service trust would require property, the title to which was solely in the name of the university of Aberdeen. Consequently no issue of compensation appears to arise in relation to such property.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

9. Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet his EC colleagues to discuss reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: At the next meeting of the Agriculture Council on 27-28 January.

21. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the common agricultural policy has cost the British Exchequer during the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows. In addition, however, the Exchequer supports CAP spending elsewhere in the Community through our net contribution to the EC budget.

United Kingdom Public Expenditure under the CAP[1]

	£ million
1987-88	1,611
1988-89	1,363
1989-90	1,230
1990-91	1,848
1991-92	2,000

[1] United Kingdom expenditure under the CAP covers market support and structural aid schemes.

Biscuit, Cake, Chocolate and Confectionery Alliance

16. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet the president of the Biscuit, Cake, Chocolate and Confectionery Alliance to discuss problems concerning this sector of the food industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am always ready to meet the alliance on any current point of concern.

MacSharry Proposals

17. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the National Farmers Union to discuss the MacSharry proposals for the reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay).

28. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on progress with the MacSharry common agricultural policy reform plans.

Mr. Gummer: I refer to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmoreland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling) on 13 December 1991, at column 595.

Animal Welfare

18. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received this year about animal welfare; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Department continues to receive a very large number of representations on animal welfare.

The Government attach great importance to this issue and will continue to press for the high standards in this country to be adopted throughout the European Community.

19. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to improve animal welfare throughout the EC.

Mr. Maclean: The Government will continue to press for the Community to set the highest welfare standards, in line with the declaration which has been agreed at Maastricht, following a United Kingdom initiative, on the need for Community legislation to take full account of animal welfare.

Food Labelling

20. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on food labelling.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Advisory Committee's report of its review of food labelling legislation and practices recommends a number of further improvements in important areas of food labelling to which the Government have already responded positively.

I shall shortly be considering the results of extensive consultation with all interested parties on the Committee's recommendations, along with any further recommendations which the Committee may wish to make as a result of that consultation, before taking any further action.

25. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times he has met consumer representatives during 1991 to discuss food labelling.

Mr. Maclean: I meet the consumer panel and representatives of consumer organisations on a very regular basis to discuss matters of interest, including food labelling.

I have taken the opportunity at these meetings to keep consumer organisations informed of progress on the Food Advisory Committee's review of food labelling, the report of which was published in April this year.

27. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what fresh steps he is taking to make the information on the labels of food and food products (a) clearer, (b) simpler and (c) more relevant.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Advisory Committee's report of its review of food labelling legislation and practices, published in April this year, recommends a number of improvements in important areas of existing food labelling requirements, including the presentation of statutory labelling information, to which the Government has already responded positively.

I shall shortly be considering the results of extensive consultation with all interested parties on the Committee's recommendations, along with any further recommendations which the Committee may wish to make as a result of that consultation, before making any final decisions and taking further action.

Agriculture Expenditure

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of public expenditure on agriculture; and what the comparable figure was for 1990.

Mr. Curry: Public expenditure under the common agricultural policy and on national grants and subsidies for the 1991-92 financial year is forecast at £2,086 million. The comparable figure for 1990-91 was £1,910 million.

Farm Subsidies

23. Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress towards reaching agreement on farm subsidies over the next five years.

Mr. Gummer: The Government aim to secure, through reform of the common agricultural policy and through agreement in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations, lower levels of agricultural support both within the European Community and worldwide.

Set-aside Scheme

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations on set-aside arrangements he has received over the last month.

Mr. Gummer: I have received a number of representations on various aspects of set-aside over the last month.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers have received payment under the set-aside scheme, for each year since 1988, in each county in England for (a) horse based activities, (b) golf courses, (c) game cover for commercial shoots, (d) sports grounds, (e) other recreational facilities and (f) other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The following tables list all agreements under the non-agricultural use option of the set-aside scheme for 1988, 1989 and 1990, the three years for which payments have been made under the scheme.

Fishing Boats (Decommissioning)

26. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to introduce a decommissioning scheme for fishermen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend has already made it clear that he is prepared to consider proposals for a decommissioning scheme, but only as part of a wider package including effort control. We are currently debating these ideas with the industry.

Sheep Producers

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the likely effect on United Kingdom sheep producers of the MacSharry proposals to reform the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: The proposed reform of the sheepmeat regime seriously discriminates against United Kingdom producers, many of them in the most difficult areas of the country. Reducing ewe premium headage limits would exclude up to 15 per cent. of our animals from the premium whereas only about 3 per cent. of the rest of the EC's ewes would be excluded.

Farmers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of farmers in 1980 to 1991.

Mr. Curry: The number of farmers, partners and directors in England in the years 1980 to 1991 as at the annual June census, including estimates for minor holdings, are shown in the table.

Farmers, partners and directors, England (including minor holdings)

Bottled Mineral Water

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy for consumers of current regulations for the labelling of bottled mineral water; and whether he has raised this issue with his consumer panel.

Mr. Gummer: The labelling and marketing of natural mineral waters is harmonised in the EC by the natural mineral waters directive (80/777) and implemented in the UK by the Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985. The EC Commission is currently reviewing the operation of the directive and some time ago we passed to it comments on improvements in labelling. We expect the Commission to propose amendments to the directive. When these are received we will consult UK interests, including consumer organisations. I will at that time assess the need to consult the consumer panel as well; in the meantime it is always open for a member of the panel to raise any relevant issues with me.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the percentage of poultry consumed in the United Kingdom which has been imported for the latest available date; how many tests for the presence of salmonella were carried out and with what results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In 1990, imports of poultrymeat represented 12·4 per cent. of domestic use and is forecast at 12 per cent. for 1991.

Information on the results from the bacteriological testing of imported poultrymeat is not held centrally.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has on the number of reports received by local authorities and water companies about carcases of farm animals left by the roadside or in water courses for each year since 1986;

(2) if he will list the number of (a) initiated and (b) successful prosecutions against those who deliberately leave carcases unburied or dump them under the (i) Control of Pollution Act 1974, (ii) Environmental Protection Act 1990 and (iii) Dogs Act 1906 in 1990 and 1991, respectively.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available centrally.

Knackers and Renderers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to monitor the range of prices that different renderers charge knackers across the country.

Mr. Maclean: Although some information is obtained regularly by the Ministry on the broad movement of collection charges by renderers, I have no intention of setting up a formal monitoring system in relation to the financial arrangements between knackers and renderers.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, in tonnes, the amount of waste arising from knackers' yards in each year since 1986.

Mr. Maclean: The information in the form requested is not available. However, it is estimated that the animal waste arising from knackers' yards accounts for between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. of the material processed by the rendering industry. The rendering industry currently processes up to 1·75 million tonnes of animal waste a year.

Illegal Catches

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many United Kingdom trawler captains have been successfully prosecuted during the last 12 months for landing illegal catches of fish at United Kingdom ports and harbours;

(2) how many United Kingdom trawler captains have cases awaiting to be dealt with by the courts for landing illegal catches of fish at United Kingdom ports and harbours.

Mr. Curry: Ninety-one United Kingdom fishing skippers have been successfully prosecuted during 1991 for offences against fisheries legislation; 153 cases are waiting to be dealt with by the courts. Information on how many of these convictions and pending cases result from the landing of illegal catches is not readily available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what precautions he is taking to prevent United Kingdom trawler fishermen from landing illegal catches at United Kingdom ports and harbours.

Mr. Curry: Enforcement of national and community fisheries legislation is carried out by the sea fisheries inspectorates of the Fisheries Departments in co-operation with patrol ships of the Royal Navy and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency and surveillance aircraft. The United Kingdom control and inspection procedures are acknowledged to be among the best in the Community.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that local badger groups and wildlife protection groups are notified in advance of any section 43 licences it may be proposed to issue within their area; if he will allow a period for representations to be made prior to such licences taking effect; and if he has yet finalised details of his licensing scheme.

Mr. Maclean: In considering an application for a licence to permit interference with a badger sett the licensing authorities will consult local interests as they consider appropriate.

Horses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to review the status of the horse as an agricultural animal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have no current plans to do so.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the numbers and proportion of fallen stock disposed of by (a) knackering/rendering, (b) hunt kennels and (c) on farm burial for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: It is estimated that knackers and hunt kennels dispose of well in excess of 700,000 fallen animals each year. Figures for other means of disposal, such as burial on farm, licensed landfill sites or incineration are not known.

Dioxins and Furans

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish his food surveillance report on dioxins and furans.

Mr. Gummer: I hope to be able to publish this report by the end of January.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pensioners (Welfare)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being considered to look after the welfare of pensioners during the winter months, particularly regarding financial support for adequate heating in their homes.

Mr. Hanley: Basic pensions, together with any income support which may be payable, are intended to cover pensioner's day-to-day living costs, including heating throughout the year. Income support includes special premiums, ranging from £13·75 to £26·20, to help with pensioners' extra needs. From April 1992 there will be, over and above the normal uprating provision, a special increase of £1 a week in premiums for single pensioners and £1·50 for pensioner couples who are disabled or over 80. The cold weather payments scheme has also been considerably improved. Payments of £6 will be paid automatically to eligible people as soon as a seven-day period of exceptionally cold weather is forecast by the Meteorological Office or actually occurs. The capital rule has also been abolished, making more people eligible.

In addition to cash benefits, the Department of Health and Social Services seeks to provide elderly people with practical advice and information as part of its annual "Keep Warm, Keep Well" campaign. This aims to alert elderly people and their carers to the dangers of winter weather; encourage them to take simple steps to keep well; and provide them with information on services, such as insulation and draught-proofing schemes, and the availability of social security benefits.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will bring forward proposals to abolish the non-dependant deduction in relation to housing benefit cases.

Mr. Hanley: There are no plans to do so.

Education Authorities (Duties)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which sections of legislation covering education in Northern Ireland contain provisions comparable to section 70 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980.

Dr. Mawhinney: Provisions comparable to section 70 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 are contained in article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, as substituted by article 158 of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.

Northern Ireland Block

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) further to his answer to the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) of 9 December, Official Report, column 324, if he will now publish details of the programmes of expenditure which have been running ahead of plans in this financial year, and of those which have been behind forecast expenditures, showing in each case the subheadings and the sums involved; if he will show details of the capital works postponed and the maintenance works deferred until next year; and what is his estimate of the consequences for employment in the current and the next financial year;

(2) further to his answer to the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 9 December, Official Report, column 324, when the above target expenditures which have led him to postpone expenditure on maintenance works and capital works in Northern Ireland first became known to him.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expenditure requirements are monitored by Departments from the start of the financial year. It was the balance between new demands and savings emerging in the third quarter which led to the decision to postpone some expenditure. The situation continues to evolve and final decisions on the adjustments required will be taken in the context of spring supplementary estimates. The details will be available in the revised estimates, which cover most areas of public expenditure. These will show the main changes proposed and will be laid before the House in February. The debate on the appropriation order will provide the opportunity for discussion.

Information on individual projects affected is not centrally available but the delay in releasing new projects will be short-lived. The overall employment effects are also expected to be minimal—at most only a temporary change in the balance of activity between sectors—as the total volume of public expenditure is not being reduced.

Criminal Injury and Damage

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision was made for (a) criminal injury, and (b) criminal damage in each financial year since 1987-88; how much was actually expended in those years; and what projections he has made for the current financial year and the next two financial years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is shown in the table:

	Criminal injuries £k	Criminal damage £k
1987-88
Provision	12,100	17,855
Expenditure	12,925	19,004
1988-89

Note: Provision includes supplementary provision.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the incidence of farmed salmon escapees entering salmon rivers in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: Northern Ireland salmon rivers are not regularly monitored for farmed salmon escapees. All the information available in shown in the table.

River	Number of Escapees
	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

Notes
n/a —No monitoring undertaken.
[1] As a result of a special exercise undertaken following a known escape from a salmon farm.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums he has expended on research into the effect of farmed salmon escapes on the native stocks of salmon in Northern Ireland rivers in each of the last three financial years and the current year.

Mr. Hanley: The sums expended were as follows:

1988-89	Nil
1989-90	Nil
1990-91	2,560
1991-92	[1]4,844

[1] Up to 30 November 1991.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will co-ordinate the activities of the Social Security Agency and the Housing Executive in order that they use their computerised systems to synchronise all transactions relating to housing benefit changes, benefit deductions, payment of rent from such deductions, and rent statements to tenants.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alex Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office.

Magharafelt Primary School

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when he expects the perimeter fence at Magharafelt controlled primary school to be repaired;

(2) how many mobile classrooms there are at Magharafelt controlled primary school; and when he expects them to be replaced by permanent buildings.

Dr. Mawhinney: Any necessary repairs will be carried out by the north eastern education and library board as soon as possible. The school has two mobile classrooms. The north eastern education and library board has no immediate plans to replace them.

Hospital (Coleraine)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the last six months on the provision of the new hospital at Coleraine; what sums have been expended on that programme to date; and when he expects work to begin.

Mr. Hanley: I announced approval in principle for the new Causeway hospital on 13 September. A site has been identified at Lodge road, Coleraine and negotiations for its purchase are in hand. I hope to be able to announce the time scale for the construction in the near future.

Fishing

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will, for as long a number of years as is possible at reasonable cost, publish a table to show for each river in the area covered by the Foyle Fisheries Commission the number of (a) salmon, (b) grilse and (c) sea trout taken by (i) anglers and (ii) by commercial fishermen showing the number of fish taken by nets and fishing engines in each river estuary and in Lough Foyle, by other coastal fishing stations and by drift nets.

Mr. Hanley: The tables set out the information which is available. Separate figures for salmon and grilse cannot be provided.

[1]Anglers in the Foyle Fisheries Commission area are required, as part of the licensing arrangements, to submit catch returns but do not always do so. Figures cannot be extrapolated to give catch returns for 100 per cent. submission of returns as, among others factors, anglers are more likely to make a return if they have caught fish.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will for as long a number of years as is possible at reasonable cost, publish a table to show for each river in the area covered by the Fisheries Conservancy Board the number of (a) salmon, (b) grilse and (c) sea trout taken by (i) anglers and (ii) commercial fishermen, showing the number of fish taken by nets/fishing engines in each river estuary, fresh water lough or by coastal fishing stations and by drift nets.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in the form requested. In the Fisheries Conservancy Board area anglers are not required to submit catch returns but records of some catches are submitted on a voluntary basis and these are set out in the table together with the commercial fisherman's returns. Separate figures are not available for salmon and grilse and figures for sea trout are available only in respect of commercial fishing.

North Down (Economy)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to regenerate the local economy in the North Down area.

Mr. Needham: The North Down area benefits from the many measures currently being undertaken by the Government and their agencies to promote economic development throughout Northern Ireland.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all capital projects in the areas for which he has responsibility, either directly or indirectly through the South Eastern education and library board, which have been postponed by the recently announced capital expenditure moratorium.

Dr. Mawhinney: The following capital projects in the area of the South Eastern education and library board will be delayed by the moratorium:

Extension to St. Colm's High School, Twinbrook, Dunmurry
Extension to St. Colmcille's High School, Crossgar
Minor works at Longstone Special School, Dundonald
Site purchase at Ballymacross, Lisburn

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what hospitals in the Province have applied for trust status.

Mr. Hanley: The Royal group of hospitals has applied for health and social services trust status and its application has been accepted. The trust will become fully operational as from 1 April 1993.

Public Expenditure, Strangford

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which projects by the roads service of the Department of the Environment in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed due to the moratorium on public expenditure.

Mr. Needham: A number of maintenance schemes to a value of approximately £200,000 and the following minor works schemes have been delayed:

A20 Saltwater Bridge, Kircubbin
Moss Road, Millisle
Manse Road/Saintfield Road Junction, Carryduff
Killynure Road/Church Road Junction, Carryduff

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which projects by the Northern Ireland fire authority in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed by the moratorium on public expenditure;

(2) which projects, supported by the industrial development boards, in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed due to the moratorium on public expenditure;

(3) which projects by the water service of the Department of the Environment in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed due to the moratorium on public expenditure.

Mr. Needham: None.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which projects by the Department of Agriculture in the constituency of Strangford have been delayed as a result of the moratorium on public expenditure for capital projects;

(2) which projects by the Northern Ireland Fishery Harbours authority have been delayed following the moratorium on public expenditure in capital projects.

Mr. Hanley: None.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) which projects by the police authority in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed by the moratorium on public expenditure;

(2) which educational projects in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed due to the moratorium on public expenditure.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what locations in the constituency of Strangford (a) the building of new homes and (b) improvement schemes to existing homes are delayed due to the moratorium on public expenditure; and how many homes are involved at each location.

Mr. Needham: The chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that the pause in public spending in 1991-92 will have no affect on the building of new homes or improvement schemes to existing homes in the constituency of Strangford.

Electricity Employees (Pensions)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will be receiving a reply to his letter of 28 November regarding pension arrangements for employees of Northern Ireland Electricity.

Mr. Needham: I wrote to the hon. Member on 16 December.

Undergraduate Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the most recent figures available for the number of undergraduates (a) from Great Britain, (b) from the Republic of Ireland and (c) in total at (i) the University of Ulster and (ii) Queen's University of Belfast.

Dr. Mawhinney: Provisional figures for full-time undergraduates enrolled for the current—1991-92—academic year are:

	Queen's University	University of Ulster
Great Britain	241	452
Republic of Ireland	455	1,190
Total enrolement	7,990	9,313

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 18 December 1991]: Through the Local Enterprise Development Unit—LEDU—and the Training Employment Agency the Department of Economic Development runs or supports 38 schemes. These are:

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 20 December 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the organisations to which the consultative draft of the Asylum Appeals (Procedure) Rules was sent and the dates on which it was sent.

The Attorney-General: Copies of the consultation draft of the Asylum Appeals (Procedure) Rules were lodged on 1 November 1991 with the appropriate authorities in both Houses of Parliament and have since then been available to the public generally, upon request, from the Lord Chancellor's Department. I shall write to the hon. Member listing the organisations to which the consultation draft has been sent.

Murder (Provocation Defence)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received about the use of provocation as a defence in murder cases involving women.

The Attorney-General: Any representations received by me about this subject would be referred to the Home Secretary since he has policy responsibility for the substantive criminal law.

A full list of representations received and treated in this manner could be produced only at disproportionate cost, by searching all correspondence.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time between (a) a request for a hearing date and (b) a hearing date being set for immigration appeals in (i) Leeds and (ii) other immigration appeals centres in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The average time between a request for a hearing date and a hearing date being set at the individual centres of the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) is currently as follows:

Place	Time
Leeds	7 months
Thanet House, London	3-4 weeks
Harmondsworth	1-2 weeks
Manchester	1-2 weeks
Birmingham	3 months

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what action is being taken to reduce delays in hearing immigration appeals in (a) Leeds and (b) other immigration centres in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department plans to make an additional hearing room available early in 1992 at the Leeds centre of the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) for the hearing of immigration appeals. This will enable the adjudicators at Leeds to sit more frequently and so reduce the current waiting times for cases to come before them. The Lord Chancellor's Department will also be exploring the feasibility of immigration appeals being heard at other locations in Leeds to help reduce the current backlog of cases.

The Lord Chancellor's Department has plans to increase the number of sittings by adjudicators in 1992 at all of the hearing centres of the IAA and the number of staff will be increased. These measures will help the IAA to tackle more effectively their rising workload. Furthermore, a multi-terminal case-tracking computer system will be operational by January 1992. This will enable the IAA to monitor more accurately and frequently the progress of appeals.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average delay between the receipt of immigration appeal papers, received in London from British overseas posts, being forwarded to the representatives of the parties.

The Attorney-General: Upon receipt of immigration appeal papers from a British overseas post, the IAA is usually able to dispatch copies of the case papers to the parties' representatives in this country within two weeks.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) staff and (b) adjudicators are retained in Leeds and other immigration appeal centres in the United Kingdom; and what proposals there are to increase staff and adjudicators, both part time and full time.

The Attorney-General: The staff and adjudicators currently in post at the individual hearing centres of the immigration appellate authorities are as follows:

Hearing centres	Staff	Adjudicators
		Full-time	Part-time
Leeds	8	1	13
Thanet House	64	7	19
Harmondsworth[1]	10	3	10
Manchester	5	1	11
Birmingham	8½	2	10
Glasgow	1½	—	5

[1] Includes Belfast and Cardiff.

The Lord Chancellor's Department plans to recruit additional staff during 1992 and to deploy part-time adjudicators more frequently.

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all items of United Kingdom legislation which have been or are being subjected to legal challenge in the European Court (a) on the grounds of an alleged conflict with article 30 of the treaty of Rome, (b) on the grounds of an alleged conflict with another article of the treaty or (c) on some other grounds, together with the date on which each challenge was instituted and the date of the court decision.

The Attorney-General: The information is not readily available. I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the occasions, since 1 November 1991, on which he has made official statements or appeals covering the attitude which retailers should adopt towards the laws on Sunday trading.

The Attorney-General: It is not my responsibility to advise retailers on the attitude that they should adopt towards the laws on Sunday trading, so I have not made any official statements or appeals about this.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will specify the performance indicators to be used to measure the quality of education for pupils with special educational needs in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: This is a matter for local education authorities, which have duties under the Education Act 1981 to ensure that provision is made to meet pupils' special educational needs.

GCSE

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the total number of pupils in the United Kingdom who sat GCSE examinations in the years for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The number of pupils who had attempted GCSE in England by the age of 16 in at least one subject in the academic year 1988-89 and 1989-90 were as follows:

	Total 16-year-olds	Those attempting GCSE at age of 16 or earlier
1988-89	619,800	581,300
1989-90	582,100	544,400

The figures for Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what action he proposes to take to ensure that publication of examination results will not deter schools from accepting pupils with special educational needs on to their rolls;

(2) how he proposes to publicise the achievements of pupils with special educational needs in non-examined courses and public examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: It is my right hon. and learned Friend's intention that the statutory requirements governing the publication of schools' examination results should apply equally to all pupils, including those with special educational needs. This accords with the Government's policy that pupils with special educational needs should be integrated as far as possible into ordinary educational provision, subject to the conditions set out in section 2 of the Education Act 1981 in respect of those pupils with statements of special educational needs.

The achievements of pupils with special educational needs will not always be poorer than their peers; some of these pupils are academically very able. It is right that their results should be published in the same way as those of all other children.

There is no reason to expect that the publication of examination results will deter schools from accepting pupils with special educational needs; indeed, under the law only selective grammar schools are allowed to discriminate on grounds of ability between applicants for places.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the total number of pupils with special educational needs in the United Kingdom who sat GCSE examinations in the years for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available centrally for pupils with statements of educational need in England. The figures for Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Inspectors' Reports

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Her Majesty's Inspectorate reports on average, per annum, are intended solely for internal readership by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: This information is not available centrally.

LINC Project

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has now received the Her Majesty's Inspectorate report on the progress of the language in the national curriculum programme; and if he proposes to publish it.

Mr. Eggar: The Her Majesty's Inspectorate report is an interim document intended for internal use. It has not yet been seen by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Primary Education

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the change in standards of reading and literacy in primary schools since 1979; and to what causes he attributes such change.

Mr. Eggar: There is at present insufficient evidence on which to base reliable conclusions about changes in the reading standards of younger primary pupils over the past decade. However, the introduction of the national curriculum and its associated testing arrangements at ages seven and 11 will provide reliable information for the future. My right hon. and learned Friend yesterday announced the results from the first round of these tests for seven-year-olds in 1991.

School Assessments

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what qualifications he expects to be possessed by any team of inspectors engaged in the assessment of a school in his proposed arrangements.

Mr. Eggar: Under the arrangements proposed in the Education (Schools) Bill, it will be for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools to determine whether applicants are fit to lead inspection teams as registered inspectors. It will be for registered inspectors to assemble teams with the appropriate qaulifications and experience, taking account of any conditions imposed or guidance offered by the chief inspector.

Nursery Education

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to the reply to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham of 29 November, Official Report, column 700, if he will publish figures showing the numbers of free or subsidised places for children under statutory school age in nursery schools or similar in each country of the European Community; and if he will also show the numbers of places as precentages of the numbers of children in the relevant age group in each country.

Mr. Fallon: Information is not available centrally, in the form requested. The latest available participation rates in pre-compulsory schooling are given in the table.

Participation in pre-primary education by age group, 1988

Country	Age at which compulsory schooling starts	Percentage of age group

ENVIRONMENT

Business Rates

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account will be taken in determining property values for the purposes of the uniform business rate and the council tax of the recent fall in the market price of property.

Mr. Portillo: New non-domestic rateable values will come into force on 1 April 1995. It is proposed that these rateable values be based on market rents as at 1 April 1993. The valuation of domestic properties for the council tax is now under way. Properties will be valued on the basis of open market capital values as at 1 April 1991.

Rates (Newcastle)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was, in 1991-92 prices, (a) the value of rate support grant paid to Newcastle city council in every year since 1979-80, and revenue support grant since 1990 and (b) the value of non-domestic rate revenue received by the city council in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

	Rate Support Grant £ million at 1991-92 prices	Non-domestic rate revenue £ million at 1991-92 prices
1979-80	122·1	n/a
1980-81	[1]122·6	n/a
1981-82	[2]88·5	n/a
1982-83	64·6	n/a
1983-84	67·5	n/a
1984-85	62·6	n/a
1985-86	[3]58·0	n/a
1986-87	27·0	107·7
1987-88	54·7	93·0
1988-89	68·4	82·3
1989-90	64·7	84·7

	Revenue Support Grant	[5] Receipts from NDR pool
1990-91	[4]85·5	62·7
1991-92	75·2	71·9

Note:
The information given is not available on a comparable basis for all years.
[1] In 1979-80 and 1980-81, no Rate Support Grant (RSG) payments were made to Metropolitan County Council and Newcastle's RSG was correspondingly higher in those years.
[2] In 1981-82 to 1985-86 inclusive, RSG payments were made to Metropolitan Counties (and other upper tier authorities) and Newcastle's RSG was correspondingly lower.
[3] In April 1986, the Metropolitan County Councils were abolished and arrangements for paying grant changed accordingly.
[4] In April 1990, the new local authority finance system was introduced and Revenue Support Grant replaced Rate Support Grant as the main Central Government grant to local authorities. The 1990-91 figure is for Revenue Support Grant after the Safety Net Payment.
[5] Under the local government finance system introduced in 1990, the level of Revenue Support Grant is affected, inter alia, by the amount of non-domestic rates distributed from the national pool. The decrease in non-domestic rate receipts between 1989-90 and 1990-91 was largely compensated for by the increase in Rate/Revenue Support Grant.

Emissions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the emissions in the years 1970 to 1979, 1980 to 1989 and 1990; and what are the projected figures for 1991 to 2005 for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland for (i) industrial carbon dioxide, (ii) land use change carbon dioxide, (iii) non-agricultural methane and (iv) agricultural methane.

Mr. Baldry: Emission estimates for carbon dioxide and methane, covering the preceding 10 years, are published annually in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. Estimates for earlier years are available from Warren Spring laboratory which maintain the national emissions inventory on behalf of the Department. Data for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland separately and for carbon dioxide emissions due to land-use change are not available. Total emission estimates for the years 1970 to 1979 and 1980 to 1989 and for 1990 are as follows:

	1970-79	1980-89	1990
Industrial CO_2[1] (electricity supply, refineries and other industry)	1,179	967	[2]96
Non agricultural methane[3]	28·3	33·5	[4]—
Agricultural methane[3]	11·9	11·7	[4]—

[1] Expressed as millions of tonnes of carbon emitted.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Expressed as millions of tonnes of methane emitted.
[4] Not yet available.

Projections for carbon dioxide and methane emissions were set out in energy paper No. 58 "UK Country Study for the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change Response Strategies Working Group Energy and Industry Sub-Group", October 1989, copies of which are in the Library of the House. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secrtary of State for Energy to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 6 December 1991, Official Report, column 258, for the latest projections for CO_2 emissions.

The Government have set a target, if other countries take similar action, of returning emissions of CO_2 to 1990 levels by 2005 and is taking steps to reduce emissions of methane.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many discharges of chemicals into the Merseyside environment have been notified to his Department in the past 12 months; if he will list these and the toxic chemicals involved; if he will specify whether the discharges were into the air, water, or land; whether he will extend the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to ensure that annual levels of emissions are monitored and declared; and whether he will require disclosure of information about emissions to his Department.

Mr. Baldry: Dangerous occurances involving uncontrolled or accidental releases of chemicals must be notified to the Health and Safety Executive. Individual authorised releases of chemicals are not notified to my Department. However, the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Water Resources Act 1991 provide for monitoring information about releases to the environment which are reported to or obtained by the relevant enforcing authority or the National Rivers Authority to be placed in public registers.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to include information on historical emissions of the following greenhouse gases (a) industrial carbon dioxide, (b) land-use change carbon dioxide, (c) non-agricultural methane and (d) agricultural methane in his negotiations on the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Questions relating to past, present and future emissions of all greenhouse gases are included among the issues covered by the preparatory committee for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what methodology he uses when assessing net greenhouse gas emissions in the United Kingdom in relation to gross emissions.

Mr. Baldry: Net greenhouse gas emissions are not currently estimated for the United Kingdom on a routine basis. To do so will require the development of methods for quantitatively assessing activities, such as afforestation, which remove greenhouse gases from the atmosphere. Work to develop such methods is proceeding within the Department's own research programme and internationally through the work of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

Poll Tax

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's estimates on how much local authorities have spent on publicity and advertising in connection with the poll tax.

Mr. Key: My Department has made no such estimates.

Global Warming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount has been spent to date on the global warming campaign in the press.

Mr. Baldry: The campaign, "Helping the Earth Begins at Home", which is being conducted jointly by my Department and the Department of Energy, placed advertisements in national newspapers between 5 November and 1 December 1991. The net cost of the advertisements was £393,045. This figure includes media buying and agency fees.

Incinerators

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many incinerators there are in the United Kingdom which are capable of dealing with (a) hazardous and (b) toxic wastes; what is the total annual capacity of these plants; and what is the annual production of these wastes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: Waste containing substances hazardous to life are classed as special wastes in the United Kingdom and local authority records showed 2·315 million tonnes arising for disposal in 1989-90. However, high temperature incineration of special wastes can take place within a wide range of factory premises, where so authorised, and special wastes dealt with in-house are not recorded. United Kingdom merchant incinerators available for disposal contract have a total annual capacity of about 200,000 tonnes and are:—

ReChem at Fawley, Hampshire and Pontypool, Gwent
Cleanaway at Ellesmere Port, Cheshire
Leigh Industrial Services at Killamarsh, Sheffield

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number and capacity of incinerators capable of dealing with hazardous and toxic wastes which are (a) under construction and (b) to be constructed over the next five years; what he expects the total annual capacity of those plants and the existing plants to be at the end of that time; and what are his projections as to the annual production of these wastes in the United Kingdom in (i) five years and (ii) 2000.

Mr. Baldry: Industry could have a variety of incinerator proposals at various stages of consideration. There is no central record of these and it would not be possible to say what the annual capacity of proposed plant might be until such proposals become definitely operative. Planning proposals for merchant incinerators in England and Wales of which the Secretary of State is aware are those currently before him for decisions:—

Ocean Environment, Seal Sands, Cleveland Northumbrian Water/ITE, Portrack, Cleveland Northumbrian Water/ITE, East Howdon, Tyne and Wear.

It is not possible to provide forward projections of any waste arisings which might be dealt with at existing or new plant.

Skin Cancer

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain from the United Nations Environment Programme for his departmental library a copy of the panel study, chaired by Dr. Jan van der Leun of Utrecht university, on the risks of skin cancer increases resulting from ozone depletion.

Mr. Baldry: The departmental library holds a copy of the 1989 report of the United Nations Environment Programme's environmental effects panel, chaired by Dr. J. van der Leun. The most recent environmental effects assessment is in preparation and is expected to be published in the next few months. Copies will be obtained for my Department.

Radiological Emergencies

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to communicate to the public and all relevant emergency service personnel information, the nature of any radiological emergency, its possible effects and emergency counter-measures.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has lead responsibility for the response to radiological emergencies resulting from overseas nuclear accidents. The arrangements for communicating details of the accident, its possible effects and counter-measures are set out in the HMSO booklet, "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET). Phase 1", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Energy Tax

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with his opposite numbers in the other European Community member states regarding the Commission's proposals for a carbon tax or energy tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 17 December 1991, Official Report, column 105.

Building Maintenance (Date of Return)

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what further action he proposes to take against the failure of Copeland borough council to make the statutory rate of return on building maintenance work undertaken in 1989-90.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the response of Copeland borough council to the notice served on it on 9 July 1991, and has today given a direction under section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 in respect of building maintenance work. The effect of the direction is to preclude the council from undertaking works of maintenance other than emergency work and works to the properties in the council's ownership.

Mr. Bart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he has decided to take against the failure of Rochdale metropolitan borough council to make the statutory rate of return on its building maintenance work in 1989-90.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to the response of Rochdale metropolitan borough council to the notice served on the authority on 7 February 1991, and has today given a direction under section 19B of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 in respect of building maintenance work. The effect of this direction is to preclude the council from undertaking works of building maintenance other than emergency work and works to properties in the council's ownership. It also permits the authority to undertake a range of small building maintenance works with an individual value of less than £25,000.

Ordnance Survey (Corporate Plan)

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the Ordnance Survey corporate plan for 1992 to 1995.

Mr. Baldry: The Ordnance Survey corporate plan has been published today and I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

EC Environmental Legislation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list details of each of the cases in which the EC is taking action against the United Kingdom Government over alleged non-implementation of EC environmental legislation.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 12 December 1991]: The European Commission has made applications to the European Court of Justice against the United Kingdom for alleged non-compliance with EC environmental legislation in the following cases:

Case 337/89 concerning various aspects of the implementation of directive 80/778/EEC on the quality of water for human consumption.

Case 56/90 concerning implementation of directive 76/169/EEC on the quality of bathing water at Blackpool, Southport and Formby.

The court has not yet issued a judgment in either case.

In addition, the Commission has delivered reasoned options under article 169 of the treaty of Rome to the United Kingdom in the following cases:

Case 211/89 concerning implementation of directive 80/779/EEC on air quality limit values and guide values for sulphur dioxide and suspended particulates.

Case 212/86 concerning implementation of directive 82/884/EEC on a limit value for lead in air.

Case 187/87 concerning compliance with directive 79/409/EEC on the conservation of wild birds in connection with the construction of a ski tow in part of a Site of Special Scientific Interest at Glas Maol, Glenshee, Scotland.

Case 354/88 concerning compliance with directive 80/68/EEC on the protection of groundwater against pollution caused by certain dangerous substances in connection with discharges from a waste depot in Pakefield, Suffolk.

Case 26/88 concerning compliance with directive 79/409/EEC on the conservation of wild birds and Commission directive 85/411/EEC replacing Annex I of directive 79/409/EEC in connection with the designation of habitats and other protection measures.

Case 387/87 concerning the application of directive 80/779/EEC on air quality limit values and guide values for sulphur dioxide and suspended particulates in Sunderland.

Case 147/90 concerning compliance with directive 85/337/EEC on assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment in connection with the disposal of waste material at Outlands Head Quarry, Derbyshire.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the chlorine loading potential of all CFCs and HCFCs for the time intervals of 10, 20 and 50 years.

Mr. Baldry (pursuant to his answer, 10 December 1991, c. 363]: Chlorine loading potentials, calculated on a steady state emission basis, have been published in report No. 20 of the World Meteorological Organisation Global Ozone Research and Monitoring Project, "Scientific Assessment of Stratospheric Ozone: 1989," as follows:

Species	Chlorine loading potentials
CFC-11	1·0
CFC-12	1·5
CFC-113	1·11
CFC-114	1·8
CFC-115	2·0
HFC-22	0·14
HCFC-123	0·016
HCFC-124	0·04
HFC-125	0·0
HFC-134a	0·0
HCFC-141b	0·10
HCFC-142b	0·14
HFC-143a	0·0
HFC-152a	0·0
CCl^4	1·0
$CH^3{}_1CCl^3$	0·11

The Montreal protocol scientific assessment, due to be published early next year may provide some time-dependent values for either chlorine loading potential or the related ozone depletion potential.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service College

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service (1) what is the annual cost of running the Civil Service college at Sunningdale Park, Ascot; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider relocating the Civil Service college to the north of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: These are operational matters for the Civil Service college and I have asked the chief executive to reply directly to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what plans he has to make places available at the Civil Service college for the induction of new Members after the general election; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: In 1988 the college arranged two briefing seminars on the civil service for hon. Members new to the House. I shall be delighted to ask the chief executive to make similar arrangements for new Members after the next general election, if there is sufficient demand. This will provide a welcome opportunity for the college to extend its already excellent reputation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Free Markets

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department takes to promote free markets in the countries to which United Kingdom aid is sent.

Mrs. Chalker: We promote free markets through focusing our aid on support for economic reforms and sound policies, agreed with the IMF and the World bank, designed to create the environment in which private enterprise and initiative can flourish. We are ready to provide help with privatisation. The Commonwealth Development Corporation invests directly in commercially viable projects in the private sector.

Kenya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya on freedom of access and movement of Somalis in Kenya; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have made no such representations. In our exchanges with the Government of Kenya, we have focused on the broader issue of respect for the human rights of all Kenyan citizens. We recognise that Kenya has faced a serious problem dealing with an influx of non-Kenyan Somali refugees and Somali bandits operating from outside her borders.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent fighting in Somalia.

Mrs. Chalker: On Wednesday 18 December I issued the following statement:

"The British Government is deeply concerned at the continued fighting in the Somali capital, Mogadishu. Apart from the senseless destruction of the city, there are distressing reports of heavy civilian casualties caused by indiscriminate shelling. The British Government particularly deplores the recent shooting of aid workers and the failure of those in charge of the warring factions to ensure that medical and relief supplies can safely enter the port and be distributed to innocent civilians.

Along with its European Community partners, the United Kingdom has already called on all parties to reach a peaceful negotiated settlement. It reiterates that call and strongly urges all concerned, including the elders of the clans in Mogadishu, to implement an immediate ceasefire which will permit aid agencies to attend to the desperate needs of the Somali people. It appeals to all protagonists in this conflict to put an end to the violence."

Development Co-operation (Treaty of Rome)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the inclusion of a text on development co-operation in the treaty of Rome, as agreed at the European Council in Maastricht.

Mrs. Chalker: I am pleased that for the first time the objectives of Community policy in development co-operation will be set out in the treaty. We welcome the aims of fostering sustainable economic and social development, especially in the most disadvantaged developing countries; integrating them into the world economy; alleviating poverty; and consolidating democracy, human rights and the rule of law.

The text recognises the complementary nature of EC and bilateral aid programmes with emphasis on co-ordination and consultation. The United Kingdom has consistently supported such moves in order to enhance the efficient use of EC aid resources.

Aid Budget

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in how many and in which cases arms deals have been linked to the overseas aid budget.

Mrs. Chalker: United Kingdom aid is provided in support of sustainable development and to alleviate poverty in developing countries. There is no question of linking aid and arms "deals".

NORTHERN IRELAND

Emigration

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the net emigration of people from Northern Ireland over the past 10 years, giving a breakdown by age group.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Year	Total	Under 1	15-44	45-64	65 and over
1980-81	6,100	1,049	4,489	269	293
1981-82	9,900	1,327	7,650	710	213
1982-83	5,300	1,360	3,616	191	133
1983-84	4,000	809	2,893	180	188
1984-85	4,500	328	4,512	[1]+193	[1]+147
1985-86	3,600	138	3,578	[1]+52	[1]+64
1986-87	5,900	995	4,893	60	[1]+46
1987-88	7,900	857	7,237	[1]+42	[1]+152
1988-89	6,400	877	5,726	[1]+57	[1]+146

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what capital projects in the areas for which he has responsibility, either directly or through the Eastern health board, have been postponed by the recently announced capital expenditure moratorium.

Mr. Hanley: No capital works projects in the Eastern board's area have been postponed as a result of the moratorium.

Replacement of the ambulance service radio communications network in the four boards has been postponed and the installation of equipment costing about £0·5 million in the Eastern board's ambulance control centre will therefore be delayed.

Replacement of aging medical equipment at a number of the board's hospitals, for which £2·1 million had been earmarked, may have to be postponed. Purchase of special high-cost medical equipment, for which £1·75 million had been earmarked, may also have to be deferred.

Heart Bypass Operations

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are on the national health service waiting lists for heart bypass operations; and what steps he is taking to reduce the period of waiting.

Mr. Hanley: I am advised by the Eastern health and social services board that at 30 November 1991 there were 758 people in Northern Ireland waiting for heart bypass operations.

The recent completion of the £1·5 million extension to the cardiac recovery area at the Royal Victoria hospital will permit an increase in the number of operations and I understand that the RVH has advertised for additional staff to support the extra workload. In addition health and social services boards are actively considering purchasing further operations from outside Northern Ireland. The Western board has already taken an initiative this year in arranging to buy additional cardiac operations for its resident population from hospitals in London.

Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full-year cost of raising one-parent benefit and widowed mother's allowance by (i) £0·34 and (ii) £0·36 for (1) 1991-92 and (2) 1992-93, (x) including increases in means-tested benefits, and (y) without increases in means-tested benefits, in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The gross costs of increasing one-parent benefit, widowed mother's allowance and income-related benefit by these amounts for each week in 1991-92 and 1992-93 are given in the table. It is not possible to estimate what the costs would be without increases in income-related benefits.

Benefit	Increase per week	1991-92 £	1992-93 £
One Parent Benefit	34p	468,000	488,000
Widowed Mothers Allowance	34p	58,000	55,000
One Parent Benefit	36p	496,000	517,000
Widowed Mothers Allowance	36p	61,000	58,000

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year cost of raising one-parent benefit and widowed mother's allowance by 32p (i) for 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, (1) including increases in means-tested benefits and (2) without increases in means-tested benefits, in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The gross costs of increasing one-parent benefit, widowed mother's allowance and income-related benefits by this amount for each week in 1991-92 and 1992-93 are given in the table. It is not possible to estimate what the costs would be without increases in income-related benefits.

Benefit	Increase per week	1991-92 £	1992-93 £
One Parent Benefit	32p	441,000	459,000
Widowed Mothers Allowance	32p	54,000	52,000

State Earnings-related Pension

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the total cost to the national insurance fund in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of the 2 per cent. banded earnings offered as an incentive to opt out of SERPs, in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

2 per cent. Incentives in respect of personal pensions and 2 per cent. incentives for contracted-out schemes

Northern Ireland (£ million)

Paid in year	In respect of year	Personal pensions	New schemes	Total
1991-92	1990-91	11·9	2·4	14·3

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for changes in the thresholds for criminal injuries compensation claims under the Criminal Injuries (Compensation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend intends in the near future to bring forward an order under article 23 of the 1988 order to raise the general lower limit for criminal injuries compensation claims from £400 to £1,000 and to raise the lower limit for nervous shock claims in the same proportion from £1,000 to £2,500.

Public Expenditure, Strangford

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which projects by the Eastern health and social services area board in the constituency of Strangford are now delayed by the moratorium on public expenditure.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 19 December 1991]: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the letter of 6 November from the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, the Chief Rabbi and the Moderator of the Free Church Federal Council asking him to make a public appeal to retail companies to obey the existing law on Sunday trading.

The Prime Minister: It is not my practice to release such information. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 28 November at column 1066.

New Zealand (Royal Navy Visits)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy regarding Royal Navy visits to New Zealand.

The Prime Minister: Following the Defence Secretary's announcement in September that our ships would not carry tactical nuclear weapons in normal circumstances, the New Zealand Prime Minister has agreed that there is now no reason for British warships not to visit New Zealand. The timing of any possible future visit by a British ship to New Zealand remains to be decided in the light of operational needs.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Racehorse Breeding

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the conclusions of the ECOFIN meeting on 12 June 1991 are applicable to the British racehorse breeding industry.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Yes. The conclusions apply to all industries of EC member states.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce value added tax rates on bloodstock sales similar to those charged in France on the basis of item 6 (Agricultural Inputs) in ECOFIN's list of services on which reduced value added tax rates may be charged.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Discussions on which goods and services will attract a reduced rate of VAT after 1992 are presently taking place in Brussels and no conclusions have been reached. Until these discussions are complete, it will not be known whether any EC member states will be able to introduce or keep a reduced rate for bloodstock. The Commission's current view is that racehorses do not fall within the list of goods and services which will qualify for a reduced rate of VAT.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the stated policy of the European Commission as regards whether the breeding of racehorses is an agricultural activity for the purposes of levying value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The European Commission views the breeding, rearing and care of all animals, including racehorses, as an agricultural activity falling within the activities which can be included in an agricultural flat rate scheme. The Commission's current view is that racehorses do not fall within the list of goods and services which will quality after 1992 for a reduced rate of VAT.

VAT

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effect of the Maastricht treaties on the rates of value added tax which may be levied in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: They have no effect.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full-year revenue effect if all tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance were restricted to the basic rate (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) in 1992-93, in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, giving the revenue from each separately and the total.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the yield, in a full year, from restricting all tax allowances and reliefs—except the personal allowance—to the basic rate of tax would be about £900 million. The corresponding provisional figure for 1992-93 is £950 million under the illustrative assumption of 4 per cent. increases in allowances and the basic rate limit from table 4.2 of the autumn statement 1991.

The combined effect of restricting these allowances and reliefs to the basic rate is greater than the sum of the effects of restricting each component separately. This is due to the cumulative effect of bringing more people into higher rate tax. For 1991-92 the estimated yields from the main components individually are:

	£ million
All allowances except the personal allowance	300
Occupational pension contributions	250
Personal pension contributions	150

The effect on receipts in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements for the restrictions.

It is not possible to provide a detailed breakdown for the components in respect of 1992-93 with acceptable accuracy.

Bus Companies

Mr. Fry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is considering to encourage bus companies to be able to purchase new vehicles.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer on 19 December 1991]: No steps are being considered at present to encourage bus companies to be able to purchase new vehicles.

Football Pools

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the rates of levy for football pools and the amount received by the Consolidated Fund, in 1991 prices, for each year since 1961.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer on 19 December 1991]: The table gives the rate of pool betting duty and the amount paid to the Exchequer between 1961 and 1991. All figures are approximately indexed to 1991 prices.

EMPLOYMENT

Gas Heating Appliances

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action the Health and Safety Executive is taking regarding the monitoring, safety and regulation of home gas space heating appliances in Wales.

Mr. Forth: The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984 set out detailed requirements for the safe installation and use of applicances where the gas is supplied through pipes. The Gas Safety (Installation and Use) (Amendment) Regulations 1990 require all gas installation businesses working with piped gas to register with the Council for Registered Gas Installers (CORGI), which aims to ensure that all such businesses work in a competent manner. The Health and Safety Executive is reviewing both of these regulations with the aim of bringing into scope the installation and use of appliances which use liquefied petroleum gas supplied from a tank or cylinder located on the consumer's premises.

HSE inspectors have powers under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 to investigate any reported incident involving gas and to take any enforcement action which may be necessary.

International Biosynthetics

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the operation of the emergency plans required under the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 in dealing with the recent chemical emission at the International Biosynthetics plant on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement about the co-ordination of information and emergency services on Merseyside in the event of a chemical or radiation incident.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is investigating the accident at the International Biosynethetics plant. The investigation includes discussions with the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority to establish whether any changes are required to the off-site emergency plan for the site as required by regulation 11(1) of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations (CIMAH) 1984.

Emergency plans are usually drawn up locally; this is normally done by the local authorities at county level or the fire and civil defence authorities in the metropolitan areas. HSE is also involved as the enforcing authority for regulations requiring the preparation of off-site emergency plans for the limited number of sites subject to CIMAH regulation 11. Comprehensive emergency plans for civil nuclear installations are currently prepared by the licensee as a condition of the site licence. In October, the Health and Safety Commission published proposals to put off-site planning at these installations on the same basis as the CIMAH regulations.

HSE publishes advice to assist emergency planners in these areas in the form of two booklets "Arrangements for responding to nuclear emergencies" and "The Control of Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 (CIMAH): further guidance on emergency plans".

BR Escalators

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many British Rail escalators, to which the public have access, have been examined by the Health and Safety Executive in the last five years; and what plans they have to examine the remainder.

Mr. Forth: The examination of escalators is primarily the responsibility of each railway undertaking. Her Majesty's inspecting officers of the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate check the general condition of escalators in the course of routine inspections of stations, and if they find a fault that might be considered hazardous to public safety, it would be brought to the notice of the operator. The major stations where most British Rail escalators are situated are inspected at least once every two years. Her Majesty's railway inspectorate does not keep records of individual escalators.

Employment Training

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what policy considerations govern the choice of 24 years as the upper age limit for the payment of child care costs for women seeking to re-enter the labour market under the aegis of employment training.

Mr. Forth: No such upper age limit exists. Training and enterprise councils (TECs) must meet or reimburse the support costs, including those of child care, to a level which is reasonable and necessary for training to take place, for all those entering employment training aged 18 to 24 who have been unemployed between six and 12 months—that is, those from the adult guarantee group. But others eligible to join employment training may also be helped with support costs at the discretion of the TEC.

National Dock Labour Board

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the progress in winding up the affairs of the National Dock Labour Board.

Mr. Forth: Yes. The wind-up has been concluded successfully and all the board's properties have been sold. I have placed in the Library copies of the board's final accounts covering the period from 4 July 1989 to the board's dissolution on 30 June 1990.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Royal Commonwealth Society

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches he has received concerning the future of the library of the Royal Commonwealth Society.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In recent months a number of approaches have been made to FCO Ministers on the future of the library of the Royal Commonwealth Society. Ministers are well aware of the problems and of the measures being taken by the Royal Commonwealth Society to tackle them.

Lt. Col. Partap Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Lt. Col. Partap Singh (Retd), president of the Khalsa Raj party, applied to the British embassy in Washington for a visa to visit the United Kingdom; and when a decision is to be taken on his application.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Lt. Col. Singh applied to the embassy in Washington for a visit visa on 4 September. Subsequently, he withdrew his application at the embassy in Oslo on 24 September.

Kenya

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to assist with the travelling arrangements of Somali refugees from camps to the British embassy in Nairobi to attend visa interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. We do not propose to assist with the travelling arrangements of Somali refugees in Kenya. The British high commissioner in Nairobi is not aware of any Somali refugees in Kenya who encounter difficulty in travelling to Nairobi to attend entry clearance interviews.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 December.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 December.

The Council agreed in principle that a further 200 million ecu (£140 million) of food aid should be sent urgently to the Soviet Union and that a first tranche of 500 million ecu (£350 million) of the 1·25 billion ecu (£875 million) food and medical aid standby credit should be disbursed as soon as possible. The Foreign Affairs Council also decided to establish a task force, based in Moscow or St. Petersburg, to help with food distribution.

The Council discussed the timetable for further technical work on the draft treaty on European union in order to ensure consistency between the provisions on political union and economic and monetary union and to prepare the text for signature. It considered reports on immigration and asylum presented by the Commission and invited Immigration Ministers to continue their work in this area on the lines agreed by the Maastricht European Council.

The Council asked the Commission to draw up proposals for the denunciation of the Lomé convention with respect to Haiti and to report to the Committee of Permanent Representatives on what steps might be taken to provide new humanitarian aid to Albania and to the Baltic states. It also agreed that the Commission should start exploratory talks with Romania on a possible association agreement. The Council adopted measures extending to countries of central America the generalised system of preferences concessions which it granted to the Andean pact countries last year.

The Council considered the way forward on the European Economic Area (EEA) agreement in the light of the European Court of Justices's opinion that the proposed judicial mechanism to be established under the EEA was incompatible with the treaty of Rome. The Council asked the Commission to identify possible solutions with a view to signature early next year.

Ministers discussed human rights in China, and agreed that the Political Committee should carry out a study. In the meantime, no new Community aid projects for China would be agreed.

In the margins of the Council, Ministers and the Commission signed EC association agreements with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia and a co-operation agreement with San Marino.

Ministers issued a declaration on guidelines on the recognition of new states in eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union. They discussed the situation in Yugoslavia in the light of these guidelines. They agreed to recognise on 15 January 1992 the independence of those Yugoslav republics satisfying certain conditions. The Arbitration Commission of the EC conference on Yugoslavia will advise on whether conditions have been met.

Tunisia

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with Tunisia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: They remain good. I made a successful visit to Tunisia on 2-3 December. On 17 December British Gas signed a $600 million contract to develop an offshore gas field. This is the largest ever British investment in Tunisia. It marks a breakthrough for the British private sector and will, I hope, generate further export opportunities.

Arms Transfers

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards establishing an international register of conventional arms transfers.

Mr. Hurd: On 9 December the United Nations General Assembly voted by an overwhelming majority to establish at the United Nations a universal and non-discriminatory register of conventional arms transfers, covering the transfer of specific major weapons systems. This follows directly from the initiative which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister took at the Luxembourg European Council on 8 April. We played a leading part in drafting and lobbying for the United Nations resolution, whch we tabled with our European Partners and Japan. The register will introduce greater openness and make it easier for the international community to monitor excessive arms build-up in any one country. We expect all responsible governments to recognise the value and importance of the decision taken by the General Assembly, and provide the necessary information for the register.

The register comes into effect from January 1992. It requests all participant states to record their imports and exports of certain major weapon systems and provide this information to the United Nations Secretary-General on an annual basis. The categories of weapon system affected are tanks, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships, armoured combat vehicles, large-calibre artillery and missiles and missile systems. In Britain's case, the disclosure of such information will require additional powers. The Government intend to bring the necessary legislation before the House early in the next Parliament. The legislation will require disclosure of all exports and imports within the categories named above with effect from 1 January 1992.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police National Computer

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many names, other than the criminal names category, are entered on the police national computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The names database on the PNC holds 5,634,424 records. These include 138,893 wanted or missing persons and 273,296 disqualified drivers, some of whom may also have been convicted of criminal offences. In addition, the PNC holds records of some 40 million vehicles. These records include the name of the registered keeper.

Prisons (Mother and Baby Units)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the staffing complement of each of the mother and baby units in Her Majesty's prisons; and how many of these staff have appropriate qualifications in child care.

Mrs. Rumbold: The staffing complement in each of the units is as follows:

	am	pm	Evening	Nights
HMP Holloway
	1 senior officer +2 officers	1 senior officer +2 officers	2 officers	2 officers
HMP and YOI Styal
	1 officer	1 officer	1 officer	1 night patrol
HMP Askham Grange

At present, the prison officers who work on the units do not have qualifications in child care. However, nursing cover is provided on a 24-hour basis and the local health visitor attends each unit regularly. Each unit is being encouraged to make use of the facilities available in the local community, so that where appropriate mothers can attend social service run family centres.

Officers from each unit have attended week long courses at HM prison Holloway devised specifically for staff working on the units. A full staff training needs analysis is being undertaken by the Prison Service College. In addition, HM prison Styal is planning to recruit nursery nurses to work in its unit in the new year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prisoners have applied in the last year to have their babies with them in prison mother and baby units; and how many have been successful.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of women prisoners who applied for admission to the units in 1991 were as follows:

Askham Grange:
Out of 25 applications received, only three were refused; in each case the mother had a history of child abuse.

Styal:
There have been 36 applications; one was rejected in view of her unsuitability for the mother and baby unit. Due to lack of space, two women have been put on a waiting list.

Holloway:
There have been 65 applications. There have been no rejections but due to lack of space two women have been put on a waiting list.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places have been available in prison mother and baby units in each of the past five years; and if there are plans to increase the number of such places in the future.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total number of places available in the three prison mother and baby units in each of the past five years has been 39. With the arrival of older babies at Styal, it has been necessary to reduce the number of mother and baby places from 12 to 10. The current number of places available is therefore 37. Consultations are taking place at Styal to determine both the medium and long-term requirements of mothers with older babies.

A new purpose-built unit, which will provide an additional closed facility for nine mothers and their babies, is planned at Her Majesty's prison New Hall. This unit should be ready for occupation by the spring of 1994.

Poll Tax

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his Department's estimates of the cost to the prison service and the police force in connection with the imprisonment of poll tax defaulters.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is no central record of the number of people proceeded against and imprisoned for failure to pay poll tax. It is not therefore possible to estimate the associated costs to the prison service or to the police.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his Department's estimates of the costs of debt collection by local authorities, including court costs and legal aid fees, in conection with poll tax defaulters.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.
My Department has made no such estimates.

Lotteries

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government have any plans to increase local authorities' powers to vet applications to hold lotteries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We keep the law governing the conduct and regulation of lotteries under review, but have no current proposals to increase local authorities' powers.

Styal Prison Steering Group

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to the reply given by the Minister of State on 7 November at column 219, what is the membership of the Styal prison steering group; and how many times it has met.

Mrs. Rumbold: The membership of the Styal prison steering group is as follows:

Area manager, Trans-Pennine (Chairman)
Governor, HM prison Styal
Head of residence, HM prison Styal
Principal nursing sister, HM prison Styal

Group manager, HM prison Styal
Senior psychologist, HM prison Styal
Probation officer, HM prison Styal
A representative from DIP 1 division, prison service HQ
Principal officer from Cheshire social services

The steering group met for the first time on 12 December. Future meetings will be held on a quarterly basis.

Historic Buildings (Broadcasting Complaints)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those cases considered by the Broadcasting Complaints Commission in 1991 concerning programmes which raised issues related to the payment of grants by historic buildings councils.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Commission have considered two complaints arising from a single programme which looked at the work of the Historic Buildings Council for Scotland. The details are as follows:

Complainant	Date of complaint	Programme	Date of broadcast	Nature of complaint	Commission's adjudication	Date
Mr. Marc Ellington	11 March 1991	"Scottish Eye: Making History Pay" Hyndland Television Channel 4	10 March 1991	Unjust or unfair treatment	Upheld in part	23 October 1991
Mr. Richard Emerson	21 June 1991	"Scottish Eye: Making History Pay" Hyndland Television Channel 4	10 March 1991	Unjust or unfair treatment	Upheld	23 October 1991

However, I understand from the Commission that the two complaints considered did not arise from the payment of grants by historic buildings councils. No other complaints have been received.

Closed-circuit Television

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to extending the use of closed-circuit television used for traffic management to such uses as crime prevention and detection; and what guidance he has issued on these matters.

Mr. John Patten: The use of surveillance systems is an operational matter for chief officers. The Home Office has, however, issued guidance that closed circuit television should be used by the police only when necessary for the proper and efficient conduct of police operations.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance he has given to pilot projects on the use of closed-circuit television as an instrument for tackling crime in city centres.

Mr. John Patten: The steering committees of a number of local safer cities projects have recommended giving financial support to a total of nine crime prevention schemes involving the use of closed-circuit television in city centre locations, including schemes confined to car parks. Home Office grant totalling £280,000 has been approved for these schemes. In the case of each scheme, the grant is a partial contribution only to the total cost.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reviewed the working of the concession made in September 1988 to Somali refugees; if he has plans to extend it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The concession is kept under constant review in the light of circumstances both in Somalia itself and neighbouring countries. The original scheme was criticised on the grounds that those who could not reach the relevant British diplomatic post to apply for entry clearance in person were denied the right of appeal (under section 13(2) of the Immigration Act 1971) which normally applies to applications made abroad. Earlier this year new arrangements were introduced to allow sponsors here to make written application direct to the post concerned in the event of an adverse decision by the Home Office, thus qualifying the applicant for appeal rights. We have no plans to extend the concession any further at present although I will look into the points the hon. Member raised with me when we discussed this matter on 18 December.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of requests from Somalis in the United Kingdom for the issue of visas to relatives abroad seeking asylum at the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 29 November 1991 there were 1,371 outstanding visa applications from Somalis seeking to join relatives in the United Kingdom.

Animal Experiments

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received over increases in the number of tests on live animals carried out in respect of food additives.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are not aware of any such representations.

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he will take to reduce the use of animals in experiments for food additive tests.

Miss Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is not one of the Ministers responsible for the national and international regulations under which the safety testing of food additives are required. His responsibility is for controlling the conduct of scientific procedures on living animals. We have no plans to refuse licences where my right hon. Friend is satisfied that the work is justified under section 5 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inspectors he employs to monitor tests on live animals; whether he has received representations to increase this number; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There were 20 members of the Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate on 19 December. The Home Office receives representations from time to time to increase the number of inspectors, but I am satisfied that the present strength of the inspectorate is adequate.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received urging the amendment of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and whether he proposes any amendment or administrative action to end or reduce tests on live animals (a) for cosmetics and (b) for drugs similar to those already on the market.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Home Office receives a large volume of correspondence on a wide range of animal procedures matters, part of which will contain particular or general suggestions for changes to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 or the way in which it is administered.

Provided that the requirements of the 1986 Act are fulfilled, my right hon. Friend will continue to grant under section 5 project licences authorising particular programmes of work involving living animals. The modification of drugs to improve their efficacy or reduce their unwanted side effects is an important route of scientific and therapeutic advance. Any application for a project licence which clearly sought to develop a drug already on the market would not, however, be granted. The use of animals in the safety testing of cosmetics accounted for less than one quarter of a per cent. of all animal tests carried out in this country in 1990. Reductions in the number of tests on animals for whatever purpose depend heavily on scientific advances in the development of acceptable alternatives, their validation, and their acceptance by regulatory bodies.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what change there has been, since 1 January 1991, in his policy of counting the number of LD50 force feeding tasks on live animals; and what were the numbers of such tests in each of the last five years;

(2) what representations he has received over (a) recent increases in the LD50 force feeding test on live animals and (b) the utility and possibility of replacement of this test; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Substances administered in acute toxicity tests are not always given by means of a tube inserted into the stomach. The statistics do not differentiate between routes of administration.

There has been encouraging progress in further reducing the need for formal LD50 tests. As a result of a British initiative led by the Department of Health and supported and part funded by the Home Office, a testing method which does not rely on lethality as an end point has been developed, validated and accepted by international regulatory bodies as a replacement of the LD50 test in many areas of toxicity testing. We understand that the new test will be incorporated into OECD guidelines next year.

There has been no change since 1 January 1991 in the counting of LD50 tests. However, it is not possible to identify these tests separately in the statistics because they are included in the wider group of acute and subacute quantitative whole body lethal toxicity tests. The 1990 figures for this group are given in columns (8) and (9) of table 14 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain 1990" (Cm 1574), a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The descriptions of the classifications of toxicity tests were amended slightly for clarification in the 1990 statistics which means that this group now includes tests previously recorded in other columns of the tables. Taking all acute and subacute whole body toxicity tests together gives comparable figures for Great Britain as follows:

Thousands of procedures

Acute and subacute whole body toxicity tests	1987	1988	1989	1990
Lethal	234	233	176	206
Non-Lethal	166	148	143	139
All	400	381	319	345

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures he has for each of the last three years of the number bred of (a) animals with a harmful genetic defect or (b) transgenic animals; and whether he will make a statement on trends indicated by these figures.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of scientific procedures started in 1990 using animals bred with harmful genetic defects (including transgenic animals as a separate category) is given in table 15 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain 1990" (Cm 1574), a copy of which is in the Library. As explained in paragraph 19 of the introductory notes and paragraph 24(m) of the Commentary in the Command Paper, there are no comparable figures for earlier years.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of juvenile offenders (a) cautioned and (b) found guilty by a court in each year since 1980;

(2) what (a) percentage and (b) number of incidents reported to police in each year since 1980 he estimates were committed by juveniles;

(3) what was the source of figures on juvenile offending referred to in his oral statement on 12 December at column 1068.

Mr. John Patten: Information referred to in my oral statement at column 1097 on 12 December is published in the annual Command Paper (Cm. 1322) criminal statistics, England and Wales 1989, chapter 5, copies of which can be found in the Library.

Information on the number of incidents committed by juveniles reported to the police is not collected centrally. the data from "Criminal Statistics 1989" given in the table below relate to the number of juveniles (persons aged 10 to under 17 years) cautioned and found guilty of indictable offences and as a percentage of all persons cautioned and found guilty.

"Criminal Statistics 1990" will not be published until the spring of 1992.

Sir Basil Feldman

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many times in the last 12 months he has met Sir Basil Feldman;

(2) when was the last time he met Sir Basil Feldman; and what subjects were discussed;

(3) when he last discussed Sunday trading with Sir Basil Feldman.

Mrs. Rumbold: To discuss Sunday trading, Sir Basil Feldman called on my right hon. Friend on 13 March 1991 and on me on 5 June.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that those shops that have been trading on Sundays in contravention of current English law do not retain the resulting profits, in the event of a European Court of Justice decision upholding that law.

Mrs. Rumbold: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has from police authorities and chief constables on the financial and manpower consequences for policing as a result of the opening of shopping facilities on the four Sundays before Christmas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. Deployment of police officers is a matter for the chief constables concerned.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring before Parliament a statutory instrument to amend schedule 4 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to include offences under section 47 of the Shops Act 1950.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 16 December to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) at columns 10-11.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he received the Durham university business school report "Women and Work" on women's attitudes to working unsocial hours in the retail trade;

(2) what conclusions he has drawn from the Durham university business school report "Women and Work" for any changes to the law on Sunday trading.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I received copies of the report on 27 and 26 November respectively. The report is currently being evaluated.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on changes to the Sunday trading laws in France.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the extent to which food superstores opening on Sundays are complying with the licensing laws in every respect.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Because the enforcement of the liquor licensing law in England and Wales is a local matter for the police, no such assessment is called for.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account he has taken of the Robert George industrial tribunal decision on Sunday working in considering his policy on the reform of the law on Sunday trading.

Mrs. Rumbold: Policy implications, if any, of decisions of industrial tribunals are primarily for the Department of Employment. In developing policy on reform of the law on Sunday trading, we work closely with them on the interests of those who do and do not wish to work in retailing on Sundays.

Operation Container

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 13 December, Official Report, column 580, what representations he has received from people and organisations in Lancashire outside Greater Manchester about Operation Container.

Mrs. Rumbold: Representations have been received from Lancashire county council and from other sources in respect of the use of police cells in Lancashire. On 18 December the Lancashire constabulary held 100 adult prisoners who should be in prison. As my earlier reply explained, this use of police cells is unacceptable and my right hon. Friend and I are determined that it should be brought to an end in the shortest possible time.

Foundation for Business Responsibility

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the organisation Foundation for Business Responsibility is recognised as a legitimate charity by the Charity Commission.

Mr. John Patten: The Foundation for Business Responsibilities was registered by the Charity Commission on 17 April 1967. Its objects are the promotion of education in industrial and commercial affairs.

BBC Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the pay for the new chairman-elect of the board of governors of BBC Wales, including the pay for being on the BBC main board of governors; and what is the basis of days worked per week or month on which the appointment has been made of Dr. Gwyn Jones.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The BBC board of governors comprises 12 governors, of whom one is chairman, another vice-chairman and three more are respectively national governors for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. As part of their duties, the national governors also serve as chairmen of their respective national broadcasting councils. The BBC national governor for Wales is therefore chairman of the Broadcasting Council for Wales.

The remuneration of the BBC national governor for Wales (and that of the national governors for Scotland and Northern Ireland) is £14,150 per annum on the basis of one and a half days per week. Dr. Gwyn Jones' appointment as the new national governor for Wales is therefore on the basis of one and half days per week.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas were granted at United Kingdom posts abroad for the purpose of entering the United Kingdom to seek asylum in (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information, which may understate, is of grants of asylum to principal applications which were made overseas. The recorded figures are shown in the table.

Miscarriages of Justice

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for compensation for miscarriages of justice he received in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) how many applications for ex-gratia payments for compensation for miscarriages of justice he received in the last year for which figures are available; how many were successful, and what were the highest and lowest payments made.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications he has received for ex-gratia payments from women who were wrongly convicted under byelaws at RAF Greenham Common; how many have been successful; and what has been the average level of award.

Mr. John Patten: We have received eight applications for compensation from women who were convicted under the RAF Greenham Common byelaws 1985. None of these applications has been granted.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications he has turned down for ex-gratia payments from women who were wrongly convicted under byelaws at RAF Greenham Common; and for what reasons he has refused these payments.

Mr. John Patten: We have refused five ex-gratia payment applications from women who were convicted under the RAF Greenham Common byelaws 1985. The applications were refused because they did not meet the criteria of the ex-gratia scheme for compensation.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to pay the first instalment of compensation to John McGranagan following his wrongful conviction.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. McGranaghan's application for compensation was received last month. My right hon. Friend hopes to be in a position to reach a decision soon.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of male homosexual rape have been recorded in Her Majesty's prisons in each of the years for which numbers have been recorded; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I regret that the information requested is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the law so as to make sexual offences under United Kingdom law but committed outside the United Kingdom actionable in the British courts, particularly in respect of minors.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to extend the jurisdiction of our courts in this way.

Drugs

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of drug-related projects which have received financial support from his Department during 1991; and how much support they have been given.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the lower limit for eligibility for compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A guiding principle in considering the allocation of available resources for the compensation for victims of crimes of violence is that compensation should go to the more serious cases. The Government are committed to upholding that principle.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I have decided that to ensure the maintenance of this principle, applications for compensation received by the board on or after 6 January 1992 will be met only where the injury sustained would attract an award of at least £1,000.

The 27th annual report of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board recently announced a record annual payment to the victims of crimes of violence of £109·3 million in 1990-91, 50 per cent. more than the previous year.

Total spending on the CICB scheme in England, Wales and Scotland is set to rise to £144 million in 1992-93, £157 million in 1993-94 and £161 million in 1994-95.

The increase in funding from £48 million in 1987-88 to £144 million in 1992-93, £96 million amounts to a rise of 300 per cent.

Trevi and Immigration Ministers

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the meetings of Trevi and European Community Immigration Ministers in The Hague on 2 and 3 December.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration was the 11th in the series of meetings held towards the end of each presidency since 1986. The Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), attended on my behalf.

Immigration Ministers approved a report for submission to the European Council on the harmonisation of immigration and asylum policies, as requested at the Luxembourg European Council. The report contained a detailed work programme for implementation over the next few years. The report made by Immigration Ministers has subsequently been endorsed by the European Council meeting at Maastricht.

In the asylum field, Ministers agreed that every effort should be made to ensure ratification of the Dublin convention by the end of 1992 at the latest.

Ministers also agreed that everything possible should be done to resolve the outstanding problem (concerning Gibraltar) which has prevented signature of the draft external frontiers convention.

The meeting of Trevi Ministers endorsed measures to strengthen practical police co-operation. These include: the establishment of national contact points for public order matters; guidelines having the aim of strengthening the mutual assistance in criminal cases; recommendations on the controlled delivery of drugs; and police co-operation in common frontier zones. The Ministers agreed to submit a report to the European Council, prepared by the ad hoc working group chaired by the United Kingdom, recommending the establishment of a central European criminal investigation office, "Europol", with a drugs unit as its first stage. Ministers also agreed, at the United Kingdom's suggestion, that car crime be placed on Trevi's agenda and that the United Kingdom should convene an ad hoc seminar of experts on this subject during the Portuguese presidency.

Visas

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will lift visa restrictions for Polish citizens.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

HEALTH

Children's Homes

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has in hand to ensure the proper protection of children in residential homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my right hon. Friend gave to a private notice question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) on 2 December at columns 23-29.

Leicestershire county council is today announcing the appointment of Mr. Andrew Kirkwood QC to chair the inquiry to be conducted by the council into matters arising from the recent criminal trial of child care officers formerly employed in the council's children's homes. He will be assisted by two assessors who have yet to be appointed.

Skin Cancers and Cataracts

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the number of cases of (a) skin cancer broken down into melanoma and non-melanoma and (b) cataracts as a result of ozone depletion in the United Kingdom in (i) 1995, (ii) 2000, (iii) 2005 and (iv) 2010.

Mr. Dorrell: Any assessment of long-term health effects resulting from depletion of the ozone layer, with a concomitant increase in ground levels of ultraviolet radiation, would be influenced strongly by assumptions made about global future releases of various pollutants, particularly chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs). The United Kingdom strongly supports the Montreal protocol on the phasing out or reduction in emissions of the most harmful of these pollutants. In addition, increased awareness of the dangers of excessive exposure to sunlight will influence public behaviour in relation to sunbathing habits. It is therefore not possible to predict with any confidence the incidence of skin cancer or cataracts in the future. However, trends in the incidence rates of these diseases will continue to be monitored.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of melanoma and non-melanoma skin cancers, squamous cell and basal cell, have been reported in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland for each of the years 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: Registrations of cases of malignant melanoma of skin (ICD[1]172), and other malignant neoplasm of skin (ICD[1]173) for England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland for each of the years 1980 to 1990, the latest year for which figures are available, are as follows.

Malignant melanoma of skin

[1]International Classification of Diseases code (ninth revision)

[2]Registration of cancers from these sites are well known to be particularly difficult and liable to incompleteness.

It would not be possible to distinguish between squamous cell and basal cell carcinomas without disproportionate cost.

It was recognised by the working party chaired by Professor Eva Alberman which reported last year on the national cancer registration scheme (Series MB1 No. 17) that better and more timely figures were required. Many of the working party's 17 recommendations are currently being taken forward by the cancer registries in the regional health authorities and by the NHS information management group in the Department. At OPCS, the large and complex computer system is being completely redeveloped. This will not be ready until 1994, but results for England and Wales for 1987 should be published by spring next year and those for 1988 by the end of the year.

Ozone Depletion

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are working in his Department full-time on the human health effect of ozone depletion in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: No staff are employed full-time on this specific area. A number of officials are engaged on work relating to health aspects of radiation in the environment, including ultraviolet and other non-ionising radiations. The National Radiological Protection Board also employs scientific staff on work in these areas.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list any studies his Department has undertaken or commissioned on the human health impacts of ozone depletion over the United Kingdom; and if it has any plans to do any further studies.

Mr. Dorrell: The predominant health effects which might arise as a result of the depletion in the ozone layer would be as a consequence of an increased exposure to solar ultraviolet radiation. The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has three stations in the United Kingdom which constantly monitor levels of ultraviolet light from the sun. The data obtained from these monitoring stations is published annually.

The NRPB and other research groups in the United Kingdom and abroad have undertaken a number of studies into the health effects of ultraviolet radiation and further research is either under way or planned.

In addition, the NRPB has established an advisory group which will, among other things, review these studies and will advise on the need for further research when its review is complete. The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) is also being kept informed of development in this area.

Refugee Children

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider providing special funding for the local authorities caring for unaccompanied refugee children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We recognise that the cost of caring for these children bears heavily on a small number of local authorities. The authorities concerned are mostly in London where the standard spending assessments are higher than the national average because they face additional pressures such as this. For 1992-93 the children's personal social services standard spending assessment for London is over twice the national average and that for Inner London nearly four times the national average. It is for the authorities themselves to make their own decisions on priorities for local services.

London Hospitals

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the numbers of empty beds at the Charing Cross hospital, Hammersmith; what is the current waiting list for operations in the North West Thames regional health authority; and if he has any changes planned for the hospital functions in the future.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested for North West Thames regional health authority is given in the table. Information on the number of empty beds is not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Ian Dixon, the chairman of Riverside health authority, for details. There are no current plans for changes in the hospital functions.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to his answer to the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) of 12 December, Official Report, columns 484-85, if he will extend the application in principle of the conscience clause in the Abortion Act 1967 to (a) pharmacists who are asked to participate in abortions by dispensing abortifacient drugs for that purpose, (b) medical secretaries who are asked to participate in abortions by processing administrative details required for abortions and (c) other medical and ancillary staff required to assist in the process of abortion except where their assistance is purely for the purpose of caring for mother and baby.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Section 4 of the Abortion Act 1967 makes provision for conscientious objection to participation in treatment authorised by the Act. Its operation cannot be extended except by primary legislation. However, in recognition of the particular concern expressed about the position of those ancillary staff in hospitals who are involved in the handling of fetuses and fetal tissue, hospital managers have been asked to apply the principle of section 4 to any ancillary staff who express a conscientious objection to participation in that activity. We have no plans to ask managers to apply the principle to other personnel who are not directly concerned with the handling of fetuses and fetal tissue.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work has been carried out by his Department on arachnoiditis, including investigations of its cause, symptoms and the prognosis for suffers; what research he has funded into treatments and possible cure; and what information his Department has about claims for compensation by sufferers whose condition is alleged to have been caused by the administration of Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The MRC is not currently supporting any research specifically into arachnoiditis.

We are aware that litigation is proceeding on behalf of people who claim damage through the administration of myodil.

General Medical Services

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources will be made available for the cash limited general medical services in 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 19 December.

RHAs (Capital Spending)

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the amounts to be allocated to regional health authorities for capital spending in 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 19 December.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will announce National Health Service trusts' external financing limits for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 19 December.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is possible for a national health service trust to merge with non-trust health services without (a) public consultation or (b) without application to the Secretary of State for Health.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will be issuing detailed guidance on NHS trust mergers and acquisitions early in the new year. Where an NHS trust plans to merge with non-trust health services and this requires an amendment to the original statutory instrument formally establishing the trust the regional health authority will consult in accordance with section 5 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 under an order made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. In any other case the district health authority in question will consult the community health council.

Hospital Eye Service

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many referrals to the hospital eye service of persons above the age of 60 years took place in each year since 1987;

(2) how many referrals to the hospital eye service there were of (a) glaucoma, (b) cataract and (c) age-related maculopathy, in each year since 1987.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Complex Lenses

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the values of the complex lens entitlements within the spectable voucher scheme of the national health service for patients who have had a national health service eye examination on grounds of their complex lens eligibility only, and for patients who have had a national health service eye examination on grounds of insufficient income and who are found to require a prescription for complex lenses; and what information he has on the prevailing market prices of the cheapest available complex lenses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The value of the complex lenses "supplement" for patients who are entitled to vouchers on the grounds of complex lens eligibility is £3·70 for single vision spectacles and £19·70 for bifocals. Patients who are otherwise entitled under the voucher scheme and who have prescriptions for complex lenses will receive a C voucher (£49·00) for single vision spectacles or an F voucher (£104·20) for bifocals. The Department's annual survey of voucher values indicates that spectacles with complex lenses are available within voucher values.

Spectacles

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made for people claiming attendance allowance to meet the cost of spectacle lenses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: People in receipt of attendance allowance can claim help with their spectacle lenses under the NHS low income scheme.

North East Thames RHA

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the procedures leading up to the recent appointment of North East Thames regional health authority's general manager followed good practice in equal opportunities employment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Individual appointments to NHS posts are a matter for the relevant employing authorities. The NHS is committed to equal opportunities in employment. Normally, we would expect all NHS posts, including those at senior management level, to be advertised and openly competitive. However, there may be exceptional circumstances in which the adoption of other procedures is justified.

WALES

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the results and conclusions of the recent radiation monitoring programme carried out on the environment around Trawsfynydd power station by the fisheries radiological inspectorate on behalf of the Welsh Office.

Mr. David Hunt: On behalf of the Welsh Office, the fisheries radiological inspectorate regularly monitors levels of radioactivity in a variety of materials in the aquatic environment around Trawsfynydd power station. The results of this monitoring are pubished annually in the report "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

In addition to this regular monitoring of fish and sediments at Trawsfynydd an enhanced programme of analysis was set up earlier this year by the inspectorate to measure radioactivity in sediment profiles at Trawsfynydd lake. This work has recently been completed and the results have been made available to the local community liaison committee. They are broadly consistent with earlier readings obtained by Nuclear Electric. The radioactivity present in the sediments is at a low level.

In terms of overall exposure to radioactivity by the public, the most highly exposed group are people who fish the lake and consume their catch. Expert advice is that the total radiation dose likely to be received by this group is no more than 10 per cent. of the internationally recommended limit of 1 mSv per year, i.e. well within the recognised safety limit.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost, expected start and completion date of the Deeside Park to Drove Corner road scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The scheme is expected to start between April 1994 and March 1997 at a cost of around £17 million. Construction is likely to take two years.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost and expected start and completion date of the Woodbank Junction to Deeside Park road scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This scheme is planned to start between April 1994 and March 1997 at a cost of around £16 million. Construction is likely to take about one and a half years.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of people registered as disabled in each grade in his Department and Cadw.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Number
Grade 6	2
SEO	1
HEO	4
EO	6
AO	7
AA	15
Support grades	6

The grade categories shown include equivalent professional grades.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy on the employment of people registered as disabled; and what initiatives he has taken to increase the number of people registered as disabled employed by his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is fully committed to an equal opportunities policy which states that no job applicant or employee should receive less favourable treatment on the grounds of disablement. I have placed a copy of my Department's "Guide to Equal Opportunities" in the Library of the House.

The initiatives my Department has taken include the appointment of a departmental disabled persons officer; close liaison with the Department of Employment, disablement advisory services and disablement resettlement officers, particularly on recruitment of disabled staff; the establishment of a work experience scheme for clients of the Cardiff employment rehabilitation centre; and the provision of special aids and equipment to disabled officers to enable them to carry out their duties effectively.

A further programme of action to achieve equality of opportunity in the Welsh Office for disabled people is to be issued to staff early in 1992. This will contain details of current practice and areas for future development with measurable objectives and target dates for their achievement.

RECHAR

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the coalfield communities concerning RECHAR funds.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a significant number of representations from hon. Members, including the hon.

Gentleman himself, local authorities and other bodies about RECHAR and have discussed the matter with a number of them. I have consistently made it clear that I am extremely concerned that these EC resources remain blocked by Commissioner Millan and I hope that the whole matter can be resolved as soon as possible.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to release RECHAR funds for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I am concerned that Commissioner Millan has not yet approved the RECHAR programme for industrial south Wales and I discussed this matter with his director general when I was in Brussels last month.

Run-Down Mining Areas (Grants)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what European funds have been received by his Department for (i) factory units, (ii) small businesses, (iii) promotion of tourism, (iv) training, (v) retraining and (vi) infrastructural and environmental improvements in run-down mining areas.

Mr. David Hunt: For the period 1989-91, £88 million from the European structural funds was committed to the Clwyd and industrial south Wales integrated development operation programmes, which cover Welsh coalfield areas. The operational programmes allocate the funding as shown in the table:

Children's Homes

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to encourage local authorities in Wales to appoint mature women who have brought up a family to run children's homes.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A review of children's homes in Wales has recently been completed by social services inspectorate, Wales, and a report is currently under consideration. While its recommendations are designed to secure improvements in the management and running of all children's homes in Wales, and it discusses in particular the need to develop the existing skills of mature and experienced staff in order best to meet the needs of the children, the selection of staff is, and will remain, the responsibility of local care authorities.

BBC Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes there will be in the pay and terms and conditions of employment of Dr. Gwyn Jones as chairman of the Welsh Development Agency subsequent to his appointment as chairman-elect of the BBC Wales board of governors.

Mr. David Hunt: The pay and terms and conditions of Dr. Jones's commitment to the WDA will now be reviewed.

Swansea College

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the revised articles of government for Swansea college have been approved by the Welsh Office; and what are the current articles in force for the college.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Using powers vested in him under the Education Reform Act 1988 my right hon. Friend approved the revised articles of government for Swansea college submitted by West Glamorgan local education authority subject to amendments in August. I understand that the authority has accepted the amendments and will shortly be making the necessary order to bring the articles into effect. Until this is done the articles in force are those which were made by the authority under the Education (No. 2) Act 1968 which came into effect in March 1976.

Training (Cardiff)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 16 December, Official Report, column 73, if he will make it his policy to meet representatives of the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council, the South Glamorgan women's workshop and the Cardiff information technology centre, to consider alternative locations for a training centre of excellence; if he will meet the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation to consider alternative uses for the previously earmarked training centre of excellence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The location of the proposed training centre is a matter for the development corporation and the other bodies concerned in the first instance and it would be inappropriate for me to intervene at this stage.

House Repossessions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with Tai Cymru regarding the resources required by Welsh housing associations to acquire mortgaged properties at risk of repossession for rent to occupants eligible for housing benefit as sitting tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The statement yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, about the package agreed between the Government and mortgage lenders to tackle mortgage repossessions, explained that mortgage lenders would be providing the resources for housing associations to acquire mortgaged properties at risk of repossession. We and Housing for Wales are having discussions with mortgage lenders in Wales about the implementation of their scheme.

Third Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will convene a conference at shire hall, Mold, of Clwyd county councillors, Alyn and Deeside councillors, town and community councils of Deeside, employers and trades unionists to discuss plans for a third Dee crossing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. A meeting has been arranged in London on 28 January to discuss the third Dee crossing with the hon. Member and a delegation from the Alyn and Deeside district council.

Groundwater

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of representations he has received since 6 December in connection with his groundwater consultations.

Mr. David Hunt: Since 6 December I have received 77 letters about groundwater-related matters, 61 of which were in identical terms; 59 of those 77 letters were included in the total figure that I gave the hon. Gentleman in my answer on 13 December.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the correspondence between him and the Welsh Region of the National Rivers Authority referred to in the December 1991 National Rivers Authority position statement on the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill, relating to the National Rivers Authority and the Secretary of State's general environmental duty and the assurances sought by the authority that the conservation implications of the barrage had been taken into account in arriving at the decision to promote the Bill.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The correspondence referred to was between officials of the NRA and my Department. It would not be appropriate for it to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy considerations were taken into account in removing in the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill the right conferred by paragraphs 52(1) and (2) of the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill for householders outside the protected property line to make a claim for remedial work against damage caused by rising groundwater, irrespective of whether that householder had previously commissioned a pre-impoundment survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Bill provides for properties within the protected property line to be surveyed before and after impoundment in order to determine whether there have been any effects from rising groundwater. Owners and occupiers of properties outside the protected property line but within Cardiff, Penarth and Llandough who choose to have pre- and post-impoundment surveys undertaken are also entitled to benefit from the scheme. By an anomaly, cause 52 of the private Bill also entitled householders in Cardiff, Penarth and Llandough but outside the protected property line to a survey and remedial works even if they had not opted for the initial surveys.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the intake of new patients per million population in Wales in 1990 for kidney treatment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There were 80·6 new patients accepted for treatment of end stage renal failure per million population in Wales in 1990.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to assist kidney patients in Wales; and what new measures he proposes to help kidney patients in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 12 November 1991.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the rate of (a) female unemployment, (b) male unemployment and (c) long-term unemployment in Dyfed.

Mr. David Hunt: In November 1991 the unemployment rates for men and women in Dyfed were 11·3 per cent. and 5·6 per cent. of the work force respectively.

The latest available long-term unemployment data are for October, when 1·8 per cent. of the Dyfed work force had been unemployed for more than one year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist the unemployed in Dyfed.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other Government agencies operate a wide range of measures aimed at combating unemployment. The Welsh Office and all the other bodies will continue to look for and respond swiftly to opportunities that arise which have the potential to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist the unemployed in the Fishguard area.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other Government agencies operate a wide range of measures aimed at combating unemployment. The Welsh Office and all the other bodies will continue to look for and respond swiftly to opportunities that arise which have the potential to reduce unemployment. I have, in particular, asked the Welsh Development Agency and West Wales TEC, in association with the local authorities and employment services, to consider what action needs to be taken to alleviate the effects of the proposed closure of RNAD Trecwn.

Naval Base, Trecwn

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the Royal Navy base at Trecwn, Dyfed.

Mr. David Hunt: At present, I have no plans to do so. I met a deputation from the depot on 9 September.

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his written answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, of 17 December, Official Report, column 137, what was the average annual rate of increase in national health service expenditure in Wales as measured in input unit costs (a) from 1974-75 to 1978-79 and (b) from 1979-80 to 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The average increases were as follows:

a. 2·8 per cent. pa
b. 2·3 per cent. pa

However, I was interested in why the hon. Gentleman chose these dates and asked for input unit costs. Taking the dividing year as 1979-80 (the last year of the Labour Government spending programme) the figures are:

a. 1·7 per cent. pa
b. 2·4 per cent. pa

As I pointed out in the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 17 December, changes in input volumes are an inadequate guide to the level of services the NHS can be expected to achieve since they do not reflect the continuing success of NHS management in increasing the efficiency with which it uses resources.

In two of the five years of the last Labour Government NHS spending adjusted by the GDP deflator actually fell. The increase in the five years of the last Labour Government in real terms was 9 per cent. compared with about 60 per cent. in 12 years under this Government. No amount of mathematical ingenuity on the part of the hon. Gentleman can hide the fact that real terms increases in spending under the Government is double that of the last Labour Government—a Labour Government who cut the hospital building programme and reduced the pay of doctors and nurses in real terms.

Rail Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will respond to the fourth report of the Welsh Affairs Committee, Session 1990-91, "Rail Services in Wales (HC Paper 262).

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the response has been published today as Cm 1785.

Operations

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what variations may be found between the costs of each type of operation carried out under the national health service in Wales; what is the average cost; and what are the highest and lowest costs.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 5 December 1991]: Information regarding the costs of each type of operation carried out under the national health service in Wales is not collected centrally.

Data relating to specialty costs are available in the booklet "Welsh Health Costing Returns" and the latest version of this, for 1989-90, is available in the Library of the House. However, for ease of reference the following tables provide some information from the booklet giving high and low costs, and average costs by specialty within the least heterogeneous group of Welsh hospitals—acute general hospitals group I (i.e. those which are the main general acute hospitals providing a wide range of in-patient and out-patient specialist services together with the necessary support services)—illustrating:

Specialty costing in its current form was introduced in 1987-88 and represents the average cost of treating a broad range of conditions within each specialty grouping. This costing is undertaken annually by disaggregating total costs via a process of direct allocation and cost apportionment.

Whilst it represents an improvement on the sort of "whole hospital" costing available prior to 1987-88, caution should be taken when using this information for comparison purposes since it does not take account of (i) differences in the case mix (in terms of condition, complexity and severity) within each specialty as between different hospitals which have an impact upon the levels and type of staffing and equipment necessary to provide appropriate care and (ii) differences in the range, age and condition of the hospital accommodation which have an impact upon the pattern and overhead costs of service delivery. The averages shown should not therefore be regarded as normative standards against which efficiency or quality of service can be judged, since it must be recognised that a wide and complex range of factors need to be taken into account when making such assessments. However, authorities are encouraged when analysing their costs to explore those areas of service delivery where costing figures suggest significant differences between authorities.

The specialty costing booklet for 1990-91 is due to be published in the new year, and it will be the last produced regarding the period prior to the NHS reforms. From 1991-92 onwards one of the benefits, indeed an imperative of the NHS reforms, is that service providers will be obliged to cost their services more frequently, more accurately and in greater detail. To this end a major programme of investment in better information systems for resource management and case-mix costing purpose is currently under way. When fully implemented throughout Wales, these new systems will enable service providers to identify costs to sub-specialty levels—for example to "Diagnosis Related Groups" and, where necessary, to particular operations and procedures or even to individual patients, depending on the nature of the service contracts with purchasing authorities or GP fundholders.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Anthrax

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what review he has undertaken of the anthrax regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Following an outbreak in north Wales in 1989, the agriculture departments reviewed our arrangements for dealing with this disease. It was concluded that while the existing provisions were effective for the protection of animal and public health, the legislation should include some additional powers. These include powers to restrict the use of feedingstuffs, to require vaccinations where necessary and to move healthy animals to another place.

The Anthrax Order 1991, which comes into force on 1 January 1992, incorporates these changes and clarifies responsibilities for dealing with anthrax, bringing the arrangements more into line with those for other diseases.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the changes made to the national insurance retirement pension since 1979, noting the date of implementation, the numbers affected and the full-year savings or cost, gross and net of savings or cost in other benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: The major changes and the effect of those changes made to the national insurance retirement pension since 1979 are as follows:

1. November 1980—pensions uprating
   Alteration of statutory up-rating requirement to increase by prices, rather than whichever was the higher of prices or earnings. Affected all in receipt of retirement pension. Gross savings £65 million (1980-81).
2. December 1984—married women's half-test
   Abolition of married women's half-test for those women who reached age 60 before 6 April 1979. Affected 25,000 women. Gross cost £30 million—net £25 million (1985-86).
3. December 1984—hospital in-patients
   Husbands of married women in hospital treated as dependants for hospital downrating purposes in all cases. Implemented retrospectively April 1989. Actual numbers affected and costs not known.
4. April 1988—time limits
   Time limits for claiming Retirement Pension extended from 3 to 12 months. Delayed claims can be backdated up to a 12 month absolute limit. Affected 27,000 potential cases. Gross cost estimated to be £2·5 million in first year (1988-89).
5. October 1989—earnings rule
   Abolition of retirement pensions earnings rule for men between age 65-69 and women between age 60-64. Resulted in 115,000 new claims and increased the rate of pension for a further 2,500 pensioners whose pension was reduced on account of the earnings rule. Gross cost £300 million (1990-91).

Notes:

1) Estimates of the net cost and savings on other benefits are not available, except for item 2.

2) Records of ongoing costs are not retained for most benefits due to the expense of collating the information. The amounts quoted therefore apply to the information available at the time the change was implemented.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year cost of raising the retirement pension by £5 per week for a single person and by £8 per week for a married person (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in means-tested and national insurance benefits for Great Britain.

Miss Widdecombe: The gross cost would be £3·0 billion in 1991-92 and provisional estimates suggest that the gross cost will be the same in 1992-93.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the statutory instrument which links benefits to the category A basic retirement pension; and what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year cost, net of tax, of raising by £5 per week for a single person and by £8 per week for a married person the retirement pension and (i) each linked benefit, (ii) each linked and means-tested benefit so that all of the people on linked benefits receive the increase, (iii) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension, (iv) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension and means-tested benefits so that all of the people on these linked benefits receive the increase, (1) for 1991-92 and (2) 1992-93, in each case including and excluding those below retirement age;

(2) What would be the numbers of people affected above and below retirement age by raising by £5 per week for a single person and by £8 per week for a married person, the retirement pension and (a) each benefit linked by statute to the Category A Basic Retirement Pension, (b) each linked and means-tested benefit so that all of the people on linked benefits receive the increase, (c) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension and (d) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension and means-tested benefits so that all of the people on these linked benefits receive the increase, for Great Britain in 1991-92, listing separately the numbers on each benefits, including and excluding those below the retirement age.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 3 December 1991]: The following statutory provisions link the rate of other contributory benefits with the category A retirement pension: sections 14, 15, 25, 26 and 29 of the Social Security Act 1975 and sections 6, 7, 8, 13 and 14 of the Social Security Pensions Act 1975.

The full-year net benefit cost of raising the category A, B, C and D basic retirement pensions by £5 for a single person and £3 for a category BL pension would be £1·84 billion in 1991-92 and £1·64 billion net of income tax. Detailed estimates for 1992-93 are not yet available.

The full year costs of the other options in 1991-92 are as follows:

Table 1—Those at or above state pension age

(ii) Each linked and income related benefit increased too	2·47	0·09	0·01	2·27	0·09	0·01

At this level of rounding the costs of options (iii) and (iv)—which cover only linked benefits paid at the same rate of category A retirement pension—are the same as (i) and (ii) respectively.

10 million people would be affected by raising the Category A, B, C and D Basic Retirements Pension by £5 for a single person and £3 for a Category BL Pension in 1991-92. 1·15 million benefit units would receive less Income Support as a result of this increase; 1·6 million benefit units would receive less housing benefit and 2·35 million benefit units would receive less Community Charge Benefit (some of these benefit units would receive less from both benefits). The numbers of people (benefit units for income related benefits) affected by the other options are as follows:

Table 3: Those at or above state pension age (millions)

	RP	IVB	WB	IS	HB	CCB
(a) Benefits linked to category A RP	10·00	0·25	0·05	1·15	1·65	2·40
(b) Linked benefit plus income related benefits increased too	10·00	0·25	0·05	—	—	—

Note: In option (a) those on IS, HB and CCB see reductions in their income related benefits when they receive the increase in their contributory benefit; this does not happen in option (b). At this level of rounding options (c) and (d)—which cover only linked benefits paid at the same rate of Category A Retirement Pension—the numbers are the same as (a) and (b) respectively.

Table 4 those below state pension age (millions)

	IVB	WB	IS	HB	CCB
(a) Benefits linked to category A RP	1·10	0·30	0·10	0·25	0·35
(b) Linked benefit plus income related benefits increased too	1·10	0·30	[1]0·15	[1]0·05	[1]0·00
(c) Linked benefits at same level as category A RP	1·10	0·20	0·10	0·15	0·30
(d) Linked benefits at same level as category A RP plus income related benefits increased too	1·10	0·20	[1]0·15	[1]0·15	[1]0·00

Notes:

In table (4) numbers shown on IS, HB or CCB as affected by the changes for options (a) and (c) are those who would not receive the full £5 or £8 per week due to reductions in income related benefits. Those cases marked with a [1] are those men aged 60 to 64 who gain from the increase in the pensioner premium for income related benefit of £5 and £8 per week.

Unemployment benefit and sickness benefit paid to those over state pension age are linked statutorily to the basic category A retirement pension but the numbers of people in receipt of these benefits are comparatively very small and are not included in these estimates.

RP is all categories of retirement pension.
IVB is invalidity benefit.
WB is widows benefit.
IS is income support.
HB is housing benefit.
CCB is community charge benefit.

Local Offices (Regrading)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals are being considered for the regrading of the D&S offices covering Cunninghame, North constituency.

Miss Widdecombe: Operational matters concerning Benefits Agency offices are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of extending receipt of invalid care allowance for a further eight weeks to carers after the death of their dependant; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimated cost would be £2·4 million in a full year.

Carers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of restoring the right to claim unemployment benefit for carers who have ceased to care; and whether he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of preserving entitlement to unemployment benefit for the estimated 2,600 former carers who seek work and who satisfied the contribution conditions prior to caring would be about £2 million in a full year.

Expenditure

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down the real increases or decreases at 1991 prices in expenditure for all benefits from 1979 to 1991 showing what amount and proportion is attributable to (a) a rise or fall in the real level of benefit, (b) a rise or fall in the numbers claiming benefits and (c) other factors.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Earnings and Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the level of national average earnings for each year since 1979, the level of supplementary benefit/income support for a single unemployed adult aged over 25 years for each of these years, and the percentage the latter represents of the former for each year.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures requested are in the following table.

The table lists supplementary benefits rates for a single householder aged 25 up to 1987. This rate is not however the one paid to all of the client group. Across all age groups, approximately 52 per cent. of single unemployed claimants were non-householders (May 1987 annual statistical inquiry). This group received a lower rate of benefit. Separate figures relating to the over-25 age group are not available.

It should be noted that in the period from April 1988 (when income support was introduced) to April 1991, the average weekly earnings of all adult males rose by 30 per cent.

A Date of uprating	B Benefit date	C Average weekly earnings	D Percentage of column B/column C
November 1979	18·30	114·10	16·0
November 1980	21·30	135·10	15·8
November 1981	23·25	149·50	15·6
November 1982	25·70	160·60	16·0
November 1983	26·80	175·30	15·3
November 1984	28·05	187·40	15·0
November 1985	29·50	199·50	14·8
July 1986	29·80	210·90	14·1
April 1987	30·40	224·00	13·6
April 1988	33·40	245·80	13·6
April 1989	34·90	269·50	12·9
April 1990	36·70	295·60	12·4
April 1991	39·65	318·90	12·4

Explanatory Notes:
Column A: Date of each uprating.
Column B: Supplementary benefit scale rate for a 25-year-old householder from 1979 to 1987. From April 1988, this is the income support rate for a single person aged 25 or over.
Column C: Average earnings of all adult males (Source: New Earnings Survey).
Column D: Percentage of the benefit rates (Column B) compared to the average weekly earnings (Column C).

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total expenditure over the last 12 months in benefits paid to unemployed persons to assist with mortgage repayments; and what is the total number of individuals who have claimed mortgage relief over this period.

Miss Widdecombe: Help with mortgage interest is given through income support. The estimated amount included in income support for unemployed persons for mortgage interest in 1990, the latest year for which information is available, is £207 million, paid to some 88,000 claimants.
Note: The estimates are rounded to the nearest £1 million and 1,000 claimants.
Source: Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry, May 1990.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he issues as to whether the inability to repay should take precedence over the crisis need when refusing a crisis loan.

Miss Widdecombe: No guidelines are necessary. The Secretary of State's directions require social fund officers to decide whether a crisis need exists before looking at the question of an applicant's ability to repay.

Poll Tax

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are his Department's estimates of the costs of deducting poll tax payments from benefits in each of the years 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

State Earnings-related Pensions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total cost to the national insurance fund in a full year in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93 of the 2 per cent. banded earnings offered as an incentive to opt out of SERPs, for Great Britain.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is contained in appendix 7 of the report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Uprating Order and the Social Security (Contributions) Rerating Order which was laid before the House on 4 December.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent consultations he has had concerning the operation of the advance warning system available to inform potential recipients of special cold weather payments that the temperature trigger points had been reached; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Regular consultations on the cold weather payments scheme take place between the Meteorological Office and the Department. The new elements of the scheme are being monitored particularly closely.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people will receive cold weather payments from the social fund following the recent spell of cold weather;

(2) how many people who would have been eligible for payment will not receive the £6 payment because the area of the country they lived in did not fully meet the temperature criteria of the scheme during the recent spell of cold weather.

Miss Widdecombe: Following the recent spell of cold weather 1,432,044 cold weather payments have been authorised out of an estimated total of 2,600,000 people, who would have been entitled to a payment if every area of the country had met the temperature criteria.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by United Kingdom standard region, and by Benefits Agency administrative division, the numbers of recipients of cold weather payments in the week commencing 9 December.

Miss Widdecombe: The following table sets out, by individual weather station, the number of cold weather payments authorised during the recent cold spell. The information is not held by Benefits Agency administrative division, and could be obtained in this form only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to waive the seven-day qualifying period for cold weather payments to ensure that all those eligible under the scheme receive a £6 payment.

Miss Widdecombe: Seven days of cold weather is a fair representation of a sustained period which is likely to lead to extra heating costs. We have no plans to reduce the qualifying period.

Over-80s

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to uprate the basic state pensions for people over the age of 80 years.

Miss Widdecombe: Basic state pensions for those over 80 will be uprated next April in line with prices. In addition, expenditure on income-related benefits for pensioners over 80 and for disabled low-income pensioners will be increased by £60 million in a full year over and above the normal uprating.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what earnings rule currently applies to unemployment benefit; and whether he plans any changes.

Mr. Scott: Unemployment benefit is not payable for any day on which earnings exceed £2, or for any week in which earnings exceed the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions (currently £52 a week).

The daily earnings rule does not apply to payments made to individuals for certain special purposes notably allowances paid to members of the Territorial Army, coastguards, lifeboatmen and part-time firemen. We intend shortly to consult the Social Security Advisory Committee on extending exemption to local authority councillors in respect of their basic and special responsibility allowances.

Pension Schemes (Fraud)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take to deal with the potential for fraud in pension schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 December 1991]: Safeguards already exist in trust law to protect the interests of members of occupational pension schemes. Trustees have a duty to act at all time in the interests of all the beneficiaries of the scheme in accordance with the trust deed.

In addition, the Government will bring forward, early next year, regulations to restrict to 5 per cent. the level of self-investment. Action is in hand to produce a booklet for pension fund trustees, setting out their role and legal responsibilities. Regulations extending the existing disclosure requirements to include information as to whether each trustee has received a copy of the booklet, will be introduced.

Benefits

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year cost of raising one-parent benefit and widowed mother's allowance by 32p, (i) for 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, (1) including increases in means-tested benefits and (2) without increases in means-tested benefits, in Great Britain.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full-year cost of raising one-parent benefit and widowed mother's allowance by (i) £0·34 and (ii) £0·36 for (1) 1991-92 and (2) 1992-93, (x) including increases in means-tested benefits, and (y) without increases in means-tested benefits, in Great Britain.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The cost of increasing these benefits by these amounts for each week in 1991-92 and 1992-93 is given in the table:

	£ million
	1991-92	1992-93
32 pence per week
(1) Including increases in income related benefits
One parent benefit	23	24
Widowed mother's allowance	1	1
(2) Excluding increases in income related benefits
One parent benefit	7	8
Widowed mother's allowance	1	1
34 pence per week
(1) Including increases in income related benefits
One parent benefit	24	25
Widowed mother's allowance	1	1
(2) Excluding increases in income related benefits
One parent benefit	8	8
Widowed mother's allowance	1	1
36 pence per week
(1) Including increases in income related benefits
One parent benefit	25	27
Widowed mother's allowance	1	1
(2) Excluding increases in income related benefits
One parent benefit	8	9
Widowed mother's allowance	1	1

Note:
The first year benefit cost is the same in this case as the full-year cost for 1991-92.

ENERGY

River Wyre Barrage

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to consult the farming community and environmental groups over the proposed barrage across the River Wyre in Lancashire when he considers the feasibility study of this project.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes. All interested parties will be consulted on the results of the preliminary feasibility study of a proposed barrage across the River Wyre.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the results of the feasibility study into the proposed barrage across the River Wyre in Lancashire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: A report on a preliminary feasibility study of a proposed barrage across the River Wyre has been received by my Department. This report is now being considered and will be published in due course.

Oil Drilling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on recent technological developments on long-reach horizontal drilling for oil; how many horizontal wells are currently operational off the coast of the United Kingdom; what information he has on future plans for horizontal wells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Most fields in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea have been developed with a proportion of the wells deviated to angles between 30 and 75 degrees from the vertical. Over the last three years improved understanding of the technical factors relevant to high angle drilling has enabled an increasing number of wells to be drilled into the productive areas of reservoirs at angles of up to 90 degrees. It is estimated that to date about 40 such wells, have been drilled or are currently drilling in the UKCS. Since, depending on circumstances, economic recovery from horizontal wells can be significantly higher than from conventional wells, I would expect the incidence of such drilling to increase in the future as knowledge and experience of the techniques involved improve further.

Dounreay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has yet received the report from Dr. Wyn Llewelyn into the disappearance of a quantity of enriched uranium at Dounreay; if the findings of his report will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A report on the investigation into the accountancy discrepancy at Dounreay has not been received by my Department. I will consider what information might be provided when I have received the report and have studied its findings.

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to table the statutory instruments necessary to implement aspects of the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Secretary of State has made the following statutory instruments under powers granted by the Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991:

The Coal Mining Subsidence Act 1991 (Commencement) Order 1991 (SI 1991/2508)

The Coal Mining Subsidence (Notices and Claims) Regulations 1991 (SI 1991/2509)

The Coal Mining Subsidence (Preventive Measures and Rates of Interest) Order 1991 (SI 1991/2510)

The commencement order brought the Act into force on 30 November 1991. The other two instruments also came into force on that date.

The Government have no plans to make any further instruments at present, but will keep the need for further instruments under review.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what discussions he has had with the director general of OFFER regarding his report on the distribution and transmission system performance in the electricity supply industries of England, Wales and Scotland 1990-91, the league table of relative interruptions per 100 customers included in it and the powers available to the director general to improve the performance of the poorest performing distribution companies;

(2) what consultations he has had with the director general of the Office of Electricity Regulation concerning the level of supply interruptions to electricity consumers in the South Wales Electricity company area; and what remedial actions have been proposed by the director general.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time and we discuss a range of issues.

We welcome the publication of information of the kind included in the director general's report on the reliability of the electricity supply industry's transmission and distribution systems. This is a good illustration of the openness of the new regulatory regime. The director general has already stated that he will consider this information carefully as part of the transmission and distribution price control reviews that he will be undertaking.

Caminus Energy Consultants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the director general of OFFER regarding the recent study commissioned by OFFER from Caminus Energy Consultants of Cambridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time and discuss issues of mutual interest. The investigation into pool prices is a matter for the director general.

Coal Mining Consortium

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the Coal Mining Consortium about its proposals to apply for all or part of a privatised coal industry and to enable employees in the industry to become shareholders.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I met representatives of the Mineworkers Consortium specifically to listen to their proposals concerning British Coal's Monktonhall colliery. We will be considering a number of options for the privatisation of the coal industry; however, no decisions will be taken on the form or timing of the sale until after the next general election.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the director general of the Office of Electricity Regulation concerning the impact on the promotion of competition in electricity generation in England and Wales of National Power's purchase of the Deeside power station project at Shotton, Clwyd from ASEA Brown Boveri; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director General of Electricity Supply from time to time and discuss issues of mutual interest. The implications of mergers in the electricity generating industry are a matter for the Office of Fair Trading in consultation with OFFER.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Fax Paper

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the supply of House of Commons fax paper to hon. Members.

Mr. MacGregor: The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee has previously concluded that the present range of stationery items held in the Serjeant at Arms Stores should not be extended beyond the primary function of supplying writing paper and envelopes identified by the crowned portcullis. Facsimile paper is not held in the stores.

Written Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish a table showing in descending order the 30 Members who tabled the most written questions in Session 1990-91, indicating how many were tabled.

Mr. MacGregor: The precise information requested, on questions tabled, is not available. The Members receiving the most answers to written questions, as recorded on the House of Commons Library's POLIS database, were as follows:

	Number of questions
1. The hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn)	928
2. The hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond)	646
3. The hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson)	593
4. The hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan)	560
5. The hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen)	527
6. The hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen)	465
7. The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell)	429
8. The hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe)	393
9. The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. S. Hughes)	384
10. The hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. D. Clark)	359
11. The hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Austin Mitchell)	353
12. The hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill)	345
13. The hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley)	339
14. The hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. B. Jones)	329
15. The hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. R. Davies)	314
16. The hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael)	301
17. The hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster)	275
18. The hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell)	242
19. The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood)	237
20. The hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett)	230
21. The hon. Member for Newham, North West (Mr. T. Banks)	218
22. The hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd)	216

		Number of questions
23.	The hon. Member for Newcastle Upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins)	216
24.	The hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman)	212
25.	The hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. John D. Taylor)	210
26.	The hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion)	209
27.	The hon. Member for Coventry, South East (Mr. Nellist)	205
28.	The hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden)	203
29.	The hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn)	197
30.	The hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle)	191

Disabled People (Access)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects work to begin on the installation of a chairlift on the staircase leading to the Grand Committee Room and the Jubilee Room to facilitate access for elderly and disabled people.

Mr. MacGregor: Work has already begun on the detailed planning required to install a stairlift on the staircase leading to the Grand Committee Room. I would expect the design work consultations and tendering to be complete by March 1992 allowing the contractor to begin by April.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Alton: To ask the Lord President of the Council when his office last scheduled a meeting with Viscount Brentford concerning Sunday trading; when he last met Viscount Brentford; when he next expects to meet Viscount Brentford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have had requests for meetings both from Lord Brentford in his capacity as chairman of the Keep Sunday Special Campaign and from the director of the Shopping Hours Reform Council. I have already made it clear that the Government see no prospect for legislation on Sunday trading in this Session of Parliament, and it would be inappropriate for me to enter into any discussions with either organisation as the issues are for my right hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Home Office. I therefore declined both requests at this stage.

Mrs. Eleanor Laing

Mr. Alton: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish a list of the previous employers of his special adviser, Mrs. Eleanor Laing.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows:

Lindsays W. S., solicitors
Herbert Smith and Co., solicitors
Lane and Partners, solicitors
George Wimpey PLC
Shopping Hours Reform Council

Palace of Westminster (Occupation)

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many rooms at the House of Commons and its outbuildings and how many square feet have been occupied by (a) media staff and (b) hon. Members over the last three years.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 December 1991]: Information in the form requested is not readily available.

However, work commissioned last year by the New Building Sub-Committee as part of its work to prepare the brief for phase II of the New Parliamentary Building indicates that Members occupy some 10,000 sq metres, the media about 1,500 sq metres. Further information is available in the Services Committee's Second Report 1990-91 "New Parliamentary Building (Phase II): The Initial Brief" (HC 551) memorandum 3.

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many security passes have been issued in each of the last three years for (a) members of staff at the House of Commons, (b) the media and (c) allied departments.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 17 December 1991]: I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Office Costs Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to receive the Top Salaries Review Body report on the office costs allowance.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 19 December 1991]: The conduct of the review is a matter for the Top Salaries Review Body, but I understand that it is proceeding according to the agreed timetable.

DEFENCE

Submarines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (a) what will be the cost, (b) when work will commence and (c) how long it will take, to correct a major design fault on the submarines HMS Upholder, HMS Unseen, HMS Ursula and HMS Unicorn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) on 13 December at column 590.

Simulated Attacks on Shipping

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the pre-flight briefing of the crew of the Tornado aircraft which crashed in the North sea on 16 August 1990 included plans for simulated attacks on shipping.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the specified minimum horizontal and vertical separation distances between an attacking aircraft and a target vessel doing simulated low-level attacks on civilian shipping targets of opportunity.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The specified minimum separation distance from civilian shipping for aircraft in low level flight over the sea is 250 ft both horizontally and vertically.

Weapons Exchange

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by year for the last four years, and for 1991 to date, the countries with which his Department has carried out weapons exchanges for testing purposes, showing in his answer (a) those that his Department have received from other countries and (b) those that his Department have sent to other countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: Such information is not held centrally and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost.

Buster Crabb

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the files and information on the Buster Crabb affair will be released for public scrutiny.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Any files and information held by the Ministry of Defence on the Buster Crabb affair will be considered for release at the appropriate time, under the criteria of the Public Records Acts of 1958 and 1967.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he proposes to investigate the claims for compensation made by the service men exposed to radiation during the Christmas Island tests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence will pay appropriate compensation whenever the Crown's legal liability is established. There is, however, no firm evidence to show that any ill-health suffered by those who attended the test was caused by their participation. This is supported by the last report on the subject by the National Radiological Protection Board—which continues to accumulate data and will produce a further report.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many special studies on (a) the safety in storage, (b) the safety in transport, (c) the safety in deployment and (d) the mechanics of dismantlement of nuclear weapons have been conducted by his Department since 1979; and what has been the respective cost of such studies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The safety of our nuclear weapons is under continuous review to ensure that stringent safety standards are maintained in all such areas. It is not possible to identify separately the costs of studies from the general costs of work on safety.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether United Kingdom citizens are permitted access (a) to board Polaris submarines, (b) to visit the Faslane royal naval base and (c) to the Trident nuclear submarine base under construction at Coulport; whether any foreign nationals of countries (i) which are NATO member states and (ii) which are outside NATO have been permitted to visit British nuclear submarines and bases during the past month; and what criteria are adopted to permit visits to such submarines and bases.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Visits by both United Kingdom and foreign non-entitled personnel to service units and establishments, including vists to nuclear submarines and their shore support facilities, are considered on a case by case basis. The only visit by non-NATO nationals to the Clyde submarine base, including a visit to an alongside Polaris submarine, in the last month was by General Lobov. The criterion by which requests for all visits is judged is whether such a visit will assist in meeting defence or foreign policy objectives.

M25 (Military Vehicle Breakdown)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the number of accidents caused by motorists rerouted from the M25 on 1 December as a result of the closure of the motorway because of the breakdown of a military transport vehicle.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Defence Equipment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide an approximate in-service date for (a) the GWS MOD 1 Sea Wolf vertical launch ship system/missile, (b) Sonar 2093, (c) the type 23 frigate command system, (d) the AS90 self-propelled howitzer, (e) the high-velocity missile, (f) the Rapier field standard C system, (g) the Trigat medium-range system, (h) the counter battery radar, (i) the European fighter aircraft, (j) the Blue Vixen radar and (k) the Harrier T10.

Mr. Alan Clark: Approximate in-service dates are as follows:

	Approximate in-service date
(a) GWS MOD 1 Sea Wolf vertical launch ship system/missile	In-service
(b) Sonar 2093	Early 1990s
(c) Type 23 frigate command system	Mid 1990s
(d) AS90 self-propelled howitzer	Early 1990s
(e) High-velocity missile	Early 1990s
(f) Rapier field standard C system	Mid-1990s
(g) TRIGAT medium-range system	Mid-1990s
(h) Counter battery radar	Late 1990s
(i) European fighter aircraft	Mid-1990s
(j) Blue Vixen radar	Early 1990s
(k) Harrier T10	Mid-1990s

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present estimated total cost of the procurement programme for (a) the GWS MOD 1 Sea Wolf vertical launch missile/ship system, (b) the Sonar 2093, (c) the Challenger improvement programme, (d) TOW thermal imaging, (e) the Rapier field standard C system, (f) the Trigat medium range system, (g) the Tornado GR1 mid-life update, (h) the RN EH 101 helicopter and (i) the Blue Vixen radar.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 28 November at column 648. The other figures requested are classified and commercially confidential apart from that for the Tornado GR1 mid-life update programme, where the estimated total procurement cost —at 1990-91 average outturn prices, not including in-service support costs—is £550 million.

Hydrographic Office

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the annual income generated by the Hydrographic Office through chart sales in each year since 1980; and what proportion are exports;

(2) what resources will be dedicated to the metrification of maritime charts within the Hydrographic Office;

(3) whether the metrification of maritime charts will be completed by 1999.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These are matters for the chief executive of the Hydrographic Office Defence Support Agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Walter Somers Ltd.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now state the dates on which the two telephone conversations between Walter Somers Ltd. and his Department's metallurgical expert took place; what was established by the conversations; what advice was provided by his Department's expert to Walter Somers Ltd.; and how the expert identified himself or herself to Walter Somers Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark: The telephone conversations took place on 16 and 22 June 1988. On the basis of the available information they established that the steel tubes which Walter Somers Ltd. proposed to export to Iraq were almost certainly pressure vessels of some kind whose function was unclear. No advice was provided to Walter Somers Ltd. by the Department's expert. At this distance in time it is not possible to say how the expert identified himself to Walter Somers Ltd. other than be name, though his normal practice was to indicate that he worked for the Ministry of Defence.

Resettlement

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service resettlement officers are currently in post; and what is the establishment level for service resettlement officers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

	Strength	Establishment
Royal Navy
Naval Resettlement Information Officers (civilian)	8	8
Education and Resettlement Officers[1]	27	27
Army
Senior Resettlement Advice Officers	7	7
Resettlement Advice Officers[2]	16	11
RAF
Professionally Qualified Education Officers [3]	86	86

Notes:

[1]Seven of these are at sea; in addition, every ship which does not have a full-time education and resettlement officer on its establishment appoints an officer to undertake these responsibilities on a part-time basis.

[2]In addition, 27 resettlement advice officers are deployed on a part-time basis.

[3]This figure relates to the number of RAF professionally qualified education officers who have resettlement as a significant element of their responsibilities.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment is made of the effectiveness of the current programmes of retraining and resettlement for service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The resettlement centres carry out regular surveys of personnel who have attended their courses, to try and establish the relevance to their subsequent employment of the training they have received. Some of the results were summarised in the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 29 November at columns 683-86.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have occurred to his resettlement policy for service personnel in the last 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It remains our policy to provide a comprehensive resettlement service and we are making provision to extend this service to cater for the increased numbers who will be leaving over the coming years. A temporary post of director general resettlement has been established within the Ministry of Defence to direct and coordinate this activity over the months ahead.

Service Accommodation

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) of 5 November, Official Report, column 96, how many houses are in the process of being sold; and what is the average length of time for which these houses have been empty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No later figures than those previously given are yet available for the total number of houses in the process of being sold. The average length of time these houses have been vacant could only be calculated at disproportionate cost.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much surplus service property will be made available to housing associations to give temporary help to service personnel in severe housing need;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 22 November, Official Report, column 355, if he will list each announcement made to date about the transfer of service married quarters to housing associations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Discussions with housing associations are continuing and announcements will be made in due course.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have purchased their homes through the services' discount scheme in each (a) year and (b) quarter since its inception.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the services discount scheme was introduced, the following numbers of service personnel have purchased their homes at a discount:

Financial year	Quarter 1	Quarter 2	Quarter 3	Quarter 4	Total
1984-85	—	—	—	—	153
1985-86	—	—	—	—	308
1986-87	—	—	—	—	438
1987-88	—	—	—	—	452
1988-89	—	—	—	—	562
1989-90	—	—	—	—	610
1990-91	200	247	138	141	726
[1]1991-92	124	158	—	—	282

[1] To 30 September 1991.

In addition, some 500 properties are in the process of being sold through the discount scheme.

Quarterly figures are available only from financial year 1990-91.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current backlog of anavoidable and essential repairs for service accommodation at Tidworth garrison.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The current backlog of maintenance for service accommodation at Tidworth garrison amounts to £8·7 million on unavoidable repairs and £2·3 million on essential repairs. An extensive modernisation programme is planned.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the location of those service properties that are currently being irregularly occupied.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Most service establishments throughout the United Kingom have some married quarters irregularly occupied, but the information is not held centrally.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the backlog of unavoidable and essential repairs for (a) single accommodation, (b) married quarters and (c) empty accommodation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 14 November at column 671.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian, (Mr. Home Robertson), Official Report, column 96, if he will publish the number and location of vacant married quarters that are awaiting (a) unavoidable and essential repairs and (b) urgent repairs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current expenditure to date on the work of the service housing task force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, expenditure on the work of the service housing task force, including staff costs, amounts to £173,500.

Auxiliary Oiler Replenishment Vessels

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many orders for (a) type 23 frigates and (b) auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels will be placed in the next 10 years; and in which years they will be ordered.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We hope to make an announcement on the outcome of the recent tender exercise for type 23 frigates early next year. We plan further orders of auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels, but no decisions have been taken on their size or timing. It is not our practice to disclose details about the longer-term internal planning assumptions for equipment orders.

Homelessness

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with local authorities regarding the acceptance by them of a certificate of impending discharge as evidence of impending homelessness.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The code of guidance on homelessness issued by the Department of Environment provides advice to local authorities on the acceptance of certificates of impending homelessness for service personnel who are shortly to leave the services. It is not normal practice to produce separate certification of impending discharge, but certification will be provided if it is requested by individual local authorities.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether officers and men discharged from the Army as a result of "Options for Change" outside the United Kingdom will be required to be responsible for the costs of their own furniture and movements expenses.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: When United Kingdom based service personnel and their families return from an overseas station on discharge they will do so at public expense. Their personal possessions will also be conveyed at public expense within the same limits as those returning on normal posting.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the final civilian establishment of his Department once the proposals contained in "Options for Change" have been fully implemented.

Mr. Alan Clark: By 1997, the number of United Kingdom-based and locally entered civilians will be about 134,000.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the differences in the terms of redundancy offered to civilians as a result of the implementation of "Options for Change" from those that are offered to officers and men of the Army.

Mr. Alan Clark: Redundancy payments to civil servants and military personnel are made under two quite separate arrangements, the principal civil service pension scheme and the armed forces pension scheme. With both schemes, the benefit varies according to pay and length of service.

The two schemes are different and, within each, different criteria apply. A direct comparison cannot, therefore, be made. The principal differences affecting benefits relate to the entitlement qualifications, the age at which pensions benefits come into payment and the relationship between benefits and earnings.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the costs of redundancy as a result of the reduction in the civilian establishment of his Department once the proposals contained in "Options for Change" are fully implemented.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is too early to say what the scale, and therefore the costs, of redundancy arising from our plans to reduce civilian numbers will be.

Rattan Cane Fenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reconsider his Department's decision to terminate on 13 January the contract under which the workshop at Cardiff Institute for the Blind has provided rattan cane fenders for the use of the Navy worldwide.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The current contract for the supply of rattan fenders will continue and action is in hand to let a replacement contract with the Cardiff Institute for the Blind.

Magnetic Treatment Facility, Faslane

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the magnetic treatment facility at Faslane has not been proceeded with; how much has been spent on it; and how degaussing will now be carried on.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 26 June at column 496. Work to define a more cost-effective solution to the requirement is under way. Approximately £15 million had been spent on the contract at the time of cancellation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Beer

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to implement section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985.

Mr. Leigh: I have fought hard in Europe to retain the traditional British pint. I want to ensure that a liquid pint is what consumers get, in full. My view on consumer protection is that people should get what they think they are getting and what they pay for.

In 1988 my Department made regulations on the measures to be used for serving beer with the aim of encouraging licensees to use the glass most appropriate to the type of beer they served and to help ensure a fair deal for the consumer. However, since then I have continued to receive reports from local authority trading standards departments showing that a significant proportion of the draught beer they have checked comprised considerably less than a pint of liquid beer. I have also received complaints from the public about this issue.

Accordingly, I now propose to implement section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985 which provides that, in ascertaining the quantity of beer or cider under the Act the gas comprised in any form shall be disregarded. I shall be consulting consumers, the trade and the enforcement authorities about a timetable for this. This should be cheering news for beer drinkers everywhere.

Swiss Research Policy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the speech delivered by Professor H. Ursprung to the Royal Society on 27 November on Swiss research policy.

Mr. Leigh: A copy of Professor Ursprung's speech on Swiss research policy delivered to the Royal Society in November this year has been placed in the departmental library and also in the Library of the House of Commons.

Japanese-owned Manufacturing

Sir Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of people employed in Japanese-owned manufacturing industry within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: From information available to my Department, based on announcements by the companies at the time of the investment, it is estimated that some 45,000 direct jobs have been created by Japanese manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom.

EC-EFTA Agreement

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provision has been made in the EC/EFTA agreement to establish the European economic area to provide grants and loans to (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) Greece, (c) Portugal and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Sainsbury: Under the terms of the European economic area agreement, EFTA would set up a fund to assist the development of Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, Greece, Portugal and specified regions of Spain. The fund would be managed by EFTA and comprise 500 mecu in grants over five years and an interest rate subsidy of 3 per cent. on 1·5 becu of loans to be repaid within 10 years.

Credit Marketing

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect he expects his proposals for new legislation on credit marketing to have on the housing market.

Mr. Leigh: People considering a mortgage would be given more information about the obligations involved and the consequences of not meeting those obligations.

House of Fraser

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 178, about the takeover of the House of Fraser, what steps he is taking to ensure that further relevant information is available.

Mr. Redwood: My officials are in touch with regulators.

Steel Production

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 113, what assessment he has made of the production performance at (a) Llanwern and (b) Ravenscraig before the closing of the hot strip facility.

Mr. Leigh: None. This is a matter for the board of British Steel.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 113, what is the average cost of production of an average tonne of steel at (a) Llanwern, (b) Teesside, (c) Dalzell and (d) Scunthorpe.

Mr. Leigh: This is a matter for the board of British Steel.

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest estimate of the size of the steel stockpiles in the United Kingdom in the last two years of (a) steel pipes, (b) heavy plate and (c) light plate; and what proportion of each stockpile was imported.

Mr. Leigh: Available information is shown in the following table. Comprehensive information about light and heavy plates, an the proportion of stocks imported, is not collected.

Iraq

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) of 12 December, Official Report, column 501, if he will set out (a) the end-use stated by Iraq for bismuth exports in 1981, 1982, 1983, 1985 and 1988, respectively, and (b) the reason for commercial confidentiality covering the sale of bismuth to Iraq in 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: End user information is required to be submitted to DTI only for licensable exports.

Information used to compile the Overseas Trade Statistics (OTS), is taken from Customs entries which importers, exporters or declarants on their behalf are required to render under sections 37 and 53 to 54 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. Under common law information compulsorily required may only be used for the purposes for which it was obtained.

Although the OTS does not provide names of importers or exporters, statistics for certain commodities may easily be attributed to specific traders by anyone knowledgeable in that market area; this is particularly a problem where the statistics are broken down by country of consignment or destination. In such circumstances the public release of information may give valuable commercial information to competitors. It is therefore treated in confidence.

Mahogany

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he will take to prevent the further importation of mahogany from the Philippines; and how many such imports there have been since 1988.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government attach importance to the sustainable management of tropical forests. Imports from the Philippines are subject to the same controls as imports from other countries.

Available statistics of imports since 1988 of mahogany from the Philippines are:

	m³	metric tonnes	£000
1988	980	566	252
1989	74	40	21
1990	308	131	126
[1]1991	18	12	7

[1] January to October.

Some other imports may have been accounted for under the residual codes within the SITC headings 247.52 and 248.5.

Cumbria Action Team

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the proportion of the budget of the north-west regional office spent on administrative costs for the Cumbria action team.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The Cumbria action team is involved in the co-ordination of a wide range of Government initiatives, most of which are administered either from Manchester or London. These are not costed on a geographical basis and are in addition to the direct administrative costs of the action team. This is an inter-departmental body, led by DTI and the costs fall across participating Departments. The DTI direct cost element represents about 2 per cent. of the total DTI-North West's running costs.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 18 December 1991]: My Department runs or supports 40 schemes which provide help or finance and for which small firms are eligible. Of these, some are exclusive to small firms whilst others are open to companies of all sizes.

Inward Missions	The host should be a group of United Kingdom companies who represent their industry.	Subsidy—Travel to the United Kingdom (50 per cent. or 75 per cent.), travel in the United Kingdom 50 per cent., interpreters 50 per cent., accommodation and a reception 50 per cent.
Consultancy Help
Consultancy Help	Firms with fewer than 500 employees.	A free business review and up to 15 days subsidised consultancy. DTI pays 50 per cent., or two thirds is Assisted Areas and Urban Programme Areas.
Enterprise and Education
Teaching Company Scheme	All companies, no restrictions on size.	TCS helps to stimulate collaboration between industry, academia, provides industry based graduate training and facilitates technology transfer. Companies contribute between 30 per cent. and 75 per cent. of direct costs depending on size, with public sector funding making up the balance.
Inner Cities
Task Force Development Fund (TFDF)	Firms should be within a task force area and have up to 25 employees; funding is on a "last resort" basis.	Grants of up to £4,000 and loans of up to £10,000. £1·1 million levered in from private sector.

Bus Building Industry

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration he is giving to promote assistance to the British bus building industry.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 December 1991]: The British bus building industry has, in common with manufacturing industry in general, been hit by the world economic climate. It has suffered from excess capacity and is currently undergoing a period of restructuring.

We have recently been in close contact with the main company in this field but have not been asked for and are not considering any direct assistance. The Government are continuing their policy of creating the right conditions for business and investment as we believe that this yields greater and longer lasting benefits.

"The Two-edged Sword"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the transcript and a video cassette of the programme, "The Two-edged Sword", on international arms trading, broadcast on BBC2 on 13 December.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 December 1991]: No.

TRANSPORT

Mobility Allowance

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reply to letters from the hon. Member for Harborough of 15 March 1991 and 30 September 1991, forwarded to him by the Department of Social Security, about the concern of the hon. Member's disabled constituent of Northleigh grove, Market Harborough, about the effect of vehicle excise duty changes on mobility allowance.

Mr. Chope: I received a letter from my hon. Friend, dated 5 March 1991, in which he raised a question on behalf of his disabled constituent about the effect that abolition of vehicle excise duty (VED) would have on disabled people who are currently exempt from paying this duty. I replied to that letter of 15 April 1991. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of my earlier reply.

Railways (Noise)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake to examine the feasibility of introducing thresholds on noise levels for new railways.

Mr. Freeman: We plan to draw up noise insulation regulations for new railway lines. I gave details of our proposals in my answer to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 28 November at column 577 about the recommendations of the Mitchell committee.

Diesel Fumes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements exist to monitor the exhaust emission levels from diesel vehicles in general and London taxi-cabs in particular; and what further checks he proposes to control the exhaust emissions from diesel engines.

Mr. Chope: Large diesel-powered vehicles are inspected annually and at roadside checks for the cleanliness of their exhaust emission by the Department's vehicle inspectorate. This is at present a subjective assessment of the level of smoke emitted. Testing using smoke measuring instruments will be introduced in 1992.

Taxis are subject to a roadworthiness test after one year from new. Taxis are usually submitted not to an annual MoT roadworthiness certificate but to an alternative test, conducted by the licensing authority, which is generally more stringent than the MoT test.

The licensing authority, which for taxis in London is the Public Carriage Office, has the power to carry out spot checks on a taxi at any time during the licensed year and can prohibit use of the vehicle until faults, which may include excessive smoke, are rectified. The Public Carriage Office is also currently liaising with Westminster council to set up a complaints hot-line for, among other vehicles, taxis which smoke excessively.

For the future, studies are under way to determine the extent to which smoke measuring instruments can be adapted or modified for use on diesel-powered cars, taxis and light vans.

Road Improvements, East Sussex

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have been undertaken between his Department and East Sussex county council on the proposed improvements to the A26 at Beddington Itford Farm and to the A27 from Lewes to Polegate.

Mr. Chope: East Sussex county council is being consulted as part of the current public consultation on both these schemes. County, district and parish councillors were invited to a presentation about the schemes at a preview of the consultations exhibition.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the impending decision on the alignment to the proposed A27 Polegate bypass.

Mr. Chope: A small number of objections and representations have been received following publication of draft orders under the Highways Act for the A27 Polegate bypass. They are currently being assessed. The objection period ends on 29 February.

Motorways

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the proposed southern and western motorway and the proposed slip road linking it with the A59; what consultations he has had with Lancashire county council on the proposals; and what environmental matters he has taken into consideration in planning the motorway alignment.

Mr. Chope: Several hundred representations have been received so far. Consultations with Lancashire county council have taken place throughout the development of the scheme and are continuing. In proposing a route for consultation full account has been taken of all environmental matters including the effects on people and property and on special landscape areas.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will examine the feasibility of introducing a maximum speed limit for heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Chope: Vehicle speed limits are already contained in the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The speed limit for goods vehicles over 7·5 tonnes gross weight is 60 mph on motorways, 50 mph on dual carriageways and 40 mph on other roads, subject to any lower road speed limits.

Lorry and Bus Speeds

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason Her Majesty's Government agreed to the directive on Euro speed limits for lorries and buses on 16 December; and if he will make a statement outlining the costs of the proposal and the benefits which will stem from it.

Mr. Chope: Commission proposal 8046/91 was subject to qualified majority voting and the United Kingdom was the only member state opposed to the inclusion of set speeds in the directive. The Government support the principle that speed limiters should be fitted to lorries and coaches. Moreover, the directive will be of benefit to the United Kingdom because, for the future, EC-registered vehicles, as well as those which are subject to the national construction and use regulations, will have to be fitted with limiters. The restrictions on speed will add to gross operating costs but there will be savings in fuel to set against these.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason Her Majesty's Government agreed to the directive on Euro speed limits for lorries and buses being considered as a majority voting measure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The proposal for a directive on the fitment of speed limiters including speeds at which the limiters must be set was presented under article 75 of the European treaty as a measure in pursuance of a common transport policy. Voting under this article is required to be by qualified majority.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any exemptions in any member state from the restrictions on speed limits for lorries and buses agreed in the Council on 16 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The proposed directive on the fitment of speed limiters will not provide any exemptions to permit member states to set limiters above the prescribed speeds.

Midland Metro

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Midland metro.

Mr. Freeman: I announced in October that development funding of £1·5 million was being made available for further work to be done on the project. I have now decided that extra resources, in addition to this sum, should be provided in 1992-93 so that more preparatory work can be carried out. Full funding will be considered in due course.

Rail Electrification (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the West Yorkshire electrification project.

Mr. Freeman: The passenger transport authority has now informed me that the rolling-stock will as agreed be acquired through an operating lease. I welcome this, and we are allocating credit approvals to allow work to begin as soon as possible on the infrastructure for the project.

Transport Council

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the meeting of the European Transport Council on 16 and 17 December.

Mr. Rifkind: The meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers was held in Brussels on the 16 and 17 December. Due to the incident on the morning of the 16 December at Clapham Junction, which resulted in serious and regrettable delay to British Rail services, I was unable to attend the Council. Officials represented the United Kingdom on both days.

The Council agreed in principle that speed limiters should be fitted to heavy goods vehicles and coaches throughout the Community. The requirement will apply to all new vehicles registered after 1 January 1994. Existing vehicles registered after 1 January 1988 will have to have limiters fitted by 1 January 1995 where they are used in international transport, and by 1 January 1996 where they are used exclusively on domestic journeys. The Council also agreed that limiters should be set so as to restrict the road speed of HGVs to 90 kph (56 mph), and that limiters on coaches should be set at 100 kph (62 mph). In addition, there will be restrictions on who can fit and set limiters in order to safeguard against incorrect calibration and tampering.

The Council took note of the Commission's interim report on road safety and requested the Commission to produce a final report by May 1992, including consideration of the establishment of a standing advisory committee on road safety.

Agreement was reached on the definition of technical equivalence to road friendly (air) suspension with a firm commitment to take forward the proposal on maximum authorised drive axle weights.

The Council reached agreement in principle on proposals for an EC road hauliers licence. These would be put before the next Transport Council for adoption subject to receipt of the European Parliament's opinion.

The Council made progress towards Community rules for the single market on international road passenger transport, paving the way for further simplification of the procedures and for abolition for all authorisations as the next step.

A resolution was agreed on transport and disabled people. The Commission have agreed to submit a report by September 1992.

The Commission introduced a paper on transport infrastructure networks which would take account of the Maastricht agreement on networks and the cohesion fund. The Council also reached agreement on its resolution on research and development under the fourth framework programme, with a Council declaration that transport research be "taken into account in a coherent way".

The Council noted the presidency's report and agreed to ask the Economic and Financial Council to continue to examine fiscal harmonisation in the road haulage sector.

The Council agreed a regulation to liberalise inland waterway cabotage.

On aviation matters, a directive phasing out the operation of older, noisier aircraft between 1995 and 2002 was agreed in principle, subject to further examination of the annex listing certain aircraft from developing countries eligible for exemptions until 2002. The Council had a useful first debate on the third aviation package, agreeing with the main principles and scope of the Commission's proposals whilst noting that more work was needed on the details, particularly as to how and when cabotage and 'seventh freedom' services should be introduced.

On maritime issues, the Council agreed a regulation enabling the Commission to work up a detailed block exemption from the competition rules of the treaty for shipping consortia. The Council also agreed a decision on radionavigation systems. No final decisions were reached on the liberalisation of shipping cabotage but there was general support for the phased approach by the presidency and the proposal was remitted to the Portuguese presidency for further discussion.

Public Transport, London

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to make public transport in London more affordable to travellers.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1984, real fare increases for London Transport have averaged 2½ per cent. per year, somewhat less than London earnings have risen, which means that public transport in London is that much more affordable. In its response to the MMC report on London Underground, the Government made it clear that they did not see a case for much steeper real fare increases than those in the past six years.

River Policing

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he is making for the specialist policing at riverside wharves, jetties, piers, depots, warehouses and other marine installations on the River Thames within the port of London, but not within the designated port of Tilbury.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. The places mentioned by the hon. Member are, and will continue to be, policed by the Thames division of the Metropolitan police if they are within the Metropolitan police area or, if they are outside it, by the appropriate county force.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the future policing of the port of Tilbury; and if he will place copies of such representations and his respective responses in the Library.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received representations from my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor), who is parliamentary spokesman for the PLA Police Federation, and from the chairman of the federation itself. In addition, hon. Members have forwarded to me letters from 15 members or former members of the PLA police force.

Rail Coaches

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the longitudinal crushing strength of the pacer, sprinter, type 144, HST and 225 type coaches in use on British Railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The longitudinal loads specified for mainline and multiple unit coaches at various heights above rail level are set out in the table. All new design of body shell are tested to verify their performance before entering service.

Height	Load (tonnes)
	Mainline[1] coaches	Multiple[2] units
Buffer-coupler height	200	150
Waist height (below windows)	30	30
Cant height (join between body sides and roof)	30	30

[1] Includes HST (Mark III) and 225 (Mark IV) coaches.
[2] Includes Pacers (including Class 144) and Sprinters.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of (a) the electrification of the railway between Edinburgh and London, including costs of locomotives and rolling stock and (b) the electrification of the railway between Glasgow and Euston at constant prices, including costs of locomotives and rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport regarding the overhead catenary on (a) the east coast route into King's Cross and (b) the west coast route into Euston, if he will list (i) the diameter of the copper traction current wire, (ii) the weight of the type of pillar and arm supporting the wire in both systems and (iii) the reliability of the locomotives on each system in failures per 10,000 miles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not hold the information requested. Operational details are matters for British Rail.

East Coast Line

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information the Health and Safety Executive has on the problems being experienced with signal failures on the east coast railway route between Leeds and London.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from BR that signals have been thrown to red, and other equipment has been disabled, as a result of serious problems of vandalism on the east coast main line in recent weeks. Such incidents were not reportable to the Health and Safety Executive since they did not involve a safety risk.

Road Pricing Schemes

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the introduction of road pricing schemes in order to reduce traffic levels in city centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Last year my right hon. and learned friend announced a wide ranging study into urban congestion, its causes and cures including a specific research programme into the potential for road pricing in London. On 24 October he announced the appointment of Programme Consultants for the London programme and work started on 2 November. It will take about two and a half years. Outside London it is for local highway authorities to consider. Cambridge is developing specific proposals, and others, such as Edinburgh and Oxford, are examining the general implications. My Department and the Scottish Office are keeping in touch with these studies. My right hon. and learned Friend made it clear in his original announcement that the Government have an open mind on the desirability of urban road pricing and will await the results of the research before making a decision.

Port of London Authority Police

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Port of London Police Federation about reviewing his proposals to privatise the Port of London Authority police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The federation has expressed to me its concern about the proposed transfer of the PLA police force to the company set up for the port of Tilbury under section 21 of the Ports Act 1991. I have considered their representations very carefully but remain of the view that the transfer of the PLA police to the Tilbury Company is in the best interests of the PLA, of the future owners of the port of Tilbury and of the PLA police alike.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what employment and pension protection has been afforded to police officers serving in the Port of London Police Authority who are nearing retirement age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The provisions of paragraph 10 of schedule 2 to the Ports Act 1991 make it clear that the transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 will apply to the whole of the PLA's undertaking which is to be transferred to the new Tilbury Company. The effect of these regulations will be to protect at the time of transfer the employment contracts of all PLA employees who transfer, including police officers.

The pension rights of those employees who transfer and as a result cease to belong to the PLA pension fund will be protected by the PLA's scheme of transfer for the Tilbury undertaking, as required by section 23(2) of the Act.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions or guidance he has given to prevent elected officers of the Port of London Police Authority from making their views known on the proposals for privatising the police authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have issued no guidance.

127-129 Fillebrook Road, Leytonstone

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the decision was made to demolish Nos. 127 and 129 Fillebrook road, Leytonstone, rather than secure them for safe occupation; who was consulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The decision was taken on grounds of public safety: these properties became dangerous after thieves rendered them structurally unsound by systematically removing the bricks over large parts of their rear facades. The decision was endorsed by an officer of the building control department of the London borough of Waltham Forest. Adjoining landowners, including London Underground Ltd., were also consulted.

Car Safety

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide information by make and model of new cars which have any of the following features designed along the lines of the United Kingdom proposals currently under discussion in the European Community (a) safer steering wheels, (b) front end protection for pedestrians and (c) side impact protection.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not available.

Proposals for safer steering wheels, frontal protection for pedestrians and side impact protection are currently under discussion in the European Community with strong support from the United Kingdom. These features do not, however, form part of the United Kingdom national type approval scheme for motor vehicles and are therefore not checked and recorded by make and model as part of that process.

Pollution and Congestion, London

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to reduce air pollution in London caused by motor vehicles.

Mr. Chope: From 31 December 1992, we shall require new standards to be met by all cars and light goods vehicles, both petrol and diesel-engined. New requirements for diesel emissions will also apply to heavy duty trucks and buses from 1 October 1993, with further reductions from 1 October 1996. So far as London in particular is concerned, record sums are already being invested in public transport to improve the quality of choice for those who might otherwise use private motor cars. Traffic management projects, such as red routes, are intended to enable traffic to flow more smoothly, and thus give off less emissions than when moving in a "stop-start" manner. The pilot red route scheme in north London has already demonstrated the success of this strategy.

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whart measures he intends to take to relieve traffic congestion in London.

Mr. Chope: The Government have several initiatives designed to tackle urban road congestion, a principal one of which is to continue to make public transport more attractive, reliable and efficient.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce the concentration of private traffic on London's roads.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 December 1991]: The Government have several initiatives designed to tackle urban road congestion, a principal one of which is to continue to make public transport more attractive, reliable and efficient.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made concerning the further development and adoption nationally of a car secondary safety rating system, to improve consumer information about the relative crashworthiness merits of new cars through technical inspection and impact testing methods.

Mr. Chope: We are currently developing the methodology used in producing the statistics in the publication "Car and Driver: Injury Accident and Casualty Rates Great Britain". The information in the next edition will be further refined to try to isolate secondary safety; if this is successful it could be used as a measure of the secondary safety of cars. In addition we are co-operating with the Consumers Association in the further development of its secondary safety rating system to include some destructive testing.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies which have received funding from the Scottish Development Agency have become insolvent.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information readily available from the records of the former Scottish Development Agency is limited to cases where funding was provided in the form of investment assistance. It is available for cases where the amount provided exceeded £50,000 in the years before 1986-87; but is available for all cases for the financial years 1986-87 to 1990-91. On that basis, the number of companies is 1,028, of which 176 are known to have gone into receivership or liquidation, or to have suffered sequestration.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums he is making available for research into the effect farmed salmon escapees are having on nature stocks in the present and next three financial years; and if he will list the projects and establishments on which the money is being expended.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the current financial year, 1991-92, the Department expects to spend about £210,000, at full economic cost, on studies of the genetic component of population structure and genetic variation in performance of farmed and wild salmon. The work will continue, but detailed plans, or costs, for 1992-93 and later financial years have not yet been finalised.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the source of the brood fish used in the production of farmed salmon in Scotland; what research he has carried out into the genetic differences between them and the salmon in Scottish rivers; and what information he has on how many brood fish came from each source in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the numbers of sources of broodstock used by salmon farmers is not obtained or collected centrally.

Studies on the genetic constitution of farmed fish compared with wild salmon have been undertaken by scientists of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department over the past three years. The findings have been published in specialist papers. Copies of Scottish fisheries working paper No. 4/89 and Scottish fisheries research report 42, published by the Department, have been placed in the Library. The most recent findings have been published this year in the specialist journal "Aquaculture", Vol. 98 Nos. 1-3.

Harbours (Accounts)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region, the statutory harbour undertakings which are required by section 42(2)(b) of the Harbours Act 1964 to send him a copy of their annual accounts, stating in each case the names of the harbour or harbours covered by the undertaking, and the financial year for which accounts were most recently submitted.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All statutory undertakings which fall within the responsibility of the Scottish Office are excluded from the need to submit annual accounts to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by virtue of section 42(11)(b) of the Harbours Act 1964, as amended by schedule 6 to the Transport Act 1981. Details of statutory harbour undertakings in Scotland which are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be provided separately by him.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of (a) hospital beds and (b) acute beds for each health board and the total for Scotland in each year since 1979, and the percentage change from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of all NHS hospital beds in Scotland and those beds used for acute specialities, for Scotland and for each health board in Scotland for the years ending 31 March 1979 to 1991 are shown in the table.

The table shows information on the average available staffed beds and indicates the number of beds which are staffed and are available for the reception of inpatients and day cases. Borrowed and temporary beds are included.

The acute specialty group comprises the following main specialty classifications: general surgery, orthopaedic surgery, ENT surgery, ophthalmology, urology, orthodontics and paediatric dentistry, oral surgery and medicine, restorative dentistry, general medicine, dermatology, rehabilitation medicine, respiratory medicine, surgical paediatrics medical paediatrics, gynaecology, GP acute, acute mixed and other acute.

The acute specialty group does not include those specialty classifications attributed to the supra-area specialty group, ie specialties: neurosurgery, cardiothoracic surgery, plastic surgery, neurology, radiotherapy and spinal paralysis.

Average available staffed beds in NHS hospitals in Scotland for all and acute specialties: by health board: years ending 31 March 1979—1991

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend's Department runs or supports seven schemes providing help or finance for small firms. These are:

Managing Into the 90s[1]
Export Market Research Scheme[1]
Regional Enterprise Grant for Investment
Regional Enterprise Grant for Innovation
Regional Office Technology Transfer Programme[1]
Small Firms Merit Award For Research and Technology (SMART)[1]
Support for Products Under Research (SPUR)[1]

[1] Administered by Scottish Office Industry Department but funded by DTI

In addition small firms also benefit from more generally available schemes run by my Department, including regional selective assistance and the full range of schemes operated by Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies are also available to assist small firms development. Some of these are aimed specifically or primarily at small firms. The local enterprise companies and other agencies also have flexibility to develop their own schemes designed to meet the particular needs of enterprises, including small firms, in their area.

Marine Fish Farms

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will issue for consultation guidance on the location of marine fish farms in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My Department issued today a draft of this guidance which seeks to clarify policy and to balance concern for environment with a sustainable future for marine fish farming. It is being issued for consultation to a wide range of interested parties in Scotland and comments are invited by mid February. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. I look forward to considering all the comments received once the consultation period is completed.

Gifts in Lieu of Inheritance Tax

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any works of art accepted in lieu of inheritance tax have been allocated since he last made an announcement.

Mr. Lang: I am particularly pleased to announce that I am allocating the following pre-eminent works of art accepted in lieu of inheritance tax to the Royal Scottish Academy, Edinburgh, on permanent loan.

Items	Amount of tax satisfied
Portrait of Selina Thistlethwayte by Thomas Gainsbourgh Portrait of Robert Thistlethwayte of Norman Court by Thomas Gainsbourgh Portrait of Pierre Pecquius by Sir Peter Paul Rubens View of Wageningen by Hercules Seghers	£6,650,000

The Royal Scottish Academy is making arrangements for a short exhibition of the paintings in the Academy building early in 1992. I have agreed that they will then go on loan to the Aberdeen art gallery while preparations are made for their permanent display at the Royal Scottish Academy.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the figures for each region in Scotland for each year since 1988 of (a) the number of serious irregularities of the set-aside scheme, (b) the number of minor breaches of the scheme and (c) the number of cases where payments were withheld in full or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 December 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Full information in respect of the 1990-91 set-aside year is not yet avilable, as claims are still being checked and processed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers have received payment under the set-aside scheme, for each year since 1988, in each region in Scotland for (a) horse-based activities, (b) golf courses, (c) game cover for commercial shoots, (d) sports grounds, (e) other recreational facilities and (f) other; and if he will make a statement.

Scottish Arts Council

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals for a supplementary financial allocation to the Scottish Arts Council and Edinburgh district council in order to allow the meeting of the Council of Ministers in Edinburh to be marked by a range of cultural events; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 12 December 1991]: I have no such proposals. These and other bodies may however be eligible to receive limited support for particular projects from funds set aside to promote events associated with the United Kingdom's presidency of the Community. I hope that a wide range of cultural events will be included in the celebrations of Edinburgh's prominent role as the city which is to host the meeting of the European Council of Ministers in December 1992. My officials will be meeting representatives of relevant Scottish organisations early in the new year for further discussions on the part which these organisations intend to play.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 13 January 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Court

Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor intends to amend or clarify the law in order to ensure that the intentions of the House of Commons are not frustrated by courts imposing requirements which are contingent on the outcome of an unresolved appeal to the European Court.

The Attorney-General: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Kirklees Borough Council v Wickes Building Supplies Ltd in which it was held that the council was required to give a cross-undertaking in damages when seeking, by means of an interlocutory injunction, to enforce the Shops Act 1950. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on this decision because it is shortly to be appealed to the House of Lords.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek an early date for the hearing in the European Court of Justice on the alleged conflict between article 30 of the treaty of Rome and United Kingdom legislation on Sunday trading.

The Attorney-General: The United Kingdom has asked the European Court of Justice for an early date for the hearing of this issue.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his statement of 27 November, Official Report, column 918, if he will seek clarification from the European Court on the obscure reference in its decision in the Torfaen case, to which he referred, and in particular of those comments which have been interpreted as implying a conflict between United Kingdom Sunday trading legislation and article 30 of the treaty of Rome.

The Attorney-General: In two current cases on Sunday trading the United Kingdom has submitted observations to the European Court of Justice which discuss the effect of previous decisions of the court.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the European Court of Justice to reach a decision on Sunday trading; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The European Court of Justice has not yet fixed a date for the hearing of the references by English courts, but the United Kingdom has asked for an early hearing.

CIVIL SERVICE

Job Satisfaction

41. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what recent representations he has received from civil service unions on job satisfaction.

Mr. Renton: I meet civil service unions from time to time to discuss a variety of issues. It is the job of managers in departments and agencies to achieve our aim of having an efficient, effective and well-motivated civil service.

Fair Employment

42. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will commission research to update the Race Relations Employment Advisory Service report into how to identify and overcome barriers to fair employment across the civil service.

Mr. Renton: That report focused on the Department of Employment group. Similar recommendations were incorporated into the civil service programme for action on race, launched in 1990. Last month my department published the first progress report. It showed that departments and agencies have made a good start. The Government are determined to see further progress in this area.

THE ARTS

Music Training

31. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will visit Wales to discuss music training.

Mr. Renton: I visited Wales in May and October last year, and shall be visiting the Principality again on 21 February to attend a performance by Welsh National Opera of "Pelleas and Melisande". Musical training in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales; but I should be pleased to discuss any matters falling within my own remit.

Theatre Visits

35. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to visit the northern region to visit theatres.

Mr. Renton: I visited the northern region twice last year, and I hope to do so again soon. I will be happy to consider invitations to theatres in the region as part of that visit.

Artistic Heritage

38. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about his proposals to retain the country's artistic heritage in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: I have received a number of representations on the approach suggested by the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art and on the other option which I floated as an alternative. I look forward to receiving further representations by the end of March.

Business Sponsorship

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement about business sponsorship of the arts.

Mr. Renton: Business sponsorship of the arts is holding up extremely well. Last year £44·5 million was attracted. I have now increased the budget for the business sponsorship incentive scheme, by £1 million, to £4·5 million from 1992-93, to sustain the growth of sponsorship which makes a vital contribution to the well-being of the arts in this country.

ENVIRONMENT

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce a system of independent and objective evaluation of competitive tenders for the provision of local authority services, in cases where private sector agencies are in competition with direct labour organisations.

Mr. Portillo: We have no proposals to remove the responsibility for tender evaluation from local authorities. Our approach is set out in the consultation document "Competing for Quality—Competition in the provision of local services", published on 5 November. We expect our proposals to result in a clearer and fairer framework for compulsory competitive tendering.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Heseltine: The following quality of service performance indicators have been adopted in each of my executive agencies. Unless otherwise specified, they have been adopted since the establishment of the agency.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre: The key quality of service performance indicators are customer ratings of service in each functional area. These are measured by means of a detailed questionnaire presentation, catering facilities, overall value for money and the client's willingness to use the Centre again.

Historic Royal Palaces Agency: The key quality of service performance indicators are visitors' ratings for enjoyment, value for money, and helpfulness of staff, which are measured by regular surveys of customer satisfaction. The customer survey programme started in 1988, one year ahead of Agency status.

Building Research Establishment: The current quality of service indicators are fulfilment of customer commissions (monitored by a sample survey); adherence to timescales for delivery of contracted outputs; and adherence to customer budgets.

Ordnance Survey[1]: The key quality of service performance indicators are to publish on microfilm within three months, each large scale map meeting the criteria and specification for reproduction, and to despatch within seven working days (including the day the order is received) 90 per cent. of orders for 1:50,000 folded maps. The first indicator was tightened from four to three months after the first year of the Agency's operation.

The Buying Agency: This agency was launched on 31 October 1991. Performance indicators have yet to be agreed, and are expected to cover comparative prices for key product and service ranges, response and delivery times, and complaints.

[1] The Ordnance Survey is a separate Government Department

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is as follows.

Agency	Subject	University
Historic Royal Palaces Agency	Law	London
Building Research Establishment	Natural Science Tripos	Cambridge
Ordnance Survey[1]	Technology	Brunel
The Buying Agency	Geography with Geology	Bristol

[1] The Ordnance Survey is a separate Government Department for which I have ministerial responsibility.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies was established; and how many staff are in post now in each case.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is as follows:

Agency	In post at launch	In post on 1 December 1991
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre	64·0	65
Historic Royal Palaces Agency	344·0	372
Building Research Establishment	684·5	707
Ordnance Survey[1]	2,518·0	2,373
The Buying Agency	115·0	115

[1] The Ordnance Survey is a separate Government Department for which I have ministerial responsibility.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is as follows:

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre—since the Centre had already been successfully launched as a commercial organisation for nearly 3 years before it became an Executive Agency there was no special launch.

Historic Royal Palaces Agency—was launched with a press conference and a modest event for staff at each Palace. The Department contributed £366 and the Agency £150.

Building Research Establishment—the Agency bore the total cost of £7,000.

Ordnance Survey[1]—the Agency bore the cost from its running cost provision and did not exceed £5,000.

The Buying Agency—the Agency bore the total cost of £25,000.

[1] The Ordnance Survey is a separate Government Department for which I am responsible.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related elements, in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above, since their establishment.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is as follows:

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre—one appointment at Grade 7 level.

Historic Royal Palaces Agency—apart from the Chief Executive, three at Grades 5/6 and two appointments at Grade 7.

Building Research Establishment—five appointments at Grade 7.

Ordnance Survey[1]—apart from the Chief Executive, one appointment at Grade 6.

The Buying Agency—none.

The salaries including performance elements of each appointment in each executive agency are appropriate to the relevant civil service grade.

[1] The Ordnance Survey is a separate Government Department for which I am responsible.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in each of his Department's executive agencies.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those new facilities for staff nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and provide a breakdown by grade of the number of staff taking up each new working pattern for each new agency.

Mr. Heseltine: These are matters for which each chief executive has day-to-day management responsibility. I am therefore asking each chief executive—including that of the Ordnance Survey, which is a separate Government Department for which I have ministerial responsibility—to write to the hon. Member. A copy of their letters will be placed in the Library.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is as follows:

Agency	Maximum salary £	Length of contract Years
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre	55,490	[2]5
Historic Royal Palaces Agency	59,000	5
Building Research Establishment	57,300	5
Ordnance Survey[1]	55,700	3
The Buying Agency	56,300	3

[1] The Ordnance Survey is a separate Government Department for which I have ministerial responsibility.
[2] Extended to just over 7 years.

Property Services Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total amounts unpaid by the Property Services Agency to contractors for work completed which remain outstanding for periods in excess of (a) two years, (b) three years, (c) four years and (d) five years.

Mr. Yeo: PSA Services' policy is to make payment promptly as soon as this is due under the terms of the contract; payment will normally be made within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice.

Final accounts on major projects often contain claims by contractors for additional costs claimed to be outside the contractor's control. Substantiating these claims can be a slow process. Interim payments are made as sums are justified, but overall the average settlement figure is only 20 per cent. of the original amount claimed. Because of the complex nature of contractors' claims it is not possible to say with any accuracy how much will eventually be paid to contractors for claims currently being discussed and negotiated.

Business Rates, Southend

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost for an appeal against business rate valuations in Southend.

Mr. Heseltine: In England the average cost in 1990-91 to the Inland Revenue Valuation Office of handling proposals by ratepayers to alter rating lists is estimated at approximately £230. Separate figures for Southend are not available.

The average cost to the Essex valuation and community charge tribunals—VCCT—of dealing with all types of appeal is estimated at approximately £100 per appeal cleared in 1990-91.

These costs are not, of course, borne by the appellant, though in the case of appeals beyond the VCCT to the Lands Tribunal costs may be awarded.

Indonesia

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department first contacted the director general of the Forestry Protection and Nature Conservation Authority in Indonesia requesting information on CITES annex C2 species; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have had no direct contact with the Indonesian authorities. I understand that the European Commission wrote to them in 1987, and again in 1988, 1990 and, most recently, on 2 December this year. Officials from the Commission and the CITES secretariat have also discussed wildlife issues with the Indonesian authorities.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of appeals for opencast sites his Department has granted since 1980 to British Coal and private companies, the names of the companies, and the location of the sites.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is available only in respect of decisions issued since 1 April 1987. The Department's records show that the number of planning appeals granted for opencast sites in each financial year were as follows:

Planning Authority	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	[1]1991

Details of companies involved and the precise location of each site are not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Member when the information has been collected.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what initiatives his Department has undertaken to encourage construction firms (i) to ensure maximum standards of energy efficiency in buildings and (ii) to use energy efficient materials;

(2) if he will review all aspects of the Building Regulations and codes of practice with a particular view to improving the long-term durability of construction and energy efficiency;

(3) if he will make it his policy to adopt new standards for house building and introduce a requirement for all newly built, converted or renovated properties to undergo energy audits.

Mr. Yeo: The Building Regulations and codes of practice are kept under review. The Department supports a programme of research at the Building Research Establishment and elsewhere with annual expenditure of £10 million.

Provisions in the Building Regulations for higher standards of energy efficiency came into force in April last year. The Government are committed to seeing how these standards could be further strengthened, including improved provisions when properties are converted or renovated.

A Government "standard assessment procedure" for comparing home energy labels was introduced on 18 December. It is our intention that this system should be developed to enable it to be incorporated into the Building Regulations when these are next amended.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has any plans to carry out an audit of low-income households to identify the steps needed to make homes energy efficient.

Mr. Yeo: The 1991 English house condition survey will include an "energy audit" of dwellings in the sample and record achieved room temperatures and fuel consumption. It will provide an estimate of the energy efficiency of the housing stock, including the homes of low-income households, and the measures needed to make dwellings energy efficient.

A13, Havering

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the decision of the public inquiry on the routing of the A13 trunk road through Havering.

Mr. Yeo: The decision will be announced when the inspector's report has been considered in conjunction with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Defective Housing

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds he has made available to enable London boroughs to buy back from right-to-buy owners houses found to have concrete cancer.

Mr. Yeo: Authorities may choose whether to repurchase or repair dwellings designated under housing defects legislation. Annual housing investment programme HIP—allocations take account of numbers of unreinstated designated dwellings reported by authorities. Recently announced 1992-93 HIP allocations for London boroughs included £56·7 million for specified capital grants, of which £3·7 million was allowed for housing defects obligations. These are notional, indicative figures, and authorities may spend more, or less, according to their statutory obligations. Exchequer contributions are paid to meet 75 per cent of the net cost of repurchases or repairs.

Standard Spending Assessment, Shropshire

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total and percentage increase over the previous year for the standard spending assessment for Shropshire for 1990-91, 1991-92, and 1992-93 in respect of education, personal services, and total expenditure.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is shown in the following table. The increases for 1990-91 are based on a comparison with 1989-90 grant-related expenditure assessments adjusted to take account of changes in authorities' responsibilities between the two years. Those for 1992-93 are based on the provisional standard spending assessments announced on 26 November 1991.

Changes between years in the standard spending assessments for Shropshire

Year	Education		Personal social services		All services
	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.
1989-90—1990-91	6·048	5·0	3·048	15·4	13·609	7·0
1990-91—1991-92	17·274	13·5	4·808	21·3	33·698	16·1
1991-92—1992-93	8·522	5·9	2·505	9·2	13·945	5·8

Waste Incinerators

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to release the results of the linked planning inquiry into the siting of merchant chemical waste incinerators on Teesside and Tyneside.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend will release the results of the three linked incinerator inquiries on Teesside and Tyneside, along with his decision on the applications, as soon as it is practicable to do so.

Mental Handicap

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the Mencap document regarding the charging for, and provision of, day care centre and educational facility plans for mentally handicapped people.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes.

Homelessness (Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department proposes to give to those charitable organisations which provide shelter to homeless people in the Greater Manchester area over the Christmas period.

Mr. Yeo: In 1991-92, the Government are providing £4·5 million in grants to voluntary organisations throughout England for practical projects to prevent and relieve homelessness. This will rise to £6·1 million in 1992-93—an increase in real terms of around 30 per cent. Among the projects currently funded are three in Greater Manchester—Hulme Action Research Project, SHADES City Centre Project and the Selcare Trust.

The concentrations of rough sleepers in individual local authority areas outside London are comparatively small and I would expect individual local authorities to make emergency provision for people sleeping out in their areas.

Woolwich Common Estate

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is to be spent on improvements to the Woolwich Common estate; how much is Government funded; when the homes were built; and what the spending is, averaged across the number of dwellings and the number of residents.

Mr. Yeo: I recently approved, under the 1991-92 estate action programme, a scheme on the Woolwich Common estate totalling £9·910 million. Estate action resources will contribute £5·527 million or 56 per cent. of the total scheme costs and will help to improve the living conditions in 688 of the 1,350 dwellings on the estate. The best estimate that we have of the number of residents affected is 2,000. Woolwich Common was built in four phases between 1968 and 1981. Under the proposed scheme a 93-dwelling Bison tower block, built under phase I, will benefit from improved heating, insulation and communal facilities. The security problems of 488 low-rise flats, which were among the last buildings to be constructed on the site, will also be addressed. The scheme also involves reroofing and rewiring these dwellings and others. The average costs per unit for all dwellings included in the scheme is £14,500.

The scheme will be completed over four years and is the second phase of a large-scale programme of works on the estate which has already attracted £3·5 million in estate action funding.

Council Tenants (House Purchases)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which inner London boroughs have not applied for central funds to give help equivalent to the right-to-buy discount to council tenants who wish to purchase a home elsewhere.

Mr. Yeo: In 1991-92, 28 London boroughs are running approved cash incentive schemes and are issuing grants under section 129 of the Housing act 1988 to enable council tenants who could not otherwise do so, to buy a home in the private sector. All are utilising resources made available under the 1991-92 homeless initiative. The five London housing authorities that have not applied to operate a scheme are Barking and Dagenham, Bexley, City of London, Greenwich and Newham.

Council Tax

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether landlords of houses in multiple occupation will be liable for the council tax.

Mr. Key: Yes. We intend to include the necessary provisions in regulations under clause 8 of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether students in households where the landlord is liable for payment of the council tax and passed on this cost through higher rents will be eligible for compensation through a rebate system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Most students do not have access to housing benefit; nor will they be entitled to council tax benefit. However, properties where all the residents are students will be exempt from the council tax. There will be a 25 per cent. discount in respect of any property with only one non-student resident. These arrangements will apply regardless of whether the students or their landlord would be the liable person.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the landlords of student halls of residence will be exempt from liability for the council tax.

Mr. Key: The Government intend to make an order under clause 4 of the Local Government Finance Bill exempting student halls of residence from the council tax. We are presently discussing the details of this exemption with the local authority associations.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the system of personal discounts for the council tax will be implemented in relation to full-time students.

Mr. Key: The Local Government Finance Bill provides for students to be eligible for discounts. Educational institutions will be required to provide students on request with certificates which local authorities will be able to use as evidence that a person should be disregarded.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a system of joint and several liability for the council tax.

Mr. Key: The Government's proposals for joint and several liability are set out in clauses 6(3) and 9 of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the projected annual costs of collecting the council tax in the Easington district council area.

Mr. Key: We have made no estimate of the cost of collecting the council tax for individual authorities, but over the country as a whole we would expect it to be no more than half the cost of collecting the community charge.

Housing Improvements (Manchester)

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sums have been allocated to the city of Manchester for the housing improvement programme in each of the last 10 years in (a) cash terms and (b) adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Yeo: Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their housing investment programme—HIP—allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts. Manchester city council has made substantial use of receipts to fund capital expenditure over this period. HIP allocations and gross capital expenditure for the last 10 years were:

£ thousands

	HIP allocation		Gross expenditure
	Cash	1991-92 prices	Cash	1991-92 prices

Notes:

[1]From 1990-91, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation does not convey borrowing approval directly.

[2]Provisional estimate of final allocation.

An initial HIP allocation of £34·9 million—£33·4 million at 1991-92 prices—has been issued for 1992-93 and additional resources—supplementary credit approvals—may be allocated later.

Special Wastes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to update water management paper 23 on special wastes.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside announced in July a timetable for the revision of waste management papers. Waste management paper No. 23, on special wastes, forms part of that timetable and is due to be issued for consultation in July this year and published in January 1993.

House Building

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new houses were constructed in the Easington district council area in each year since 1988-89, by (a) the council, (b) housing associations and (c) private companies.

Mr. Yeo: The information for 1988 and 1989 is published in "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Area 1980-89", and for 1990 in "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", volume No. 97. Copies are in the Library. Returns received for the first 11 months of 1991 show 80 dwellings completed in the Easington district council area, all built by private enterprise.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons waste management papers 4 and 26 do not envisage the granting of a waste disposal licence after planning permission from a district council.

Mr. Baldry: Disposal licences under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 have to be issued in accordance with the Collection and Disposal of Waste Regulations 1988, SI 1988 No. 819, after planning permission has been obtained. The advice given in waste management paper No. 26 on landfilling of wastes is that an application for a licence can be rejected only on the grounds of danger to public health or risk of water pollution—paragraphs 2.50 and 2.54. This reflects the wording of section 5(3) of the Control of Pollution Act. Waste management paper No. 4 is a technical memorandum providing guidance on how a licence should be devised by a waste disposal authority. The paper refers to the extant guidance in WMP 26 and statutory requirements of the Control of Pollution Act on granting of licences and cases where they may be refused.

Light Rail System Coventry

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to refuse any application for a light rail transit line between Coventry city centre and the Westwood Heath area;

(2) what assessment he has made of the traffic and financial viability of the proposed light rail transit line from Coventry city centre to the Westwood Heath area;

(3) if he will come to an early decision on the viability of the proposed Coventry city centre to Westwood heath light rail transit line;

(4) if he will make it his policy to seek the views of (a) traders in Earlsdon street and (b) residents of properties in Coventry South West affected by the proposed light rail transit line from Coventry city centre to the Westwood Heath area, before reaching a decision on the viability of the line.

Sir George Young: So far as the matters raised are for central Government, they will be for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport to consider. Until a firm proposal is made and detailed justification for it is submitted, no assessment can be made of the proposed route. However, local residents will be consulted on proposals affecting them and any objections will be considered at a public local inquiry.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, on the basis of the best information available, he will publish a table showing for each region and each class of local authority in England, for housing capital receipts and other capital receipts, showing (a) total cash backed capital receipts available to local authorities at 31 March 1990, and the amount of those receipts that were set aside as provision for credit liabilities, (b) the total of capital receipts received by local authorities in 1990-91 and the amount of those receipts set aside as provision for credit liabilities, (c) total capital receipts spent by local authorities in 1990-91, (d) the estimated total of capital receipts local authorities received in 1991-92, and the amount of those receipts that are likely to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities and (e) the estimated total of capital receipts spent on capital projects in 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The information requested is as follows. The figures are taken from local authority returns to the Department where available, estimates have been made for missing data.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what forecasts he has made as to the likely levels of (a) housing capital receipts and (b) other capital receipts, generated by local authorities in England in 1992-93; what proportion of those receipts is estimated to be required to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities; and what amount of capital receipts are estimated to be spent on capital projects within the financial year.

Mr. Key: Estimates of this nature are uncertain but at the time of the autumn statement total capital receipts likely to be generated by local authorities in 1992-93 were forecast at £3·0 billion. This total is likely to be split between housing and non-housing receipts in the ratio of 3:1. It is estimated that around two thirds of the total would be required to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities. It is further estimated that £1·2 billion of capital receipts, both accumulated and in-year, would be spent on capital projects during 1992-93.

Pollution Control

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the relationship between a district council's planning responsibilities for pollution control and those of a county council.

Mr. Yeo: The main land use planning responsibilities of district councils in England are the preparation of local development plans and decisions on planning applications for most types of development. County councils prepare structure plans, with which local plans must generally conform, and minerals and waste local plans; they are the development control authority for "county matters", principally mineral and waste disposal developments. In all of these functions, authorities may take into account the pollution aspects of development where they are relevant to the development and use of land. But we do not expect local planning authorities to use their planning powers to duplicate pollution controls under environmental protection legislation—whether operated by the National Rivers Authority, HM inspectorate of pollution, county councils as waste management authorities or district councils as pollution control authorities.

We intend to publish a draft planning policy guidance note on planning, pollution control and waste management issues later this year.

Homelessness

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistics he has concerning homeless people in the Easington district council area who are aged (a) 16 and 17 years, (b) 18 to 20 years and (c) over 20 years.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. The quarterly P1(E) returns identify such households by the category of need but not by age. The total number of households accepted by Easington district council under these provisions in the third quarter of 1991 was 25.

In the second quarter of this year the return was revised to identify for the first time:

(i) households in priority need who were accepted as homeless because the household contained vulnerable young person(s) (aged 16 and over) and;

(ii) young single homeless people who were not in priority need for whom the authority nevertheless agreed to secure permanent accommodation.

Since then, Easington district council has reported accepting only one such household, in the first of these two categories in the second quarter of 1991.

Cold Weather Credits

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet representatives from the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Yeo: I have no such plans.

Poll Tax

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the costs to the poll tax payers in Easington for collecting the poll tax in 1990-91; and what are the projected costs for 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The cost of collecting the community charge in Easington in 1990-91 and 1991-92 is estimated to be £699,000 and £793,000 respectively. Revenue expenditure is financed by Government grants, contributions from the non-domestic rates pool and withdrawals from reserves, in addition to community charges. It is therefore not possible to identify what components of these costs are financed directly by community chargepayers.

Voluntary Sports Clubs

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the areas that are being considered as part of his Department's further analysis of its survey into the granting of discretionary rate relief to voluntary sports clubs; what is the timetable for this further analysis; and by what date his Department will review its guidance to local authorities on discretionary rate relief to voluntary sports clubs.

Mr. Key: The further analysis is of the policy statements provided by charging authorities about the way in which they granted discretionary rate relief in 1990-91 to charities and other non-profit making bodies including sports clubs. We expect the analysis to be complete by mid-February. Depending on the results of this analysis, and taken with details of the numbers of properties granted relief in 1990-91, we will decide whether our guidance to authorities needs to be reviewed. We expect to announce our conclusions following consideration of the analysis.

Municipal Waste Water

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultation paper on the modus operandi proposed to be used by Her Majesty's Government in implementing the European Community directive on the treatment of municipal waste water.

Mr. Baldry: A consultation paper on the criteria for identifying sensitive areas and less sensitive areas—urban waste water treatment directive—and polluted waters—nitrate directive—will be issued within the next few months.

Royal High School, Edinburgh

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans for the letting or sale of space in the Royal high school building, Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The Crown Office buildings in Edinburgh have been occupied by the Crown Office since January 1982. There are no immediate plans to dispose of this building. Plans are in hand to colocate the Crown Office with the new Edinburgh sheriff court in 1994 and the future of this building will have to be reviewed closer to that date.

Rent Increases

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide information for 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 on the levels of rent increases for rented accommodation for each county in England for (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) stock transferred from local authorities to housing associations.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The estimated annual percentage changes in average local authority rents and registered rents for unfurnished housing association tenancies, which cover the majority of housing association tenants, are as follows. Comparable information is not available for transferred stock.

Note: Percentage changes are derived by annualising rent increases on tenancies re-registered (most are subject to re-registration every two years) in the financial year. Those for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are based on re-registrations in 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Small Firms

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many schemes his Department runs to provide help or finance for small firms; and if he will list them.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 18 December 1991]: The only scheme my Department runs to provide help specifically for small firms is the preferential treatment they receive under the non-domestic rating transitional arrangements. However, small firms may also receive help under the following schemes:

Environmental technology innovation scheme
Urban programme
Inner urban areas Act grants
City action team special budgets.

In addition, schemes operated by bodies sponsored by my Department also help small firms. The following schemes, all operated by the Rural Development Commission, are targeted on small businesses:

Business advice
Loans fund
Marketing initiatives
Support and training.

Small firms may also benefit from these other schemes run by sponsored bodies although they are not specifically aimed at them:

Rural Development Commission schemes for fully funded small workshop unit construction; partnerships with local authorities to construct small workshop units;
redundant building grants;
rural transport development fund;
English Heritage repair grants for listed buildings.

The Rural Development Commission also provides support for local enterprise agencies which in turn help small businesses.

Agricultural Occupancy

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ease the agricultural occupancy planning conditions attached to a farm dwelling when a farmer has had to go out of farming after a specified number of years.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 19 December 1991]: Conditions that restrict the occupancy of a dwelling to an agricultural worker seek to keep the dwelling available for the purposes which justified its provision. The Department's model agricultural occupancy condition, in DOE circular 1/85, enables a dwelling to be occupied by either someone "last employed" in agriculture or an agricultural worker in the locality. If circumstances change, an application can be made to the local planning authority for the condition to be lifted.

Drinking Water (Pollution)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to take to prevent the air pollution levels of the past week affecting the drinking water supply drawn from watercourses in the affected areas.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 20 December 1991]: None. I am advised that the high air pollution levels recently experienced in London should not have had any adverse effect on the quality of drinking water as there was no concurrent rain to wash the pollution into the water supply. The current blustery weather conditions should have dispersed the pollution.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Malta

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from the Government of Malta about Lockerbie-related issues.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Maltese Government co-operated extensively during the complex and lengthy investigation and were kept fully briefed on the findings of the investigation. We continue to maintain regular contacts with the Maltese Government.

Switzerland

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition in the Palace of Westminster from 13 January 1992 to mark the 700th anniversary of Switzerland.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for this exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall for a week from 13 January 1992.

European Union

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which language common foreign and security policy texts adopted, pursuant to the footnote to article K of the treaty on European union will initially be written before they are translated into all the official Community languages.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The language of initial drafting is likely to depend on the presidency. Current practice in European political co-operation is for texts to be drafted and worked on simultaneously in English and French.

Kuwait

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives are being taken to discover the fate of the remaining Kuwaiti citizens that have not been accounted for since the end of hostilities in the Gulf war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are maintaining pressure on Iraq to fulfil all its obligations under UN Security Council resolutions, including the return of missing Kuwaiti and third country nationals. We fully support Kuwait's efforts through the International Committee of the Red Cross to establish the whereabouts of its missing citizens. We shall continue to raise this question on appropriate occasions at the UN and elsewhere.

Soviet Republics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Governments of the Soviet republics in respect of the application of the principles of human rights to their proposals on citizenship rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 December we in concert with our EC partners, recognised eight former Soviet republics as independent states, after they had provided satisfactory assurances inter alia on human rights including citizenship rights. We regularly raised human rights issues with the former Soviet authorities. We shall continue to do so with the governments of these newly independent states, making clear that their approach in this respect will influence the development of our bilateral relations.

Maastricht Agreements

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish at an early date a White Paper setting out the text of the contents of the treaty of Maastricht, less the articles which amend articles of the treaty of Rome, together with a second section which clearly shows the deletions, amendments, and proposed standing text of the putative treaty of Rome as it would stand, given full ratification of the agreements reached at Maastricht.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The full text of the treaty on European union, including amendments to the treaty of Rome, will be published as a White Paper after the definitive version has been signed by member states.

China

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the United Kingdom Government has had with the Government of the People's Republic of China concerning a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None recently, but both the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China are members of the conference on disarmament in Geneva, which includes discussions of nuclear testing matters on its agenda. China has made clear that it will undertake no further atmospheric testing of nuclear devices.

EC Jurisdiction

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the definition of, or criteria determining, those matters falling within the exclusive jurisdiction of the European Community, or list those matters not within that category, stating in either case the relevant bases in treaty articles or protocols.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The EC has exclusive jurisdiction where that is conferred upon it by treaty provision or measures taken under the treaty. Current examples include the CAP, common commercial policy and the external tariff.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 23 December.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friends, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 23 December. The Council underlined its commitment to a successful conclusion of the Uruguay round and stressed the importance of opening up world trade, particularly for those countries introducing market-oriented economic reforms. In a discussion of the draft agreement put forward by Mr. Dunkel, the GATT Director General, the Council decided that the paper contained positive elements, but that its proposals on agriculture required modification. The Council asked the Commission to negotiate the necessary improvements.

The Council also agreed to provide 35 mecu of emergency food aid to Albania. The Commission undertook to put forward proposals on the possible supply of raw materials to Albania.

Councils of Ministers

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Councils of Ministers.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign Affairs Council met on 10 and 11 January.

The Economic and Finance Council may meet on 13 January. Ministers might consider further food aid to the former Soviet Union.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 27 and 28 January. Ministers will continue to discuss the Commission's common agriculture policy reform proposals and any outstanding agriculture issues arising from the Uruguay round negotiations. Ministers may also discuss meat products.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request the Government of the Republic of Ireland to establish a system of payments to the United Kingdom Exchequer, or United Kingdom local authorities, in respect of expenditure in support for Irish citizens who are homeless in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

I do not consider that such a request would be appropriate.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Receiverships

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has as to the proportion of the total of company receiverships which are initiated by the (a) Customs and Excise and (b) by the Inland Revenue.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Neither Customs and Excise nor the Inland Revenue initiate the appointment of receivers.

Local Authority Asset Sales

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish details of the assumptions used in assessing the proceeds from local authority asset sales for 1992-93 in table 1.A.13 of the Grey Book, including the expected proceeds from right-to-buy and voluntary transfers; and what allowance has been made in the forecast increase in local authority sales proceeds for 1992-93 for the declining trend in the right-to-buy.

Mr. David Mellor: Table 1.A.13 of the 1991 Autumn Statement, Cm 1729, shows local authority purchases and sales of land and buildings. The figures for local authority asset sales for 1992-93 were rounded to the nearest £1 billion, reflecting their tentative nature. These are broad estimates based, among other things, on the proceeds from such asset sales in previous years, and it would not be appropriate to break down the analysis in detail.

Government Data Network

Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many computers operated by Government Departments are connected to the Government data network; and how many individual files are linked to that network.

Mr. Maples: Access agreements to use the network have been made between Racal Data Networks Limited and 22 Departments or non-departmental Government bodies. These are Inland Revenue, Department of Social Security, Home Office, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, Employment Department, Her Majesty's Treasury, Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Department of Energy, General Register Office (Scotland), the Intervention Board Executive Agency, Department of Trade and Industry, Welsh Office, Department of Transport, Ordnance Survey, Department for National Savings, Department of Health, Natural History Museum, Cabinet Office, National Museums of Scotland, Property Holdings and the Paymaster General's Office. Some 2,800 network access points have been installed. Details of computer systems that send and receive data over the Government data network are not held centrally.

Bad Debts

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has of the present amount of indebtedness to the United Kingdom banking sector which is regarded as bad or doubtful; and what information he has of the proportions of bad or doubtful indebtedness which exist in respect of (a) United Kingdom based small firms, (b) United Kingdom based large companies, (c) investment in the USA and (d) investment in Latin America, Asia or Africa.

Mr. Maples: The Bank of England publishes information about the provisions made against bad debt by the large United Kingdom banks in its annual report under the Banking Act. The latest published figures are in the bank's report for 1990-91. Separate figures are given for provisions against domestic bad debt, commercial bad debt and problem country debt. However, the breakdown requested is not available.

Voluntary Donations to the Treasury

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out, by financial year, (a) the number of people who sent voluntary extra donations to the Treasury and (b) what the total amount of such contributions were, for each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Maude: The information to ascertain the numbers of people for all these years together is available only at disproportionate cost.

The net amounts of voluntary extra contributions received by the Inland Revenue for each year are as follows:

Year	Amount (£)
31 March 1977	10,623·36
31 March 1978	9,350·22
31 October 1979	11,129·77
31 October 1980	310,988·93
31 October 1981	129,246·98
31 October 1982	41,247·59
31 October 1983	18,140·58
31 October 1984	80,386·81
31 October 1985	39,329·49
31 October 1986	26,926·90
31 October 1987	23,479·48
31 October 1988	105,357·05
31 October 1990	2,587·50
31 October 1991	147,012·95

Figures are not now kept for financial years.

The net amount is arrived at after adjustment, for example for individuals who subsequently claim their previously anonymous payment.

Civil Service (Working Conditions)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent meetings he has had with civil service trade union representatives to discuss hours and conditions of work.

Mr. Maples: I meet civil service trade union representatives from time to time to discuss a variety of issues.

Retail Sales

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of retail sales in (a) December 1991 and (b) December 1990.

Mr. Maples: The estimate of the volume of retail sales, seasonally adjusted, in December 1990 is 119·7—1985 = 100. The estimate for December 1991 will be published on Monday 20 January.

EC Social Policy

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is envisaged that under the protocol on the social policy agreed at Maastricht the 11 member states who are allowed recourse to the institutions of the EC will have to make a payment to the EC to cover the costs to the EC of such recourse.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Any act adopted by the 11 member states under the protocol on social policy will not be applicable to the United Kingdom; nor will the United Kingdom bear any financial consequences, other than administrative costs for the institutions, arising from such acts.

Soviet Union Debt

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimate of the total value of the extended debt of the Soviet Union owed to banks and other commercial organisations within the EC.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Precise data are not available. The total amount of the former Soviet Union's hard currency debt is in excess of $60 billion, of which some $38 billion is owed to EC creditors. Most of this debt represents guaranteed and non-guaranteed bank loans. German banks are the largest creditors—$19·4 billion according to the Bundesbank—though much of this lending has been guaranteed either by the German Government or by the German export credit agency.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the total external debt of the Soviet Union is owed to banks and commercial organisations in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Germany.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The total claims of domestic German banks on the Soviet Union at the end of June 1991 were DM 35·2 billion—$19·4 billion—according to data provided by the Bundesbank. The total contractual claims of United Kingdom registered banks—including those of United Kingdom subsidiaries of foreign owned banks—were $2·9 billion at the same date. Assuming Soviet external debt to have been in the region of $60 billion in mid-1991—although there are some higher estimates—debt to United Kingdom and German banks would have constituted 4·8 and 32·3 per cent. respectively of total Soviet external debt. In both cases, much of the bank lending was guaranteed by Governments and export credit agencies.

Gross National Products

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the GNP per capita of each of the EC member states, expressed as a percentage of the Community average.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Following are the data for gross domestic product per capita, using purchasing power parities, for EC member states.

GDP Per Capita 1990, Converted at Purchasing Power Parities, EC Average = 100

Country	GDP
Luxembourg	127
Germany	112
Denmark	108
France	108
Italy	106
United Kingdom	104
Netherlands	102
Belgium	101
Spain	77
Ireland	69
Greece	52
Portugal	52

Source: OECD Main Economic Indicators, December 1991

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list each of those regions of the EC whose GNP per capita is less than 100 per cent. of the Community average.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Data for gross domestic product per capita for EC regions are published by the Central Statistical Office in "Regional Trends 26", 1991 edition.

Gaming Taxes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the levels and amounts of tax from each main form of gaming, betting and lotteries for the current year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the year ending 31 March 1991 receipts from the betting and gaming duties and the rates of duty applied were as follows:

	Revenue (£000)	Rate of duty
Off-course betting	479,064	8 per cent. of stake
On-course betting	—	Not taxed
Pool betting	303,944	37½ per cent. of stake
Casino gaming	57,367	Premises licence of £250 plus graduated percentages of gross gaming yield bands, varying between 2½ per cent. and 33⅓ per cent.
Gaming machines	98,631	Machine licence of £150 to £960, dependent on the amount of payout and the cost to play
Bingo	67,432	10 per cent. of stake money paid for cards plus 1/9th of added prize money
Lotteries	—	Not taxed

Most gambling is exempt from VAT, but the tax is chargeable on the net take of gaming machines and on certain fees to participate in bingo. It is not possible to calculate the VAT yield from information provided on VAT returns.

Councillors (Attendance Allowances)

Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what authority local councillors' attendance allowances are classified as earned income for tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Local authority councillors are office holders and therefore are assessable to income tax under the ordinary schedule E charging provisions on any attandance allowances they receive for the performance of approved duties. The charge to tax is imposed by section 19 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Cigarettes (Taxation)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the retail prices index of raising additional duty and tax on cigarettes in order to produce £750 million additional annual revenue.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This would raise the retail prices index by 0·3 per cent.

Gaming

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account is taken of (a) betting, (b) gaming and (c) lotteries in the compilation of the retail prices index.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Betting, gaming and lotteries are not covered by the retail prices index.

Soviet Economy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of the effects on the Soviet economy of the advice he has given.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The authorities of the former Soviet Union and of the republics have been very keen to discuss their reform plans with the United Kingdom Government and others in the west. During my visit to the Soviet Union last summer, and in the many contracts which I have had in recent months with policy makers, I have urged the adoption of a comprehensive and radical reform programme with the aim of achieving macro-economic stability and establishing a market economy. Other G7 countries and the international financial institutions, in particular the International Monetary Fund, have been providing similar advice.

The United Kingdom set up a 'know-how-fund' for the Soviet Union in 1990 to provide technical assistance and advice. This fund was more than doubled to £50 million last summer. A number of other countries and the European Community are also providing technical assistance, training and advice to the ex-Soviet Union.

The Russian Government have now taken the first major step in the direction of creating a market economy by freeing most prices from 2 January. Many other republics have followed or will follow this move. I have constantly emphasised to the Russian Government, and the Governments of the other republics, the importance of continuing and intensifying their discussions with the IMF on the implementation of these and further reforms. Russia and the Ukraine have now both applied for full IMF membership. Other republics have also applied or are expected to do so soon.

In the short term, I expect that these reforms will lead to higher prices and a fall in output as inflationary pressures are brought out into the open and uneconomic enterprises close. However, I am convinced that in the medium term a successful move to a market economy will create the conditions for a substantial improvement in living standards. The ex-Soviet Union is rich in natural resources and has a well educated workforce. If reform is successful, the prospects for growth are very good.

Alcohol Tax

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the spirits industry about current EC proposals to harmonise tax rates on different types of alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the outcome of discussions with the drinks industry over EC excise proposals.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will press for the inclusion in the current EC excise proposals of a mechanism to prevent further increases in tax discrimination against spirits in each member state.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to press for an EC tax harmonisation programme which reduces differentials between alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he intends to make to the report,

"Competition Between Alcoholic Drinks: an Analysis", commissioned by the Scotch Whisky Association and the Gin and Vodka Association; and what amendments he intends seeking to the European Commission's proposals on excise tax rates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the spirits industry to discuss EC proposals for excise duty harmonisation on 1 October 1991. We have since received the industry's report on competition between alcoholic drinks. Treasury Ministers fully understand the case the industry has put forward for a "capping" mechanism to prevent any further discrimination against spirits after 1992. We are now considering how best to respond to the current harmonisation proposals when further discussions resume in Brussels.

Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the gains or losses from each Budget since 1979 (i) before indexation and (ii) after indexation for those with incomes, (a) below £5,000 a year, (b) £5,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £20,000, (e) £20,000 to £30,000, (f) £30,000 to £50,000, (g) £50,000 to £70,000, (h) £70,000 to £100,000 and (i) over £100,000 a year.

Mr. Maude: The gains and losses from each Budget depend on many factors and it would be impracticable to attempt to estimate the effects of all Budget measures since 1979. Information on the effects of specific measures may be found in the press notices issued each Budget day by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise.

Share Ownership

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the impact of the privatisation and flotation of (a) Government-owned companies and (b) the Abbey National building society and the Trustee Savings bank, on the overall level of share ownership in the United Kingdom at the latest available date.

Mr. Maude: Share ownership in Great Britain in 1979 is estimated to have been 7 per cent. of the adult population. The latest Treasury-Stock Exchange survey showed that in 1991 share ownership had risen to 25 per cent. of the adult population of Great Britain. Five per cent. of the adult population owned shares in privatisation issues only; 4 per cent. owned Abbey National shares only; and 1 per cent. owned Trustee Savings Bank shares only. Information for the United Kingdom as a whole is not available.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in a full year in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93 of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (a) £10,000, (b) £15,000 and (c) £20,000 a year with (1) the current tax allowances and reliefs and (2) limiting all income tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance to the basic rate, giving the revenue from each relief separately, the total revenue and the numbers of people affected, for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Francis Maude [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1991, c. 221]: I regret that, due to an administrative error, the complete answer was not given. It should have read as follows:

It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the introduction of the upper limits specified would yield the following:

Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs	Yield in a full year under the current tax regime £ million	Yield following restriction of all reliefs and specified allowances to the basic rate £ million
£10,000	590	390
£15,000	240	150
£20,000	140	90

The estimated yield from restricting all allowances, except the basic personal allowance, to the basic rate is about £300 million. The estimated yield from restricting all reliefs to the basic rate is £600 million. Of this figure about £250 million results from restricting relief on employee contributions to occupational pensions and about £150 million results from restricting relief on personal pension contributions.

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000 is about 635,000. The corresponding figures for £15,000 and £20,000 are about 75,000 and 35,000 respectively.

The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a limit.

It is not possible to provide corresponding detailed estimates for 1992-93.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fuel Crops

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in the United Kingdom in growing crops economically for use as fuel or energy; what research facilities his Department is able to provide for this activity; and what studies have been made of the practice in other EC countries.

Mr. Curry: A wide range of crops for use as fuel or energy has been studied as part of the renewable energies programme of the Department of Energy. In recent years this work has concentrated on short rotation coppice wood because this gives good yields of dry biomass. For the same reason, there is interest in high yielding grasses such as miscanthus. At present, the growing of crops for fuel or energy is uncompetitive with more conventional energy sources but this could change in the future. The most promising energy sources appear to be wood and straw through direct burning but the economics are not yet attractive enough to encourage industrial use on any appreciable scale. Liquid fuels such as ethanol from cereals or sugarbeet or biodiesel from oilseed rape are also uncompetitive at the present time.

The Ministry has experimental husbandry farms, within its Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, which is shortly to become an agency, and these would be available for growing energy crops, if it was considered that additional sites were needed to supplement those already in existence.

Other EC countries are also interested in crops for energy purposes, especially in wood and high yielding grasses. Germany and France have shown particular interest in ethanol from sugarbeet or cereals.

An excellent account of the prospects for renewable energies from crops is contained in the evidence given to the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities, Session 1990-91, seventh report "Non-Food Uses of Agricultural Products".

Farmed Salmon

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to monitor the enforcement of the minimum import price structure on the imports of farmed salmon into the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Enforcement of the minimum import prices on consignments of farmed Atlantic salmon entering the Community is the responsibility of national customs authorities. The Commission has responsibility for monitoring that these Community rules are observed. I have written to the Commission emphasising the importance of ensuring that the requirements are strictly adhered to, and will draw any specific evidence of évasion to the Commission's attention.

Food Aid (Eastern Europe)

Sir Michael NcNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to ensure that food held in intervention, which is surplus to the stocks considered necessary by the EC as a proper reserve, is being made available as food aid for the newly independent countries of eastern Europe, including Russia.

Mr. Curry: Decisions on the supply of food aid take account of the needs of the recipient country. Where appropriate, supplies are drawn from intervention stocks, but in other cases they are purchased through the market for cost, availability or other reasons.

Bottled Water

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends taking to improve the quality standards of bottled waters.

Mr. Maclean: I expect to make proposals shortly for regulations under the Food Safety Act covering the quality of bottled waters, except for natural mineral waters which are already subject to the Natural Mineral Waters Regulations 1985. My officials are also involved in discussions with Brussels concerning the revision of the natural mineral waters directive.

Food Exhibition

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the role of the United Kingdom Food Processing Industry presented by the Food and Drink Federation to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. I have agreed to open the exhibition on 27 January.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been paid in compensation in respect of cattle slaughtered under the tuberculosis eradication scheme in each year since 1989.

Mr. Maclean: The amount of compensation paid for cattle slaughtered under the tuberculosis eradication programme is as follows:

	£ million
1989	0·58
1990	1·10
1991 (to November)	0·65

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the action taken so far by him to control tuberculosis in deer.

Mr. Maclean: Tuberculosis in deer was made notifiable in June 1989. Slaughter with compensation arrangements were introduced on 1 September 1989 and a voluntary deer health scheme launched in December that year. Research into tuberculosis in deer is being pursued.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to launch a formal review of the evidence relating to bovine tuberculosis in badgers and the badger control strategy.

Mr. Maclean: Badger control strategy is kept under continuous review by the Department, in conjunction with the consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress made to date on the development of a vaccine against bovine tuberculosis in badgers.

Mr. Maclean: Although research in this country and overseas is continuing, progress towards development of an effective vaccine for badgers is unlikely to be rapid.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the respects in which the provisions in England and Wales for the disposal of fallen and diseased animals diverge from the standards applying in the EC for animal health and food hygiene.

Mr. Maclean: Directive 90/667/EEC, which applies to England and Wales as to other parts of the Community, requires that animal waste be disposed of by rendering, burning or proper burial, but it also permits under a derogation traditional outlets such as knackers and hunt kennels to take fallen stock.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Christchurch School, Shooters Hill

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list each date on which he received proposals to spend money on capital works at Christchurch Church of England primary school, Shooters Hill since 1979; and what was his decision in each case.

Mr. Fallon: Two repair projects have been approved during the time in question, one in 1984 and one in 1990. Grant aid of £44,879·12 was paid on the former. Work on the more recent project was deferred at the governors request and has yet to take place.

Bids for major capital projects at Christchurch Church of England primary school were received from the Inner London education authority for the 1989-90 financial year, and from Greenwich education authority for 1991-92 and 1992-93. None was successful. Greenwich LEA has only had control of its education capital expenditure since April 1990. Before this date, capital expenditure on school buildings in inner London, including Greenwich, was the responsibility of the ILEA. Detail on particular bids for major improvement works in Greenwich cannot be readily extracted from records on earlier ILEA capital bids.

Resources for minor works at voluntary aided schools are allocated to LEAs for existing schools and it is for LEAs in consultation with voluntary bodies to determine how the funds are distributed between schools. For 1992-93 Greenwich LEA has a minor works allocation of £144,000.

A total of £6,165·30 has been paid in grant-aid for three projects at the school approved since 1988 under the Department's voluntary rationing scheme for capital work costing less than £5,000, or repair work costing less than £10,000.

Chorlton C of E School

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date he received the letter from the hon. Member for Stretford regarding Chorlton Church of England primary school; on what date he came to a decision to use his powers under section 68 of the Education Act 1944; and if he will make a statement on the time taken to reach his decision.

Mr. Fallon: The hon. Member's letter about Chorlton CE primary school was received in the Department on 25 July. My right hon. and learned Friend decided to issue a direction to the governors of Chorlton school on 30 September, but delayed its issue until 5 December because it appeared from information provided by Manchester LEA and solicitors acting on behalf of the governing body that the necessary information would be provided without the need for a formal direction.

AIDS Education

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Church of England and Roman Catholic Church on the content and place in the curriculum for AIDS education.

Mr. Atkins: Since replying to my hon. Friend's earlier question about HIV/AIDS education—Official Report column 417—my right hon. and learned Friend has received one letter from a representative of the Church of England and, to date, none from the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will undertake a sample study of AIDS education in those Roman Catholic voluntary -aided secondary schools which implement AIDS education as part of the family life programme taught jointly between the religious education and science departments.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to undertake such a study. It is for individual schools to determine how education about HIV and AIDS should be provided, taking full account of the requirements of the national curriculum, local circumstances, the needs of pupils and the views of parents.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have (a) become committed to hold a ballot on grant-maintained status, (b) voted yes and (i) had the proposals approved, (ii) had the proposal rejected and (iii) await determination of the proposal and (c) voted no; how many in each category were the subject of (1) closure or (2) reorganisation proposals; and whether, for schools in categories (b)(ii) and (c), the proposals have been approved or rejected.

Mr. Eggar: To date 446 schools[1] have become committed to hold a ballot on grant-maintained status and (i) 162 schools have received approval for their proposals for grant-maintained status, (ii) 29 have had their proposals rejected and (iii) 62 await determination of their proposals and 60 have yet to publish proposals. Ninety-one schools have voted no to grant-maintained status. There are 41 schools with ballots pending, and one school where the application for grant-maintained status has lapsed.

The most recent information held by the Department on current and subsequent associated closure and reorganisation proposals is as at 31 October 1991. At that date:

(a) Of the 390 schools[2] which had balloted or were committed to balloting on grant-maintained status, 106 were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals[3].

(bi) Of the 130 schools which received approval for their proposals for grant-maintained status, 23 schools were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals;

[1] This figure includes six schools which have balloted twice on grant-maintained status.

[2] This figure includes four schools which have balloted twice on grant-maintained status.

[3] Information differentiating between closure and reorganisation proposals is not readily available.

(bii) Of the 24 schools which had their proposals for grant-maintained status rejected, 22 schools were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals, of which 19 have been approved and three rejected;

(biii) Of the 69 schools which awaited determination on their proposals for grant-maintained status, 23 schools were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals; of the 28 schools who had voted yes but had not published proposals, 10 were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals; and

(c) Of the 70 schools who voted against applying for grant maintained status, 26 schools were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals[4].

(d) Sixty-eight schools had ballots pending, two of which were or are named in associated closure or reorganisation proposals. One application for grant-maintained status had lapsed.

(4) Information on whether these proposals were approved or rejected is not readily available.

St. Thomas More School, London

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has accepted the application for capital works at St. Thomas More RC primary school, London SE9.

Mr. Fallon: Provision for minor improvement/replacement work at existing schools—like St. Thomas More RC primary school—is allocated to local authorities on a formula basis. Greenwch LEA has received a minor works allocation of £144,000 for 1992-93 under the formula. It is up to the LEA, in consultation with voluntary bodies, to decide which projects should receive funding from the formula.

Exam Results

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils obtained five O-level/higher grade GCSE passes which included mathematics, English, a science, a foreign language and history or geography each year since 1973; and what proportion they represent of the cohort.

Mr. Eggar: The numbers of 16-year-old pupils in schools in England who obtained five or more GCSE passess at grades A to C including each of those subjects or combinations of subjects requested, in the academic year 1988-89 was 81,050—13·1 per cent. of all 16-year-olds, and in 1989-90 it was 79,470—13·7 per cent. Information is not available centrally in the form requested for academic years prior to 1988-89.

Teaching

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps Her Majesty's Government intend to take to make the job of teaching more attractive.

Mr. Fallon: The Government's education reforms, including in particular the introduction of the national curriculum and local management of schools, will raise standards in schools and make teaching an increasingly fulfilling and attractive career. The establishment of a pay review body for teachers recognises and enhances the status of the profession. There was a 21 per cent. increase in the numbers entering teacher training in 1991. The changes in initial teacher training which my right hon. and learned Friend has recently proposed will make the profession still more attractive.

Higher Education

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will discuss with institutions of higher education the conduct of their admissions policy on a points basis in relation to A-level grades.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Admissions policies are matters for individual higher education institutions. In deciding whether to admit a student, institutions take a variety of academic, vocational and personal qualifications into account, of which A-level grades often, but by no means always, form an important part. We look at institutions to be flexible in determining entrance requirements and to look at the full range of candidate's achievements.

School Government Regulations

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has completed his assessment after the completion of the consulting period over the proposed amendment to the Education (School Government) Regulations 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Amending regulations to the Education (School Government) Regulations were laid before Parliament on 18 December, and came into force on 8 January. The main aim of the amendments was to ensure that governors were not overstretched. The principal amendments reduce the maximum number of governorships an individual can normally hold from four to two; and reduce from 12 to six months the period after which a governor is disqualified if he fails to attend all meetings within that period without the consent of the governing body.

Parents Charter

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultation was held with parents before the publication of the parents charter.

Mr. Eggar: In recent years the Government have commissioned a number of surveys of parents' knowledge about the education system. These showed that some parents were unaware even of their most basic rights in relation to their children's education, and that the majority would welcome more information about what went on in schools. The parents charter clearly sets out parents' current rights; it also explains the Government's proposals to improve access to information about the quality of education and standards achieved in schools.

Sport Guidance

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what date he intends to publish guidance to schools to suggest the sort of information they should make readily available to parents concerning opportunities for sport and recreation.

Mr. Atkins: Guidance is likely to be issued towards the end of April 1992.

Teacher Training

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what principal persons or bodies he consulted prior to making his recent decision concerning teacher training; and if he will place copies of these representations or conclusions in the Library, stating for each body or person concerned the extent and period of their experiences of (a) class teaching and (b) teacher induction;

(2) what consultation he has had with governors, trustees and religious and other non-statutory bodies that have current responsibility for the training of teachers concerning his proposals for teacher training; and what communication he has had with them collectively since assuming office concerning the nature, quality and practicality of teacher training courses;

(3) what communication he has had with principals of colleges of education and departments of education, or any relevant representative body, concerning the nature, quality and practicality of the courses they provide for the training of teachers; and what consultation he has had with any representative body of heads of secondary schools concerning the new responsibilities he envisages for them in training teachers;

(4) if he will publish a White Paper setting out the general principles of the plans he has for the training of teachers in general, including statistical information related to his timing of the changes; and if the steps he intends taking will effect the courses leading to the postgraduate certificate in education due to take place in 1992-93.

Mr. Fallon: The principal source of advice for the proposals announced by my right hon. and learned Friend in his speech to the north of England education conference was the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education—CATE. A list of CATE members has been placed in the Library. The proposals were also informed by a substantial report by Her Majesty's inspectorate on school-based initial teacher training in England and Wales, which has been published. Copies of this report have been placed in the Library.

The reasons for the proposals, the arrangements for consultation and the timetable for implementation were set out in my right hon. and learned Friend's speech. Copies of the speech have been sent to all higher education institutions in England and Wales which offer courses of initial teacher training and to many other organisations and individuals. A consultation document, setting out proposed new criteria for the approval of secondary postgraduate—PGCE—courses and proposed accreditation arrangements, will be issued soon. The consultation period will last until the end of March.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what effects on the staffing of institutes and colleges of education he expects to arise consequent on his recent proposals for changes in teacher training; what are the numbers of persons currently employed in such institutions in England and Wales (a) as professional staff and (b) as supporting personnel; and how many of each he expects to be retained if his plans are implemented.

Mr. Fallon: The proposals for the reform of initial teacher training announced by my right hon. and learned Friend in his speech to the north of England education conference would involve a significant transfer in the burden of responsibility for initial teacher training as between higher education institutions and schools. The staffing implications are for institutions themselves to determine.

About 3,000 full-time equivalent staff are currently employed as lecturers and tutors on courses of initial teacher training at higher education institutions in England and Wales. Data on support staff are not held centrally.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those institutions concerned with the training of teachers in England and Wales he has visited, and for what purpose, since assuming office, together with relevant dates and approximate length of visit.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend made half-day visits to the school of education at Nottingham university and the department of education at Loughborough university last year on 2 May and 21 October respectively. On both visits he observed teacher training in practice and spoke with staff, students, local teachers and headteachers. He met staff and students in the school of education at Nene college as part of a general half-day visit to the institution on 3 October. He also made a short visit to Bretton Hall college on 19 July, during which he met staff responsible for teacher training courses at the college.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will tabulate in the Official Report the name of each teacher training centre or institution, listed under convenient categories in England and Wales, respectively, and for each show the type of course offered for graduate, postgraduate and higher degree qualifications, respectively, together with the approximate numbers of students in each category and the number of academic staff in each institution.

Mr. Fallon: The names of English initial teacher training institutions, and enrolments on their ITT courses for 1989-90 are listed in tables 9 and 9a of the Department of Education's statistical bulletin 17/91—students on initial teacher training courses—published in July 1991. A copy of this is available in the Library.

No figures for numbers of academic staff are available for individual ITT institutions.

Sports Councils

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates he has assumed for the level of grant-in-aid for the four sports councils and the United Kingdom Sports Commission once this body has been established in arriving at his decision to establish the Commission.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom Sports Commission and the Sports Council for England will be funded from within the provision available for the GB Sports Council. Thereafter, the appropriate provision for each will be settled in the relevant public expenditure round, together with provision for each of the other home country sports councils.

Sports Commission

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his timetable for establishing the United Kingdom Sports Commission; if he will list the organisations and individuals with whom Ministers and officials in his Department have held meetings with regard to establishing the United Kingdom Sports Commission and the dates on which such meetings took place; if he will list the organisations and individuals with whom Ministers in his Department plan to hold further meetings and the dates on which such meetings will take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom Sports Commission will be established as soon as practicable. The decision took account of the GB Sports Council's own proposals for Sports Council restructuring which were discussed with it. There were also consultations with interested Departments. There will be discussions with the GB Sports Council and others as appropriate to take forward the arrangements for establishing the UK Sports Commission.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the sports bodies and organisations to whom he has sent a copy of his consultation letter on the disposal of school playing fields; by what date he requires responses to this letter; and by what date he will announce the conclusions of this consultation exercise.

Mr. Atkins: Copies of the press release on the consultation exercise with the local authority associations —LAAs—have been sent to the Sports Council, the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the National Playing Fields Association and the regional councils for sport and recreation. The LAAs have been asked for comments by 28 February and it is hoped to announce the conclusions of the exercise as soon as possible after that date.

Sport

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what date he intends to publish his document setting out examples of good practice in promoting sporting and recreational opportunities for young people.

Mr. Atkins: This guidance document is one of the proposals in my recent sports policy statement, "Sport and Active Recreation" and I hope to publish it in the autumn.

School Buildings

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the expenditure required to bring the existing school building stock to the standard required by School Building Regulations.

Mr. Fallon: The results of the survey of school buildings —SSB—published by the Department in November 1987 indicated that the cost of bringing school premises up to the accommodation standards defined in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, and to an acceptable state of repair, for 1991 pupil numbers, was about £2 billion at November 1987 prices. We have no later estimate than this figure, which was based upon returns by LEAs in respect of some 800 primary and secondary schools. Between 1986-87 and 1989-90 LEAs spent over £2 billion on school buildings, a significant proportion of which will have gone on remedying the deficiencies noted in the SSB.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give his estimate of the increase in expenditure on maintenance to school buildings required to deal with the problems identified in the National Audit Office report on property management.

Mr. Fallon: As the NAO report made clear, local authorities are responsible for the maintenance of their school buildings. It is for individual LEAs, not the Government, to decide what to spend from within the resources available to them in order to keep schools in a satisfactory state of repair.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give for each education authority his assumption for the amount required to be spent on school building repairs within the expenditure forecast.

Mr. Fallon: The Government's 1992-93 local authority finance settlement allows for standard spending on education by local authorities collectively to be 7·1 per cent. higher than this year's figure, which in turn allowed for a substantial increase in standard spending over 1990-91. Within this framework it is for individual local authorities to determine how much to spend on education and the pattern of spending within education, in the light of local needs and circumstances. Local authorities' standard spending assessments do not contain a separately identifiable element for school building repairs.

Polytechnics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, columns 31-33, (a) what advice he received from the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and (b) when he last consulted the Standing Conference of Principals on the question of whether to designate any further polytechnics.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The references to polytechnic designations in my right hon. and learned Friend's answer of 16 December took account of responses from the Ploytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and the Standing Conference of Principals, among others, on the Department's consultation paper "Degree Awarding Powers and University Titles" issued on 31 October. Neither body offered advice on whether to designate further ploytechnics.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to provide training and employment for the young unemployed aged 17 years to 25 years in the Heywood and Middleton constituency.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Service and Rochdale training and enterprise council deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes, to help unemployed people, including young unemployed, in Middleton and Heywood as elswhere. Additionally, Rochdale training and enterprise council and the Employment Service are working with others to enhance training provision for certain special groups in the area.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are on YTS in the area of Seaham and Peterlee; and what were the numbers in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: Provision of training for young people in the Seaham and Peterlee areas is the responsibility of the County Durham training and enterprise council. I have forwarded the hon. Member's inquiry to the TEC chairman. In 1989-90 the youth training scheme was the responsibility of the Department and at March 1990, the latest date that information is available centrally, there were 775 young people on YTS in Seaham and Peterlee.

Windscale Inquiry

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, if he will place in the Library a copy of the study by Lyons (GB) Ltd. of press reporting of the Windscale public inquiry.

Mr Forth: I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

Euratom

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment against which authority an individual can claim in the event of a claim for compensation arising from the failure to implement EC directive 89/618.

Mr. Forth: The Government do not accept that individual rights to claim compensation arise from the failure to implement the directive before the due date.

In the event of a member of the public seeking to establish an individual right to claim compensation arising from the failure to implement the directive, civil proceedings might be instituted against the Crown under section 17(3) of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. In that case, the appropriate authorised Government Department against which civil proceedings might be instituted would therefore be this Department as it has responsibility for laying before Parliament proposals for the statutory instrument intended to implement the directive.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Government's timetable for promulgation of the information stipulated by EC directive 89/618.

Mr. Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission is currently conducting public consultation on proposals to implement EC directive 89/618/Euratom. Comments are required by the end of February 1992. We will bring forward new legislation as soon as comments have been considered and proposals scrutinised by the European Commission under the procedure set down in article 33 of the Euratom treaty.

COSH Regulations

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 associated with building records.

Mr. Forth: None.

Youth Training Schemes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers go straight into youth training schemes in the Crewe and Nantwich travel-to-work area.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available in the format requested. At December 1991, 55 per cent. of the total number of school leavers in the South and East Cheshire training and enterprise council area went straight into youth training.

Training Investment

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the amount of investment in training in each European country.

Mr. Jackson: The definition of investment in training varies very considerably from country to country and no comparable figures are available. In Great Britain, current annual investment in training by employers is estimated at over £20 billion.

Bridging Allowance (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will produce a table to show, for each of his Department's offices in Coventry, and for the city as a whole, how many young people, and how many of each sex, were receiving bridging allowance; and how many had their allowance terminated in each month since October 1988.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the proportions of female part-time workers on adult rates, in April, with hourly earnings of less than (a) £3·80, (b) £5·00 and (c) £5·20; and if he will provide these figures by standard economic region, for Great Britain, and for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey closest to that requested is given in the table.

Percentage of part-time female employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was unaffected by absence, with hourly earnings below the following specified amounts.

	April 1991
	£ 3·80	£ 4·80	£ 5·40
Greater London	23·5	53·3	65·1
South East	38·1	64·7	74·3

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council held in Brussels on Wednesday 18 December.

Mr. Redwood: The principal item for discussion was the European Commission's proposal for a directive on technical standards for satellite broadcasting. After a lengthy debate, member states were able to reach political agreement on a draft directive. A formal common position on the directive should be adopted shortly, after which it will go for a second reading in the European Parliament. The outcome demonstrated considerable European support for the Government's negotiating position which has consistently sought to protect the interests of European service providers and consumers. I believe we have achieved an excellent deal in this respect. We have resisted any damaging obligations on existing satellite broadcasters to adopt the D2-MAC standard, a move which could have threatened their commercial viability. We have also successfully prevented the compulsory inclusion of multiplexed analogue components—MAC—decoders in ordinary television sets and satellite receiving equipment, thereby sparing consumers an excessive cost premium on these products. I think that the greater emphasis the agreement now places on promoting the wide-screen capabilities of MAC is a very positive step for the European satellite broadcasting industry. Yet to be resolved is the separate financial measure which the Commission intends to propose to provide funding for the promotion of the MAC standard. The Government will consider a case for subsidy on its merits when a proper justification for the spend is put forward but we are opposed to the expenditure of the very large sums which have been talked about by the Commission.

Formal common positions were adopted without discussion on the Council decision on the harmonisation in due course of the international telephony access code to 00, the Council directive on the application of open network provision to leased lines and the Council resolution on the further liberalisation of satellite communications.

Industrial Development, Rochdale

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will visit Rochdale borough to meet representatives of industry to discuss matters relating to his Department's activities in industrial development.

Mr. Leigh: I have no present plans to do so, although my officials remain ready to discuss my Department's activities and services with Rochdale borough and other local authorities.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for boosting manufacturing output in the Rochdale borough.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has a wide range of schemes to help improve manufacturing output and encourage innovation. Firms in Rochdale wishing to take advantage of these schemes should contact DTI's north-west regional office in Manchester.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Testing

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to use section 5(5) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to ensure that projecct licences are not issued for animal tests for skin or eye irritancy where alternative testing methods are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: All applicants for project licences for whatever purposes are required to show that they have given thorough consideration to the possibility of using alternatives to the use of living animals in their proposed programme of work. At present there are no validated and accepted alternative testing methods to existing skin and eye irritancy tests.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any of the project licences currently issued under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 permit animal testing for skin or eye irritancy for the purpose of developing cosmetics or toiletries.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are currently four project licences in force which authorise the use of living animals in the safety testing of cosmetics or toiletries. All authorise the use of animals in tests to ensure that substances used in cosmetics are not skin irritants and three of them authorise tests to ensure that such substances are not eye irritants.

The definition of cosmetics used in this country follows that used by the European Community and includes such items as shampoos, sunscreens and toothpastes. In view of the purposes of such products, skin and eye irritancy tests are carried out as part of a package of tests required to ensure that substances to be used in cosmetics are safe. Skin and eye irritancy tests will normally only be applied to animals after in vitro pre-screening tests have shown the substance in question to be a non-irritant thus reducing the possibility of adverse reactions to the animals involved.

State-approved Funding

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are equivalents to the Ryrie rules on state-approved non-Government funding for state-approved causes.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Gaming Polices

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the differences between public policies on (a) betting, (b) gaming and (c) lotteries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Government policy on all gambling, whether betting, gaming or lotteries, reflects two basic principles. The first is that controls are necessary to ensure that it is conducted honestly and fairly. The second principle is that demand for gambling should not be stimulated. These principles are applied in different degrees to different kinds of gambling. The greater the scope for abuse and commercial exploitation the more rigorously they are applied.

Lotteries

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange the publication by 17 January of an interim discussion paper on the technical issues which could be considered relevant to decisions on one or more high-prize lotteries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The House will have an opportunity to consider these issues in debate on 17 January, but we do not intend to issue a discussion document in advance.

Child Crime

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the number of incidents reported to police in each year since 1980 in which it is believed that offences were committed by children believed to be under the minimum age at which they could be either cautioned or prosecuted;

(2) what was the number of incidents in each year since 1980 in which police identified the culprit or culprits as children under the age at which they could be prosecuted.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not collected centrally on the number or type of offences committed by children under the age of 10 years, the minimum age of criminal responsibility in England and Wales.

Gaming Advertisements

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which forms of gaming, betting or lotteries may be advertised on television.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: By virtue of certain statutory controls and the provisions of the Independent Television Commission's code of advertising standards and practice, all advertising of betting and gaming is prohibited on commercial television. Lotteries permitted under the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 may be advertised on television.

Gambling

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report on gambling commissioned by the European Commission, in so far as it covers the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As part of an examination of the gambling sector in the context of the single market, a purely factual report entitled, "Gambling in the Single Market—A study of the current legal and market situation", was published by the European Commission in July. We have drawn to the Commission's attention a number of factual inaccuracies in relation to the United Kingdom. In particular, we have pointed out that net consumer spend—estimated at about £3,300 million for the United Kingdom in 1989-90—provides a better guide to gambling expenditure than estimates of the total amount staked which appear in the report. On that basis, the EC gambling industry is much smaller than the report claimed.

Television Licences

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what authority a colour television licence is required for the installation or use of a video cassette recorder in conjunction with a black and white television set.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The requirement for a colour television licence to install or use a video cassette recorder in conjunction with a monochrome television is set out in the Wireless Telegraphy (Television Licence Fees) Regulations 1991 (No. 436) made under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the merits and demerits of a national lottery.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 2 December 1991, at column 14.

Security Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the purposes and objectives of the Security Service;

(2) if he will make it his practice to provide information on the annual expenditure by the Security Service;

(3) if he will now make it his practice to disclose the number of people employed by the Security Service.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make it his practice to provide detailed financial information on the expenditure of the Security Service.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The functions of the Security Service, as described in the Security Service Act 1989, are the protection of national security and the safeguarding of the United Kingdom's economic well being against threats posed by the actions or intentions of persons outside the British islands. I do not intend to depart from the practice adopted by successive Governments of not disclosing information about staffing, financial and other matters closely associated with the Security Service's operations which must necessarily remain secret.

UKIAS

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what dates in 1991 Ministers and/or officials have met representatives of the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service; what was discussed; and what further meetings are planned;

(2) what communication has been received from the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service proposals that green form legal aid be withdrawn and UKIAS provide advice and assistance on political asylum, immigration and nationality matters; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what increase in the Home Office grant-in-aid to the United Kingdom Immigrant Advisory Service would be required if it has to become the sole provider of advice and assistance on political asylum, immigration and nationality matters and if green form legal aid was wholly or partially withdrawn; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what departmental grant-in-aid has been given to the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service in each of the past five years; and what grant-in-aid has been agreed for the coming financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are frequent discussions between the Home Office and the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service. In the past 12 months, these have included the discussions to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member's Question on 14 October 1991, at column 25, about our proposals on green form legal aid, and discussions, which continue, of other matters relevant to the payment of grant-in-aid, including aspects of UKIAS management. The grant paid to UKIAS in the financial years ending 31 March 1988 to 31 March 1991 was £0·961 million, £1·007 million, £1·130 million and £1·351 million respectively. £1·422 million has been paid so far this financial year. Payments for the remainder of this year and for future years will be determined in the light of continuing discussions with UKIAS about the resources needed to enable the organisation to respond to an increased workload.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings or correspondence has been undertaken by him with the Commission for Racial Equality concerning the relations between the Asylum Bill and the Race Relations Act 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality wrote to my right hon. Friend about the Asylum Bill on 3 December and he replied on 10 January. The Government are satisfied that there is no conflict between the Bill and the Race Relations Act 1976.

Sikh Groups (Expenditure)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints have been received by the Charity Commissioners, in each of the last three years, alleging the irregular expenditure of funds by organisations, including religious organisations, registered by the Sikh community living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: Separate records are not maintained about individual complaints which have been received by the Charity Commissioners in respect of any charity, and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations have been carried out on behalf of the Charity Commissioners, in each of the past three years, into complaints of the irregular expenditure of funds by organisations, including religious organisations, registered by the Sikh community living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The commissioners have used their powers of inquiry in some 17 cases involving allegations of misuse or misappropriation of funds, during the last three years, by charities connected with the Sikh community living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) complaints have been received, in each of the last three years, and (b) what investigations have been undertaken by the Metropolitan police into the irregular expenditure of funds by organisations which promote the political, social and economic interests of the British Sikh community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Indian Terrorism

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British and non-British nationals, in each of the last five years, have been (a) arrested, (b) charged, (c) convicted and (d) acquitted over offences relating to the funding of terrorism in India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: None.

Terrorist Funds

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of current United Kingdom legislation relating to powers to confiscate terrorist funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The financial provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 have given the police further means of obtaining information in the course of their investigations into terrorist crimes. The complexity of such investigations is such that none has yet reached the stage at which charges may be brought, at which point the powers of restraint and forfeiture may be used. Nevertheless, I understand that the police believe that the provisions have already proved valuable in providing documentary evidence of how funds are channelled, and in opening further lines of investigation.

Broadcasting Council for Wales

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations he took into account in his recommendations for the appointment of a new chairperson of the Broadcasting Council of Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chairmanship of the Broadcasting Council for Wales is one of the duties of the BBC national governor for Wales. In considering recommendations for new appointments to the board, people are sought from a variety of backgrounds whose personal qualities and experience will enable them to contribute to the successful operation of the BBC, and to represent the wider public interest including that of the relevant parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy in the Library of the correspondence between the 11 members of the Broadcasting Council of Wales and himself on Friday 13 December concerning the appointment of Dr. Gwyn Jones to be the next chairman of the BBC Broadcasting Council for Wales.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I do not normally place copies of my correspondence in the Library and I see no reason to do so on this occasion.

Police Manning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 10 December, Official Report, column 394, 11 December, Official Report, column 435, 12 December, Official Report, column 508 and 13 December, Official Report, column 584, when he intends to write to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth on the calculations on which he based police manning levels.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I hope to reply this week.

Homicides, London

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of homicides recorded by the police in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last 10 years; and how many of these were subsequently recorded as murder.

Mr. John Patten: The number of offences initially recorded as homicide by the Metropolitan police, and the number of these subsequently found to be murder is shown in the following table for each year from 1982 to 1990:

Homicide offences in the Metropolitan police district

Year	Initially recorded homicide offences
	Total number	Subsequently recorded as murder
1982	196	47
1983	148	39
1984	164	36
1985	191	40
1986	207	50
1987	194	43
1988	160	33
1989	165	46
1990	182	37

The equivalent figures for the year 1991 are not available.

Bomb Warnings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy for the British Transport police to be made aware of the code words used by the IRA in verifying the authenticity of bomb warning calls in London.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Effective co-operation and liaison exist between the Metropolitan police special branch and the British Transport police on this and other policy issues.

Magistrates Courts, Rochdale

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his proposals for the future organisation of the magistrates courts in the Rochdale metropolitan borough.

Mr. John Patten: Decisions about the provision and usage of courthouses in Rochdale are a matter for the Rochdale magistrates courts committee in consultation with the paying authority. The Government's proposals for the future organisation of the magistrates' courts service in England and Wales as a whole were summarised in the reply given by my right hon. Friend on 18 December to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter).

Police Civilianisation, Hertfordshire

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of policemen in Hertfordshire who would become available for operational duties if the police authority adopted the best practice on civilianisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the 819 "key posts" in the Hertfordshire constabulary, 551—or 67·3 per cent.,—have been civilianised. A number of forces have achieved rates at 80 per cent. or more. Although there is not necessarily an exact correlation between the number of posts civilianised and the number of officers thereby released for operational duties, it is reasonable to assume that if Hertfordshire were to civilianise 80 per cent. of "key posts", some 100 further officers could be released for operational duties.

Seaham and Peterlee (Policing)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable on police manning levels in Seaham and Peterlee in the years 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The deployment of police manpower within a force area is a matter for the chief constable. I understand from the chief constable of Durham that the information requested is as follows:

On 31 December	Establishment strength Seaham		Establishment strength Peterlee
1989	55	54	114	114
1990	54	52	117	115
[1]1991	53	49	126	126

[1] as at November.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many car thefts there have been in the Seaham and Peterlee area in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Violence Against Police, London

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of offences of violence against the police in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last 10 years where the offence involved serious injury; and what is the clear-up rate.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to the number of officers assaulted while on duty and is published annually in the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. A six-month survey of sentencing for assaults on police officers was conducted from July to December 1991. From this survey it will be possible to tell how many offenders were convicted of injuring a police officer in the Metroplitan police district during that period. The results of the survey will be published as soon as possible.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the West Midlands as to the progress of the inquiry set up in March 1991 into the identity of the persons responsible for the Birmingham pub bombings; how many officers have been involved in the inquiry; what they have been doing; and whether they have reached a conclusion.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am not able to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 18 November 1991 at column 17.

Crime Levels

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the findings of the most recent British crime survey in establishing the fact about crime increases and the comparison with offences recorded by the police.

Mr. John Patten: The most recent British crime survey was carried out in 1988, covering crime in 1987. Some types of crime are excluded from the survey, such as those where the victim is an organisation or institution, rather than an individual. For those types of crime where comparisons can be made between the survey findings and offences recorded by the police, the increase between 1981 and 1987 was as follows:

	[1]Per cent.
As indicated by the British crime survey	30
As indicated by offences recorded by the police	41

[1] Increase in crime between 1981 and 1987.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to indemnifying local authorities which seek to enforce the law on Sunday trading in respect of the perceived risk of damages should they lose the case in the end.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for local authorities themselves to determine what of their resources to allocate to enforcing the Sunday trading provisions of the Shops Act 1950 as it is in relation to the whole range of their many other responsibilities under the law. We make a substantial contribution to local authority costs generally through the revenue support grant system, and do not propose to increase this contribution specifically for this enforcement.

Breath Tests

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the legislation under which police with adequate identification can request a breath test.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police powers to require breath tests are contained in the Road Traffic Act 1988.

Under section 163 a police constable in uniform has the power to stop any vehicle; and under section 6 to require a breath test:

(a) where there is reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has alcohol in his body; or
(b) where there is reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has committed a moving traffic offence; or
(c) where there is reasonable cause to believe that the driver has been involved in an accident.

Tobacco

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from what date the Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991 will be enforced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Act, apart from section 4, will be brought into force as soon as the guidance circular clarifying the duties of local authorities in enforcing the new law has been finalised following consultations with the interested parties. Section 4, which deals with the display of warning statements in retail premises and on vending machines, will be brought into effect later in the year after separate consultations have been completed.

Grants

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to meet all the proposals put forward by local education authorities for grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mrs. Rumbold: Not all proposals met the new criteria for grants. Those proposals which were eligible for grant exceeded in total the resources available. It will be for the local education authorities concerned to decide which of their eligible proposals should be funded within the total grant allocated to each of them for education purposes.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reason for the delay in reporting back to local education authorities on the size of grants for 1992 onwards under the new rules for grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mrs. Rumbold: Some 2,100 applications for project funding were received which was in excess of expectations. All applications had to be carefully scrutinised to see if they met the new criteria for funding. Decisions were notified to all applicants on 18 December.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on plans to keep younger prisoners serving custodial sentences in secure work camps.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have no such plans.

India (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his visit to India.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I made an official visit to India between 2 and 6 January, and to Pakistan on 7 and 8 January.

In India, I visited Delhi, where I had constructive discussions with the Indian Prime Minister, the Indian Home Affairs Minister, and the Indian External Affairs Minister. We discussed in particular the importance of co-operation between the Governments of the United Kingdom and India in combating terrorism. I stressed our commitment to the fight against terrorism, and to co-operation with India in this. I also took the opportunity to express our concern about human rights. I also discussed the desirability of concluding a bilateral agreement to enable co-operation in the tracing, freezing and confiscation of terrorist funds and the proceeds of serious crime, including drug trafficking. In addition, I discussed the suggestion by the Indian Government that the existing extradition arrangements should be replaced by an extradition treaty. I agreed that our experts should again consider this, while having proper regard to the practical and legal requirements.

In Delhi, I gave a speech at the Indian international centre, a copy of which I am placing in the Library. I also visited and formally opened the new high commission immigration building, and held useful discussions with staff working in the immigration section.

In Bombay I met the Chief Minister of Maharashtra, where I discussed immigration and drugs matters. I visited the police headquarters and the immigration section of the high commission, where I had useful discussions with staff and police officers.

In Islamabad, I had meetings with the President, the Interior Minister, and the Minister for Narcotics Control. The main focus of these discussions was the importance of international efforts to combat drug trafficking. I stressed that it was in the interests of both Governments to develop effective programmes to reduce the production of heroin, to break the supply chain and to reduce demand for drugs. I also had useful discussions with staff at the high commission concerned with the control of immigration and narcotics.

PRIME MINISTER

RECHAR

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will institute an official inquiry into the source of the leaked letter from the Secretary of State for the Environment to the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales referring to the RECHAR scheme.

The Prime Minister: Where it appears that classified documents may have been leaked, it is for the Secretary of State for the relevant Department concerned, in the first instance, to decide, in consultation with his officials, what inquiries need to be made.

Security Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the appointment of the new director of the Security Service.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 16 December 1991 that Mrs. Stella Rimington had been appointed as the new director general of the Security Service, in accordance with the provisions of the Security Service Act 1989.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what changes he intends to make in his policy for providing answers to questions from hon. Members on the Security Service;

(2) if he will make it his practice to give information in reply to parliamentary questions concerning the Security Service;

(3) if he will list changes made since 1987 in practice on providing answers to questions by hon. Members on the security services.

The Prime Minister: The functions of the Security Service and other statutory provisions were debated in Parliament during the passage of the Security Service Act 1989. The Government intend to continue the practice adopted by successive Governments of not disclosing information relating to the operation of the Security Service.

Roman Catholic Church (Recognition)

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Prime Minister whether, following the repeal in part XVI of schedule 1 to the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 1978 of section 24 of the Roman Catholic Relief Act 1829, he will now make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to accord the same degree of official recognition to the territorial sees and titles of the Roman Catholic Church in England and Wales as is accorded to the unestablished Anglican churches outside England.

The Prime Minister: This suggestion is currently being considered, and I will write to my hon. Friend about it as soon as possible.

Government of London

Mr. Gould: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to reply to the letter dated 22 October from the hon. Member for Dagenham concerning the government of London.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has replied on my behalf.

Government Achievements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to his reply, on Her Majesty's Government's achievements, to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 16 December, Official Report, column 22, he will set out (a) the cost of making this reply and (b) the failures of Her Majesty's Government over the same period.

The Prime Minister: My reply of 16 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge demonstrated a consistent record of success and achievement throughout 1991. The cost of that reply, based on the cost of staff and overheads in various departments involved in its compilation, and the printing costs, is estimated at £1,520.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has agreed to or authorised in respect of the annex 1 entitled "Reference in the treaty to European Parties", in the draft treaty on European Union; and when, and under what circumstance, the places and formulation of such reference will be determined.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 December 1991]: It is for the presidency to propose a precise formulation and place in the treaty for such a reference before signature.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will state which body or bodies will define which associations or foundations are deemed charitable, in respect of the declaration on co-operation with charitable associations in pursuing the objectives of either version of article 117 in the draft treaty on European union.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 December 1991]: Declarations by the inter-governmental conference have political rather than legal force, and the existing arrangements for defining charitable status are not affected. In the case of the United Kingdom, the competent body remains the Charity Commission.

Western Shoshone People

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will obtain for his office's library the 1989 report by the United States Congress Office of Technology Assessment to which reference is made in the letter by Ambassador Renwick to Chief Rowell of the Western Shoshone people.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 December 1991]: I have already done so.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the technical basis for the requirement for the United Kingdom to carry out tests from time to time to ensure the safety of the nuclear deterrent deployment by the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 December 1991]: It has not been the practice of this or previous Governments to give technical details of our nuclear test programme. Testing remains essential to ensure the effectiveness, safety and credibility of our independent nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken to co-ordinate the United Kingdom nuclear weapons deployment and development programme with Her Majesty's Government's commitments under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 December 1991]: For as long as our security depends upon the possession of nuclear weapons, the Government are committed to maintaining a minimum nuclear deterrent. This is entirely consistent with our commitments under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments, for what purposes, and at what cost, have used the services of Coopers and Lybrand since 1989.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 December 1991]: This information is not held centrally.

Lockerbie

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Libya about the Lockerbie bombing; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 December 1991]: The Libyans have issued various statements and indirect messages about the Lockerbie bombing. None of these provided a satisfactory response to the requests we made with our United States and French partners on 27 November.

Lt. Col. Partap Singh

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to answer the letter, dated 12 August 1991, from Lt. Col. Partap Singh (retired), president of the Khalsa Raj party; and if he will place a copy of his reply in the Library.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 December 1991]: My office has no record of receiving Lt. Col. Singh's letter.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Population Control

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the amounts of Overseas Development Administration grants to Population Services Family Planning Programme Ltd., Marie Stopes, for each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: The list of ODA grants to Marie Stopes International is as follows:

Years	Size of grant
1981-82	89,916
1982-83	71,424
1983-84	95,397
1985-86	11,265
1986-87	162,460
1987-88	99,739
1988-89	194,699
1989-90	520,520
1990-91	605,265

These grants do not represent general donations, but are provided in support of specifically agreed projects in developing countries.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the types of oral and injectable contraceptives provided under the United Nations fund for population activities as part of its health and family planning programme for Ghana.

Mrs. Chalker: The UNFPA's programme of contraceptive supply to Ghana provides Microgynon and Micronovum—orals—and Depo-Provera—injectable.

Road-Building Projects (Central African Republic)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Minister for Overseas Development has had from Dr. Alan Tye of the West African Ornithological Society in relation to the Dzanga-Sangha rainforest reserve and the Dzanga-Ndoki national park in the Central African Republic; and what is his policy on Government aid for road-building projects in such areas.

Mrs. Chalker: Dr. Tye has written to me about a rural development project in the Dzanga-Sangha rain forest reserve which was tentatively scheduled for presentation to the August 1991 session of the executive board of the African development bank.

I replied that the project had been withdrawn at the request of executive directors representing several non-regional members of the bank, including United Kingdom, until a comprehensive assessment of its environmental impact has been undertaken.

We would expect environmental and social impact assessments to be undertaken for road projects located in environmentally sensitive areas.

Latvia

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the items of assistance provided by Her Majesty's Government to Latvia since 1 January 1991.

Mrs. Chalker: The following projects have been initiated in the Baltic states, including Latvia, with funding from the know-how fund:

ENERGY

Petroleum Engineering Directorate

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when work on the independent inquiry into the cost effectiveness of relocating petroleum engineering directorate staff in Aberdeen will begin; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Treasury has produced a brief for the Government-ordered independent inquiry into the cost effectiveness of relocating civil servants from the petroleum engineering directorate in Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has drawn up a shortlist of firms from those which responded to my announcement and press advertisement. Six firms have been sent terms of reference agreed between the Treasury, Scottish Office and my Department, and they have been invited to tender for the review of the case for relocating the petroleum engineering directorate in Aberdeen. I shall announce who is to carry out the review when the consultant has been chosen.

Cold Weather Credits

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to meet representatives of the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no such plans.

Deep-mined Coal

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current level of deep-mined coal production in Britain; and how many people are employed in deep-mined coal production.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the most recent completed financial year, 1990-91, the British Coal Corporation produced 72·3 million tonnes of coal from deep mines. At the end of that financial year, in March 1991, the corporation had 61,351 industrial employees at its deep mines.

Privately owned mines, with licences to work coal underground, produced 1 million tonnes and employed 1,628 people.

British Coal

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will dismiss the chairman and board members of the British Coal Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Heating

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of household income is spent on heating by households in each income group.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is not possible to distinguish expenditure on fuel for heating from expenditure on fuel for other household uses. Data on total spending on fuel, light and power by households in 1990 as a proportion of total expenditure, analysed by income group, are:

Gross normal weekly income of household £	[1] Expenditure Per cent.
Under 60	11·8
60 and under 80	10·8
80 and under 100	9·6
100 and under 125	7·3
125 and under 150	6·5
150 and under 175	6·4
175 and under 225	5·5

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to increase funding of the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have nothing further to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 6 December 1991, at column 258.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to extend the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no plans to extend the energy efficiency measures offered under the home energy efficiency scheme at present.

Electricity Generation

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the cost to the domestic electricity consumer of the requirement for electricity generating companies to purchase their fuel from British Coal; and what is the difference between British Coal prices and the current world price for coal.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no requirement for electricity generating companies to purchase their fuel from British Coal. National Power and PowerGen currently have contracts with British Coal, in place until March 1993.

The average British Coal price in 1990-91 was £41·78 per tonne, compared to an average price of power station coal imported into the European Community of approximately £25 per tonne, for the same year.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on the future level of opencast mining in the Northumberland area.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The future level of opencast coal mining in Northumberland will depend on commercial decisions by operators and on the acceptability of new sites to the planning authorities.

EC Energy Policy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is (a) the direct and (b) the indirect effect of the agreement reached at the recent Joint European Energy and Environment meeting on European Communities energy policy on the United Kingdom (i) nuclear programme and (ii) renewable energy programme.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment explained on 17 December 1991, at columns 104 and 105, that the agreement reached at the recent joint session of the Energy and Environment Councils was to invite the European Commission to put forward formal proposals for measures to limit carbon dioxide emissions in the Community, including any necessary proposals for Community-wide taxation taking account of further studies and the conclusions of separate discussions by Finance Ministers. No such formal proposals have yet been made by the Commission. It is therefore premature to comment on the effect which any such proposals might have on the United Kingdom's nuclear and renewable energy programmes.

Dounreay Investigation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newport West on 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 17, he will set out the nature of the discrepancy under investigation at Dounreay nuclear power development establishment.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A report on the discrepancy has not been received to date.

Trawsfynydd

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when his Department became aware of the decision to downrate by 22 per cent. the Magnox reactor at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station, to enable operation to restart; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when his Department became aware of the new pressure temperature management regime at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement on safety.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The reactors at Trawsfynydd were shut down in February 1991 as a precautionary measure, to enable Nuclear Electric to review the situation with regard to the integrity of pressure vessel welds. Both reactors have remained shut down since then.

Discussions are continuing between Nuclear Electric and the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate on Nuclear Electric's safety case for a return to power of the reactors. Changes to the operating regimes of the reactors, which may or may not result in downrating, will form part of those discussions. The details of changes finally agreed prior to any return to operation will be a matter for Nuclear Electric and the NII.

There will be no question of a return to power of the Trawsfynydd reactors unless and until the NII is satisfied that an acceptable safety case has been made.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in strengthening the powers of inspection exercised by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A number of proposals for strengthening IAEA safeguards have been made by the EC and others. However, no firm decisions have yet been taken on these issues, which will need full reflection by the IAEA board and its member states. The next meeting of the board of governors, in February, will devote much of its time to safeguards issues.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sexual Offences

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of compensation was paid during the most recent year for which figures are available to (a) women and (b) children as a result of sexual offences.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is provided in the table.

Criminal injuries compensation paid as a result of sexual offences

	(i) 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991 £	(ii) 1 April 1991 to 17 November 1991 £
Women	583,510	234,089
Minors	327,943	352,122

Gas Pipelines

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which routes for a gas pipeline from Great Britain to Northern Ireland are presently under consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The route of any gas pipeline from Great Britain to Northern Ireland will largely be a matter for decision by the private sector interests laying that pipeline.

Water Pollution

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the water courses which contain leachate from dumps containing tarry wastes in the Londonderry area; and whether plant and animal life in such water courses appear to have been affected by such leachate by reference to the plant and animal life present upstream and downstream of the dumps.

Mr. Needham: No significant traces of leachate associated with tarry wastes have been found in water courses within catchments in the Londonderry area; nor is there any evidence of adverse effect on plant and animal life. However, studies of flora and fauna in these water courses are under way and additional monitoring is planned in 1992.

Immigration

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are estimated in each of the past 10 years to have (a) migrated from Great Britain into Northern Ireland and (b) emigrated from other countries into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Year	Migrated from Great Britain (a)	Emigrated from elsewhere (b)
1980-81	5,100	2,100
1981-82	4,400	1,600
1982-83	4,800	1,700
1983-84	5,200	2,800
1984-85	6,900	3,100
1985-86	8,000	3,900
1986-87	9,500	3,800
1987-88	9,500	4,200
1988-89	10,200	4,200
1989-90	10,800	4,300

Figures are derived from the mid-year estimates of population which cover the period 1 July in each year to 30 June in the following year.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated capital savings as a result of the present moratorium on new public expenditure on capital projects in Northern Ireland; how much of this saving is required as a result of expenditure on terrorist-related incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is anticipated that the temporary deferment of new capital contracts should provide sufficient resources to offset the imbalance between new demands and easements within the Northern Ireland block amounting to some £30 million. This figure represents the net effect of substantial numbers of adjustments to budgets, both increases and decreases, arising since the start of the financial year, of which security-related costs are only one element. Final decisions on the adjustments required will be taken in the context of the spring supplementary estimates which will be laid before the House in February and the details will be made available then.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate the respects in which the provisions in Northern Ireland for the disposal of fallen and diseased animals diverge from those applying in the European Community for (a) animal health and food hygiene and (b) the environment, with particular reference to the possible pollution of water resources through on-farm burial; and how it is monitored.

Mr. Hanley: Arrangements in Northern Ireland comply with European Community provisions for disposal of fallen and diseased animals. Meat inspection systems operated by the Department of Agriculture and by environmental health officers aim to eliminate any risk to food hygiene. The Department of the Environment (NI) monitors fresh and marine waters for compliance with EC directives relating to water pollution.

Infant Death

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 50, what pilot studies his Department is doing to test the feasibility of the proposals for the confidential inquiries into stillbirths and deaths in infancy set out in the report published on 2 July 1991; and whether the results of the pilot studies will be ready in time to be taken into account in finalising plans for the inquiries themselves.

Mr. Hanley: A national advisory body, on which Northern Ireland will be represented, is to be established to guide and oversee the confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy. There are no plans for pilot studies to be undertaken in Northern Ireland.

Public Spending Moratorium

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the capital projects planned for this financial year which are now postponed by the recently announced moratorium on public spending, indicating for each project the Department or public body concerned and the value of the contract.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not held centrally.

Housing Estate Heating Systems

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list contract commencement and completion dates and the contract price for installing new heating systems in (a) New Mossley housing estate, Newtownabbey and (b). Springfarm housing estate, Antrim.

Mr. Needham: The chief executive of the Housing Executive has advised me that the contract details for installing new heating systems in New Mossley and Springfarm are as follows:

	Start Date	Completion Date	Price £
Springfarm	March 1991	March 1992	834,316
New Mossley	March 1991	March 1992	1,298,627

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list contract commencement and completion dates and the contract price for replacing defective district heating mains pipework at the New Mossley housing estate in Newtownabbey.

Mr. Needham: The chief executive of the Housing Executive has advised me that the contract details for the replacement of defective district heating mains pipework at New Mossley were as follows:

Start Date	Completion Date	Price £
July 1985	November 1989	880,627

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the contract commencement and completion dates and the contract price for fitting new card operated district heating meters at (a) New Mossley housing estate, Newtownabbey and (b) Springfarm housing estate, Antrim.

Mr. Needham: The chief executive of the Housing Executive has advised me that the contract details for fitting new card operated district heating meters in New Mossley and Springfarm estates are as follows:

	Start date	Completion date	Price £
Springfarm	September 1988	February 1989	428,715
New Mossley	September 1988	February 1989	588,728

Northern Ireland International Airport

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if a pension fund actuarial valuation has been attributed to the employees of Northern Ireland international airport in preparation for privatisation; and if he will give the name of the actuary.

Mr. Needham: No pension fund actuarial valuation has yet been carried out.

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assurance he will give to employees of Northern Ireland international airport that their pension rights and expectations will be fully protected after privatisation.

Mr. Needham: Privatisation of Northern Ireland Airports Limited will not affect the pension rights and expectations of existing employees. If a new pension scheme were to be established in place of the existing scheme, it would be on terms that the benefits to be made available would be the same in all substantial respects as those presently enjoyed under current arrangements and any new scheme would receive the assets of the existing scheme.

Buses (Pollution)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to reduce exhaust pollution from public service vehicles by Ulsterbus and Citybus.

Mr. Needham: I am advised by the managing director of Ulsterbus and Citybus that, to reduce exhaust pollution, the companies' buses are powered by diesel, rather than petrol, engines; new buses are fitted with emission efficient engines, automatic gear boxes and speed limiters; and maintenance schedules include specific measures to reduce exhaust emissions.

Waste Incineration

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the tarry wastes arising from the production of acetylene gas at Maydown, Co. Londonderry, can be disposed of by incineration; and what research he has commissioned into the substances and chemicals which result when they are subjected to high temperatures.

Mr. Needham: I have not commissioned any research into the effects of incinerating these wastes but relevant work has been carried out elsewhere in the United Kingdom and internationally. Essentially, they are not incinerable without considerable pre-treatment. Official guidance on the topic was published in 1977, in a code of practice entitled "Tarry and distillation wastes and other chemical based residues"—waste management paper No. 13. A copy is in the Library.

A study will commence shortly into the scale and nature of the Tarry waste deposits in the north-west in order to determine the best practicable environmental option for their disposal and, if appropriate, the subsequent decontamination of the land on which they are situated. Should incineration be recommended further research may have to be commissioned to ensure that the full environmental significance of the process is understood.

Teenage Mothers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of illegitimate births born to teenage girls in each year since 1980 in each registry area, giving the age in years of the teenage mothers.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Local Government Pension Scheme

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the name of the present Northern Ireland local government officers' superannuation scheme pension fund adviser.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland local government officers' superannuation scheme pension fund is managed by two fund managers, Mercury Asset Management and Gartmore pension fund managers. The fund also invests directly in property and forestry and is advised in these respects by Mr. J. W. Burgess FRICS and Tilhill Economic Forestry Limited respectively.

Libyan Arms

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount estimated by the Government and the Government of the Irish Republic to be the total provision of Libyan arms and explosives to the IRA; and what amount of the IRA's Libyan arms and explosives cache have, to date, been (a) expended and (b) captured.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 17 December 1991]: Substantial quantities of Libyan arms and explosives reached the Provisional IRA in the mid-1980s. Their recovery has been the objective of a sustained programme of intensive searching by the Garda in the Republic of Ireland and by the police and Army in Northern Ireland.

This has had some success, although such arms and weapons continue to be used by PIRA in its terrorist campaigns. For operational reasons it would not be appropriate to give details of the amount of arms and explosives expended and recovered.

TRANSPORT

Traffic (Nottingham)

15. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about traffic in the Greater Nottingham area.

Mr. Chope: I have received a number of representations about transport strategy in Nottingham, including one from my hon. Friend which I discussed with him at a meeting last November.

Road Congestion

16. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the annual cost to British business of road congestion.

Mr. Chope: There are no reliable estimates of the annual cost of road congestion to British business, but the costs are clearly substantial.

Drink Driving

17. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the overall reduction since 1967 in the number of deaths in road crashes when at least one driver or rider was above the legal alcohol limit; and if he will publish the figures for each year.

Mr. Chope: Figures for each year since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Number
1979	1,790
1980	1,570
1981	1,540
1982	1,670
1983	1,200
1984	1,280
1985	1,130
1986	1,060
1987	980
1988	840
1989	870
1990	800

A13

18. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the division of responsibility between local and central Government on the development of the A13 and its approaches, with respect to the east end of London.

Mr. Chope: My Department has a major programme of works to the A13 trunk road to improve access to east London and docklands. The London Docklands development corporation has a complementary programme to provide new access roads within docklands. I have no plans to change the allocation of responsibility for the A13.

20. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what time scale he envisages work on the Mardyke-Wennington link of the A13 commencing.

Mr. Chope: I hope that the decision of the public inquiry will be announced in February, and subject to the completion of the statutory procedures, some advance work will commence in the autumn of this year.

M66

19. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the M66 from Denton to Middleton to be built and opened.

Mr. Chope: I expect work on the first construction contract at the northern end of the scheme to start towards the end of this year, subject to the successful outcome of the remaining statutory procedures. If all goes well, the new road could be open to traffic by 1997.

Exhaust Emissions

21. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to reduce harmful emissions from vehicle exhausts.

Mr. Chope: The Government are to introduce two new measures prescribing even stricter limits on emissions of gaseous pollutants and particulate matter from motor vehicles. The first will apply to all types of new petrol-engined cars and light vans from 31 December 1992. The second, which applies to new heavy diesels is a two-stage measure commencing on 1 October 1993, with a further reduction on 1 October 1996. These measures set ambitious targets with a challenging but industrially realistic timetable, putting the United Kingdom on a course for substantial longer-term progress in improving the quality of air in our towns and cities.

North Kent Rail Services

22. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on British Rail commuter services on the north Kent line.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are well aware that the quality of service on certain lines, including some of those running through Kent, is below what passengers can reasonably expect. However, an improvement scheme costing over £600 million is underway on Kent link lines. Improvements to Kent link services will be made with the introduction of new Networker trains from this May.

Rail Privatisation

23. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will next meet with the chairman of British Rail in order to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss a range of issues including privatisation.

Aircraft Noise

24. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses he has received to his Department's latest consultation paper on aircraft noise from small airfields; and when he expects to reach his conclusions thereon.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend had received 391 responses up to 31 December. Careful consideration will be given to the points which have been raised and we aim to reach conclusions during the first half of the year.

Channel Tunnel

25. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the commercial potential of the channel tunnel to the north-west.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have made no specific assessment, but I believe that the opportunities created by the channel tunnel for new rail links with the continent will be very beneficial to the north-west and to other parts of the country.

28. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Eurotunnel consortium management since the beginning of the new year on progress in completing the project and related matters.

Mr. Freeman: I hold discussions with Eurotunnel's management from time to time, but have not done so yet in 1992.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans exist for the Waterloo international terminal after the channel tunnel rail link has been completed;

(2) if he will estimate the amount of rail traffic using the Brockley-Nunhead line after the completion of the alternative route for the channel tunnel rail link;

(3) whether any householders living along the Brockley-Nunhead line have been contacted by British Rail about compensation or compulsory purchase;

(4) what plans there are to create additional tracks cutting into the embankment or gardens on the Brockley-Nunhead line.

Mr. Freeman: The Waterloo international passenger station will continue to take some international passenger trains after the channel tunnel rail link has been completed. One aspect of the current studies to refine the proposals for the new line is to consider how best to provide access from it to Waterloo. No conclusions have as yet been reached. There are no plans for widening the Brockley-Nunhead line and therefore the question of compensation or compulsory purchase does not arise.

Mrs. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans have been made to develop public transport systems which will serve the new Stratford terminal for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: There are extensive plans for improvements to public transport infrastructure that will benefit Stratford: the docklands light railway extension, the refurbishment of the Central line, the Jubilee line extension —Stratford to Green Park and beyond via Canary Wharf, London Bridge, Waterloo and Westminster—and the east-west crossrail from Stratford via Farringdon and Paddington to important towns west of London such as Aylesbury and Reading.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation he has had with the chairman of British Rail regarding the future of the channel tunnel rail freight terminal at Old Oak Common following the decision to route the main flow of channel tunnel rail traffic into central London via Stratford and Barking.

Mr. Freeman: Willesden—not Old Oak Common—and Stratford will be the two freight terminals serving London and the south-east when the channel tunnel opens. British Rail is currently considering, in close consultation with the Government, whether the proposed rail link between London and the tunnel should be used for freight. No decision has yet been made.

Bus Deregulation

26. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in deregulating London buses.

Mr. Freeman: Deregulation of bus services in London is a long-standing Government commitment. Progress towards this objective started in 1985 when London Transport initiated a programme of route tendering. In 1989, London Buses Limited was restructured into 12 smaller bus operating subsidiaries in readiness for the transition to a commercial bus market. Last year, the Government confirmed their intention to proceed with deregulation and privatisation. A Bill will be introduced as soon as possible after the next election. In preparation for that, I have initiated discussions with a number of groups with a direct interest in the future of bus services in London.

Rail Passengers Charter

27. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further plans he has for discussions with the directors of British Rail South East for the implementation of the citizens charter; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the development by British Rail of a passengers charter to ensure higher standards of service to rail passengers and to reduce train delays and cancellations.

Mr. Freeman: Discussions with British Rail about its passengers charter are well advanced. British Rail will publish its charter soon.

Community Transport

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received recently on community transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have not received any specific representations recently on community transport, but my Department is in close and regular touch with the Community Transport Association whose information and advice service we fund.

London Underground (Escalators and Lifts)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of escalators and lifts that were not working at London Underground stations on 7 January.

Mr. Freeman: On 7 January London Underground recorded that 35 of its 274 escalators were out or service.

Of these, six were withdrawn for replacement, 11 for planned maintenance and 18 as a result of defects. In addition, eight of its 68 lifts were out of service. Of these four are being replaced and four were defective.

King's Cross Underground Station

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the investment programme for London Transport for the period 1991-92 to 1994-95 announced on 6 November was set with London Underground's plans for the construction of a low level interchange at King's Cross underground station in mind; what plans London Underground has to proceed with this construction and against what proposed schedule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The grant settlement announced on 6 November took into account the totality of London Transport's investment plans. With the exceptions of the Jubilee line extension and east-west crossrail, the settlement did not earmark funds for specific projects. The apportionment of the settlement between the different subsidiaries is a matter for London Transport, and the timing of particular underground schemes is a matter for London Underground Ltd.

Coastguards

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the different geographical areas of responsibility of the various coastguard sector offices following the coastguard sector review.

Mr. McLoughlin: Her Majesty's coastguard coverage of the United Kingdom coastline is divided up into a total of six regions consisting of 21 districts, which are made up of sectors. Following the sector review, these sectors are as follows:

Aberdeen Region
1. Shetland District
   - Sullom Voe
   - Lerwick
2. Aberdeen District
   - Dornoch
   - Inverness
   - Moray West
   - Moray East
   - Peterhead
   - Aberdeen
   - Montrose
3. Pentland District
   - Pentland North
   - Pentland South
   - Thurso
   - Wick
4. Forth District
   - St. Andrews
   - Levan
   - Fisherrow
   - Eyemouth

Yarmouth Region
1. Tyne Tees District
   - Amble
   - Hartlepool
2. Humber District
   - Whitby
   - Scarborough
   - Flamborough
   - Hull
   - Cleethorpes
3. Yarmouth District
   - Hunstanton
   - Great Yarmouth

Dover Region
1. Thames District
   - Sandings
   - Tendring
   - Maldon
   - Southend
   - Medway
2. Dover District
   - East Kent
   - Rother
   - Eastbourne

Falmouth Region
1. Solent District
   - Wight
   - South Downs East
   - South Downs West
   - Chichester
   - Portsmouth
   - Southampton
2. Portland District
   - Poole
   - Swanage
   - Wyke
   - Lyme
3. Brixham District
   - Torbay
   - Kingsbridge
   - Tamar
   - St. Austell
4. Falmouth District
   - Carrick
   - St. Mary's
   - Land's End
   - Cambourne
   - North Cornwall

Swansea Region
1. Swansea District
   - Hartland
   - North Devon
   - Somerset
   - Avon
   - Gwent
   - Ogmore
   - Gower
2. Milford Haven District
   - Carmarthen
   - Milford Haven
   - Preseli
   - Cambrian
3. Holyhead District
   - Tremadoc
   - Dwyfor
   - Anglesey
   - Clwyd
4. Liverpool District
   - Merseyside
   - Fylde
   - South Cumbria
   - Solway
   - Kirkcudbright

Clyde Region
1. Belfast District
   - Belfast South
   - Belfast North
2. Clyde District
   - Galloway
   - Clyde
   - Kintyre
3. Oban District
   - Oban
   - Mull
   - Skye
4. Stornoway District
   - East Minch
   - Uist
   - Harris/Lewis

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of coastguard sector officers, the total number of auxiliary coastguards and the number of regular coastguard officers employed (a) in 1984 and (b) at present.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of coastguard sector officers, auxiliary coastguards, and regular coastguard officers employed in 1984 and at present are as follows. It should be noted that numbers of sector officers employed in 1984 were not compiled separately, but included within the much larger category of coastguard officer grade one, and as such a meaningful comparison with present figures cannot be made.

	1984	Present
Coastguard sector officers	N/A	99
Auxiliary coastguards	7,684	4,390
Regular coastguard officers (includes sector officers)	534	491

The reduction in numbers of auxiliary coastguards is largely due to the abolition in 1988 of breeches buoy companies and the introduction of search companies requiring fewer men. Reductions were made by natural wastage.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends to take to ensure that an effective coastguard service is maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Her Majesty's coastguard will continue to co-operate maritime search and rescue operations from its 21 modern and well-equipped maritime rescue co-ordination centres, and subcentres, supported by the local sector and auxiliary coastguard organisation around the coast.

Steps are constantly taken to ensure that an efficient and effective coastguard service is maintained through the introduction and use of up-to-date equipment and a modern communications network, in order to meet changing patterns in coastal activity. Such an example is the recently completed sector review, the outcome of which I announced in the House on 3 December 1991. This included inter alia the doubling of the number of pagers and portable radios to improve readiness and response, and formation of 68 new auxiliary coastguard companies at new locations around the coast to provide better coverage and enhance surveillance and intelligence-gathering capabilities.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the areas where there will be a reduction in the number of auxiliary coastguards as a result of the sector review.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is to be a reduction of 566 in the overall number of auxiliary coastguards around the United Kingdom coast. This reflects the transition from manning levels required for operation of breeches buoy equipment—now withdrawn from service—to smaller units dedicated to surveillance and intelligency-gatherinng which is now the primary role for auxiliary coastguards. This reduction in numbers will be spread over four years, and largely achieved by natural wastage.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will (a) give for each office full details of the proposed reduction in the number of coastguard sector offices and (b) list the coastguard sector offices whose designation will be suspended as a result of the coastguard sector review.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the recent coastguard sector review a reduction in the number of sector offices around the coast was proposed and accepted. In the main this will be achieved by the merging of old sectors to form fewer, new, renamed sectors in improved buildings which in some cases will accommodate two sector officers.

In total there is to be a reduction of 38 sector offices around the coast. Within each region these are as follows:

Region	Present	Proposed	Change
Aberden	18	12	−6
Yarmouth	16	7	−9
Dover	12	6	−6
Falmouth	23	16	−7
Swansea	21	19	−2
Clyde	18	10	−8
Totals	108	70	−38

Orange Badge Scheme

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to bring forward regulations amending the orange badge scheme; and when the new arrangements will be brought into force.

Mr. Chope: Amending regulations were placed before Parliament on 11 December 1991. They will come into effect on 2 March 1992.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the cost of research carried out by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory on leg protectors for motor cyclists; and what results have been obtained.

Mr. Chope: The cost of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory's research on motor cycle leg protection has averaged some £300,000 per year, in current prices, over the past 10 years. This should be set against the estimated current cost of motor cycling accidents at £654 million per year.

The research shows that properly designed leg protectors could eliminate or reduce the severity of at least 25 per cent. of leg injuries without increasing injuries to other parts of the body or to the head.

Continental Freight

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist for the dispersion of freight arriving from the continent to areas outside London.

Mr. Freeman: In general this is a matter for the freight distribution industry.

British Rail has announced plans to develop seven regional rail freight terminals outside London specifically to cater for European freight traffic when the channel tunnel opens next year. The sites chosen by BR are:

Cardiff
Birmingham
Wakefield
Trafford Park, Manchester

Seaforth Docks, Liverpool
Mossend, Lanarkshire
Wilton, Teesside

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the number or road accidents involving heavy goods vehicles in the last year.

Mr. Chope: The Department collects information only on accidents involving personal injury. In 1990, the last year for which information is available, there were 15,063 injury accidents involving at least one heavy goods vehicle, of which 791 were fatal accidents and 3,387 were serious accidents. More detailed statistics on heavy goods vehicle involvement in road accidents are published in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1990", a copy of which is in the Library.

Train Drivers (Alcohol Limits)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to bring forward proposals to make it a criminal offence to drive a train with a blood alcohol concentration of up to 80 mg/100ml.

Mr. Freeman: We have no current plans to do so. The Transport and Works Bill currently before the House provides for a criminal offence if certain prescribed persons, including train drivers, work on a transport system with blood alcohol concentrations exceeding 80 mg of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood. The proposed limits will be kept under review and the Bill provides for them to be amended by regulations. It will also be an offence under clause 28(1) for a train driver to work when he is unfit through drink, even if he is below the prescribed alcohol limit.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will bring in proposals for train drivers to be temporarily detained if their breath tests are positive.

Mr. Freeman: The provisions in the Transport and Works Bill reflect our view that the decision to reinstate a train driver to duty is best made by the operator rather than the police. There will be no question of operators allowing safety staff to return to duty while they are still under the influence of drink.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the proposed limits of alcohol for train drivers and those for drivers of motor vehicles.

Mr. Freeman: The alcohol concentration limits are prescribed in clause 39(2) of the Transport and Works Bill and in section 11(2) of the Road Traffic Act 1988, and are both as follows:

(a) 35 microgrammes of alcohol in 100 millilitres of breath,
(b) 80 milligrammes of alcohol in 100 millilitres of blood, or
(c) 107 milligrammes of alcohol in 100 millilitres of urine.

Drivers are also subject to employers' disciplinary codes.

Road Schemes (Environmental Assessment)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate at what stage during the preparation of a road scheme the advice of the Department of the Environment is sought regarding the need for, and the scope of, an environmental assessment; at what stage the decision is taken on whether the EC directive on environmental assessment is applicable; and how the decision on whether the EC directive applies is made public.

Mr. Chope: Environmental appraisal is an essential part of the development of all schemes. Advice is sought from the Department of the Environment, and statutory environmental organisations among others, from the earliest stages of route proposals. That advice is taken into account by the Secretary of State for Transport in making his decision on the need for, and scope of, an environmental statement before publication of draft line orders. A public notice is issued at this point.

Air Fares

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking following the European Commissioner's decision on the cases referred to recently by his Department in respect of the "double disapproval" arrangements on air fares.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Commission has announced that it has taken a decision on certain air fares which we referred to them under the current EC air fares regulation, but the formal decision has not yet been received and we shall need to study it carefully once we have it.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases have been referred to the European Commission by his Department under the "double disapproval" arrangements on air fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 106 fares have been referred to the Commission under the current EC air fares regulation.

Folkestone-Honiton Trunk Route

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many separate road schemes are contained within the Folkestone-Honiton trunk route; and whether this route falls within the EC directive on environmental assessment;

(2) if he will make a statement on the strategic impact of the Folkestone-Honiton trunk route.

Mr. Chope: The Folkestone-Honiton route is the only east-west trunk route across the south-east of the country south of the M25, and it forms an important access into the south-west. Traffic levels vary from section to section along the route. Proposals for individual improvement schemes are considered on their merits, and are designed to standards which reflect the forecast traffic flows for the particular sections concerned. The national roads programme currently includes 19 schemes for improvements to sections of the A259 and A27 between Folkestone and the M27 motorway, and another 14 schemes for sections of the A31 and A35 westwards from the M27 to Honiton. I announced on 8 January 1992 the addition to the programme of a scheme to increase the capacity of the M27 between junctions 4 and 12. The needs of the trunk road network are kept under constant review, and schemes may be added to the programme as needs are identified.

Directive 85/337/EEC applies to projects likely to have a significant effect on the environment. All schemes in the national programme are subject to full environmental appraisal. Environmental Statements have been or will be published where the environmental impact is judged to be significant within the terms of the EC directive.

M25 (Upgrading)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the proposed upgrading of the M25, and the provision of a collector-distributor road, will be considered within a single environmental statement.

Mr. Chope: No.

Road Schemes (Environmental Assessment)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road schemes contained in the current programme for which it has been agreed that the EC directive on environmental assessment applies.

Mr. Chope: All schemes in the national programme are subject to a very full environmental appraisal. An environmental statement will be produced for all schemes where the environmental impact is judged to be significant within the terms of the EC directive.

RENAVAL

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of his decision to proceed with the sale of the Tees and Hartlepool trust port on receipts from the RENAVAL programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Commissioner Millan announced on 5 April 1991 a RENAVAL programme for the districts of Langbaurgh-on-Tees and Middlesbrough. Applications for grant under this programme include projects in which the Tees and Hartlepool port authority proposed to participate, in anticipation of its being released from the restrictions imposed by its local trust port legislation, and the new company will inherit these proposals.

Speed Limits

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the interim report of the joint study into speed limits will be available; and which environmental bodies will be consulted in connection with this study.

Mr. Chope: The joint working party of officials from the Department and the County Surveyors Society on speed in villages is concerned primarily with developing technical measures for reducing vehicle speeds. It is planned to produce an interim report in April. This study is not a consultation exercise but we shall be consulting shortly on proposed revisions to departmental guidance on setting speed limits. The consultation document will be freely available.

High Speed Rail Network

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland officials have met to consider the proposals for a European high speed rail network prepared by the European Commission working group.

Mr. Freeman: A meeting took place last summer.

Marchioness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his written answer to the hon. Member for Battersea, 19 December, Official Report, column 237, what form the proposed inquiry into safety of vessels on rivers and inland waterways will take and under what statute; what incidents other than that concerning the Marchioness have been drawn to his attention; what is the name and qualifications of the expert adviser; and what are Mr. John Hayes's qualifications, other than legal, for conducting the inquiry.

Mr. McLoughlin: Mr. Hayes's inquiry is an independent investigation which is not bound by statutory provisions or procedures. The precise conduct and form of the inquiry is a matter for Mr. Hayes, but departmental papers are being made available to him and he will shortly be inviting views from interested parties.

So far, the following accidents on the River Thames have been specifically drawn to Mr. Hayes' attention by the Department:

Collision between	Date
Bowtrader and Hurlingham	18 October 1981
Shell Distributor and New Southern Belle	8 June 1983
Bowbelle and Pride of Greenwich	9 June 1983
Shell Distributor and Royalty	1 September 1983
Rosewood and John Marriott	14 September 1986
Vita and Fordson	29 September 1986

The expert adviser will be appointed shortly, and his name and qualifications will be announced at that time. Mr. Hayes will bring to the inquiry the important attributes of an independent mind and a distinguished record as a solicitor in local government.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what distinction he is making on the modified requirements in hull design and construction between vessels operating in tidal waters and those on shallow canals and non-tidal rivers of limited depth and width, consequent on the action he has taken in response to the report of his marine accident investigation branch into the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. McLoughlin: The modified requirements for hull design and construction which are being developed, in consultation with industry, will make a clear distinction between vessels operating in tidal waters, those operating in the sheltered non-tidal reaches of rivers operating on shallow rivers and canals. In general a higher standard of survivability, in the event of hull damage, will be required in tidal waters whilst other requirements will apply to vessels operating in shallow waters such as canals.

M25

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received recently about the M25.

Mr. Chope: We continue to receive many representations about the operation and the proposed widening of the M25.

Trans-Pennine Road Study

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that the Peak park joint planning board does not commence its review of the national park structure plan until the trans-Pennine road study findings are published.

Mr. Chope: I understand the review is already under way. It is for the board to decide what account it needs to take of our trans-Pennine study.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the findings of the trans-Pennine road study.

Mr. Chope: As soon as possible.

British Rail

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give, both for Scotland and the United Kingdom as a whole, the total investment in British Rail originating from (a) revenue, (b) asset disposals, (c) Government grants, (d) local authority grants, (e) EC grants and (f) borrowings.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's funding requirements for investment and losses over the period 1992-93 to 1994-95 are currently forecast at some £6·6 billion. Of this, nearly £4·4 billion—some two thirds—would be met from central Government grants and loans, with the remainder coming from passenger transport executive grants and internal sources. Particular sources of finance are not apportioned between investment and other expenditure.

Bypass Schemes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will postpone further consideration of the proposed bypass schemes for the A6 at Disley and A628 at Tintwistle until the production of the national park structure plan.

Mr. Chope: No. The Peak Park joint planning board is being consulted as these schemes are developed.

WALES

Public Bodies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those individuals, and emoluments where appropriate, of all those persons whom he has nominated to serve in more than one public body in Wales in the past four years.

Mr. David Hunt: The names of individuals nominated for public appointments are private and confidential. The information requested cannot therefore be given. However, the names of all those who currently hold public appointments for which I am responsible were provided in my answers to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 12 December 1991, and 19 December 1991, at columns 534-39 and 272-82.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any financial assistance other than the initial sum of £25,000 was given to Ysbyty Brongluis to assist in drawing up a trust status application and for associated purposes.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The hon. Gentleman is incorrect. To date, no financial assistance has been made available. However, the Welsh Office is prepared to consider on its merits any bid from prospective NHS trusts for a contribution towards the costs of preparing an application for NHS trust status.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any financial assistance other than the initial sum of £50,000 was given to Pembrokeshire health authority to assist in drawing up a trust application and for associated purposes.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply of 19 December, Official Report, columns 266-67, he will give the cost of the Adams report on the future of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools service in Wales; if he will detail the relevant previous career and consultancy experience of Ms. Adams in the field of education and the inspection thereof; and what was the competitive tendering procedure that led to her selection.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The cost of the report produced as part of my right hon. Friend's review of the role and organisation of HMI in Wales was £7,575. Mrs. Adams has had considerable experience as an administrative civil servant. As a former civil servant she is eligible to be employed without competition. She works for the Welsh Office from time to time on tasks appropriate to her experience when a permanent member of staff is not available.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 December, what policy considerations led to his decision to restrict the circulation of the contents of the Adams report on the future of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools service in Wales; and if he will now make arrangements for its early publication.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The consultant's report is one element in the much wider consideration my right hon. Friend is giving to the role and organisation of HMI in Wales, alongside other policy initiatives currently being pursued in the education field generally and in the area of inspections in particular. Given this, my right hon. Friend has concluded that it would not be appropriate to publish the report. The report is being taken fully into account in the review of HMI.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of Her Majesty's inspectors currently engaged to report on primary, secondary and further education in Wales; and what changes he proposes in these numbers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of HMI currently engaged in Wales is 58. Until my right hon. Friend has completed his consideration of the future role and structure of HMI in Wales, I am not in a position to say whether there will be any change in numbers. We hope to announce our conclusions shortly.

Heart Surgery

Mr Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many heart operations were carried out in each of the last four years in Wales.

Mr Nicholas Bennett: The most comprehensive information available centrally is that derived from hospital activity analysis individual patient records. The figures given in the following table are likely to understate the true position in that not all hospitals provide complete clinical details relating to patient discharges and deaths.

The figures include surgical operations and other procedures on the heart carried out in NHS hospitals in Wales. In particular, contrast radiology is included, where the figures for 1988, 1989 and 1990 are 136, 457 and 1,418 respectively.

The figures for the years 1988 to 1990 are based on OPCS 4th revision codes for surgical operations and procedures and are not strictly comparable to the 1987 figure which is based on the OPCS 3rd revision codes.

	Number of heart operations and procedures
1987	1,254
1988	1,408
1989	1,986
1990	3,083

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the secretary for Wales if he will make a statement concerning heart surgery in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Over £5 million will be made available over the next three years to enable the University hospital of Wales to perform 800 adult open heart operations each year with the associated level of cardiology. A further £2·5 million will be provided for the expansion of the hospital's paediatric cardiac unit which, when complete, will be equipped to undertake the full range of neonatal and infant cardiac surgery. Together, these developments will meet our objective of establishing the University hospital as a centre of excellence in the provision of cardiac services. Additionally, in 1992-93 further central funding of around £1·5 million will be made available to enable health authorities in south Wales to secure additional adult operations from other specialist centres.

I have also announced that an option appraisal will be undertaken to assess how the balance of our target of 1,200 adult open heart operations per annum can best be met.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his target figure for heart operations in Wales; and what measures he is taking to enable more heart operations to take place in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Our target remains to increase capacity for cardiac surgery in south Wales such that 1,200 adult open heart operations are performed each year supported by the appropriate levels of cardiology. On 18 December, I announced a £6·5 million package of measures, centres at the University hospital of Wales, to commence the next phase of that development. Furthermore, an additional £2.5 million is being provided to equip the paediatric cardiac unit at the University hospital over the next three years to undertake the full range of neonatal and paediatric cardiac surgery.

In north Wales, additional central funding has been made available to secure an appropriate level of cardiac services from specialist centres supplementing that already available to purchase services from Mersey regional health authority.

Nebulisers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place a copy in the Library of the recent letter from the director of the national health service in Wales to chairmen of the nine health authorities concerning charging for nebulisers.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. It is not appropriate that such letters written by officials should be placed in the Library of the House. However, all health authorities have confirmed that they will be providing equipment in accordance with the requirements of the NHS Act 1977 and have undertaken to investigate all cases where charges are alleged to have been made.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the board of the Development Board for Rural Wales first considered the payment to Dr Iain Skewis, the former chief executive, in respect of untaken leave; and on what date the payment was made.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that the basis of this payment was agreed in late February 1990 between the chairman of the development board and the then chief executive in the belief that it was covered by the latter's contract of employment and terms of service and did not require consideration by the board. Payment was made in March 1991 following Dr Skewis's retirement, and was reported to the board in connection with the 1990-91 accounts.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he proposes to make to recover the cash loss arising from the irregular payment of £15,563 to Dr Iain Skewis, the previous chief executive of the Development Board for Rural Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: A payment of £15,563 to Dr Skewis in compensation for untaken leave during his 13 years employment with the Development Board for Rural Wales was made by the board without the necessary authority from the Welsh Office and the Treasury. The payment was therefore irregular and the Comptroller and Auditor General has qualified his certificate on the board's accounts for 1991-92 accordingly. The board has been unable to enforce recovery or to obtain voluntary repayment of the sum. The Welsh Office, with Treasury agreement, has authorised the write-off of this expenditure as a cash loss.

Laying Hens

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to improve the welfare of laying hens in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be seeking the adoption of the highest standards practical for all laying hens when the existing Community legislation is reviewed next year. The Farm Animal Wefare Council has recently published a report on the welfare of laying hens in colony systems and this will be circulated for consultation with the industry and other interested parties.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of mortgage repossessions in the valleys communities which have been initiated by lenders of second mortgages which are not building societies or banks.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The data collected on repossessions do not distinguish between first or second mortgages or between building societies and banks or other lenders.

Child Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the percentage of children in (a) Wales and (b) each county in Wales for whom child care is provided from public funds between the age of three and school age.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on child care facilities provided or paid for by local authorities is contained in tables 11.1 and 11.2 of "Activities of Social Services Departments: Year ended 31/3/90", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Opera House, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the report he commissioned in January 1991 on the feasibility of the proposed opera house at the Pierhead, Cardiff, and his response to it.

Mr. David Hunt: I have now received the report of the feasibility study commissioned by the Cardiff Bay development corporation on the proposed opera house in Cardiff bay. It is my intention to publish the report, in due course, after I have completed my consideration of it.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the establishment of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools in Wales; and if he will make it his policy to preserve Her Majesty's inspectorate at or near its existing establishment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) on 10 December 1991, at column 405.

Hospital Construction, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to give approval in principle for the commencement of the new neighbourhood hospital on the site of the former St. David's hospital, Cowbridge road, east Cardiff; and on what date he anticipates that actual construction of the new hospital will start.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: South Glamorgan health authority is responsible for the preparation of an approval in principle submission for this scheme. A decision will be made in accordance with the usual procedures once a satisfactory submission is received. It will be for the health authority in the first instance to asses the priority to be accorded to this scheme in the light of its other bids for major capital.

Beef Exports

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the value of beef exports from Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the value of beef exports is not available separately for Wales. The value of beef exports from the United Kingdom in 1990 was about £233 million.

Hospital Provision (South Glamorgan)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify the contents of the strategic review of hospital provision in South Glamorgan to be undertaken in association with Mid Glamorgan health authority and the University of Wales, College of Medicine, its expected date of completion, the consultants appointed and its terms of reference.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The review is a matter for the two health authorities and the University of Wales College of Medicine and requests for futher details should be directed to them.

Hormone Replacement

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list preparations currently in use in hormone replacement treatment in which two or more drugs are currently packaged as one item together with the proportion of prescriptions (a) in Wales and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area in Wales which specified (i) both or all the constitutent items and (ii) only one of the constituent items in each of the past five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The preparations currently used in hormone replacement treatment in which two or more drugs are packaged together are as follows:

Cyclo-Progynova
Estrapak 50
Trisequens
Trisequens Forte
Prempak-C
Nuvelle
Syntex Menophase

Information is not available on the proportion of prescriptions on which specify both or one of the drugs involved.

University of Wales college, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects a conclusion to the discussions proceeding with the University of Wales college at Cardiff regarding the college's development proposals referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West dated 16 December 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The discussions are primarily a matter for the University of Wales college of Cardiff and the other principal parties, including South Glamorgan county council, Cardiff Bay development corporation and Tarmac Atlantic Wharf Developments.

Hospitals (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present procedure for giving approval in principle to hospital capital expenditure projects; how it will alter after 1 April; and whether he proposes any transitional arrangements to projects currently in the pipeline.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under current management arrangements for the NHS in Wales, district health authorities are responsible for the management and control of health building schemes. In exercising this control, they are required to follow Capricode which provides the mandatory procedural framework for processing NHS capital building schemes. Under these procedures any scheme with a works' cost of £4 million and over requires Welsh Office approval in principle before the authority can proceed with its further planning and design. These procedures will continue in force after 1 April 1992.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on how the new capital allocation system for hospital projects in Wales will work from 1 April with particular regard to capital projects connected with hospital closure proposals he has already statutorily approved.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend will be announcing details of both capital and revenue allocations to district health authorities for 1992-93 later this month. At the same time, authorities will receive a paper summarising the new capital allocation and management arrangements on which they have already been consulted. I will ensure that a copy of this paper is placed in the Library of the House when it has issued.

Teachers' Retirement

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers retired from the local education authorities in Wales in 1989; and how many of them took early retirement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 940 full-time teachers in maintained nursery, primary, and secondary schools in Wales retired between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989. Of these, 706 were below the age of 60. It is not possible without undue cost to determine the exact number that took early retirement.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many replies he received by 1 January to the groundwater consultation exercise following on the Hydrotechnica report on the side-effects of the Cardiff bay barrage; and when he expects Mr. Roy Stoner to complete his report on the groundwater consultation.

Mr. David Hunt: By 1 January 1992 a total of 140 representations to the groundwater consultation exercise had been received. I expect Mr. Stoner to complete his report as soon after the end of the consultation period as is consistent with the proper consideration of all the issues raised.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the items currently in common use by GPs or consultants for which more than one prescription charge is made under current legislation and regulations but which are currently packaged as one item by the manufacturers.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed, unless the patient is exempt. In the case of items supplied in a combination pack, therefore, each separate item carries a separate prescription charge. The fact that for convenience two or more individual preparations may be supplied in one pack does not alter the patient's liability for prescription charges.

Unless a patient is otherwise exempt, or holds a valid pre-payment certificate, the following items in common use attract more than one prescription charge when supplied against a NHS prescription.

Betadine Pessaries with applicator and VC Kit
Betadine Vaginal Gel with applicator and VC Kit
Canesten Duopak
Cyclo-Progynova Combination Pack Tablets
Daktarin Twin Pack
Diprosone Duopack
Ecostatin Twin Pack
Estrapak 50
Flagyl Compak
Gyno-Daktarin Combipack
Gyno-Pevaryl 1 CP Pack
Gyno-Pevaryl 150 Combipack
Lasix + K Combination Pack Tablets
Migraleve Tablets Duo Pack
Migralift Tablets Duo Pack
Napratec Combination Pack
Nuvelle Tablets
Nystan Triple Pack
Pabrinex Intramuscular High Potency
Pabrinex Intramuscular Maintenance
Pabrinex Intravenous High Potency
Parentrovite Intramuscular High Potency
Parentrovite Intramuscular Maintenance
Parentrovite Intravenous High Potency
Pranavite Slim Diet Plan
Prempak-C Combination Pack Tablets 0·625 mg
Prompak-C Combination Pack Tablets 1·25 mg
Syntex Menophase Combination Pack Tablets
Trisequens Combination Pack Tablets
Trisequens Forte Combination Pack Tablets
Uvistat Pro-Ski Pack

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy for the proposed administrative arrangements for the identification and collection of payments and disbursements via the Child Support Agency in Wales from 1 April.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

From 1 April 1992, a child support unit will be established to take over the existing administration of child maintenance collections and payments from the Social Security Benefits Agency, prior to the introduction of the Child Support Agency from April 1993. The agency will introduce a new system for the assessment, collection and enforcement of child maintenance to all families for whom maintenance is an issue. Administration of the system will be carried out by staff based in social security offices, who will provide a local service to customers. Work that does not require face to face contact with customers will be carried out in six centres to be based in Belfast, Birkenhead, Dudley, Falkirk, Hastings and Plymouth.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

New Members

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what preparations have been made for induction courses for new Members after the general election; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: As far as the authorities of the House are concerned, no induction courses for new Members are planned. It is not known what arrangements are being made by individual political parties; and that is a matter for them.

The Administration Committee and the authorities of the House are, however, preparing a handbook giving guidance to new Members on such things as the work and responsibilities of individual departments of the House asnd the general services at Member's disposal. That handbook will be issued to all Members returned after the general election and is designed to allow a section prepared by individual political parties to be included.

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Hoyle: To answer the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 11 November 1991, Official Report, column 463, what was the total cost of the new building in Parliament street; and what was the cost of providing the 32 offices in the Palace.

Mr. MacGregor: The final account for the construction of the new building in Parliament street is still being discussed with the contractor so it is not possible yet to give the total cost. Expenditure to date, however, including furnishings, fittings and consultants fees, charged to the parliamentary works programme is £32·309 million.

Work on the main scheme to provide the additional offices in the Palace—the conversion of the former residences of the Serjeant at Arms, Deputy Serjeant at Arms and the Speaker's Secretary—is not scheduled for completion until later this year. The estimated cost of the scheme, and of the conversion of the two officekeepers' flats, the Clerks' Bedroom on Upper Committee Corridor (North), and former Library accommodation on the North Curtain, again including furniture, fittings and consultants fees, is £2·028 million.

DEFENCE

NAAFI

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 58, on President of the Service Institute and President of the Regiment Institute shops, what steps he is taking to investigate the selling of goods in PSI and PRI shops in competition with NAAFI.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The decision as to what goods can be sold in President of the Service Institute or President of the Regiment Institute shops rests with commanding officers who are aware that competition with NAAFI is not permitted. There are well-established channels through which NAAFI managers may raise any concerns they may have about the trading activities of PSI or PRI shops.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 58, relating to NAAFI, if he will list which recommendations have been implemented; what others are being considered; and what is the proposed time scale for implementation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The scrutiny made a number of detailed recommendations concerning the commercial management of NAAFI business. While it has been possible to implement some—for instance, on price lists and discounts—the effect of "Britain's Defence for the Nineties" changes are such that the full effect on NAAFI needs to be analysed before it will be possible to take action on some of the remainder. It is hoped that the position will be clearer later this year. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will then write to the hon. Member.

Army Regiments

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if will list the total service personnel strength of the regiments currently recruited in Scotland and the anticipated full strength numbers of the 10 regiments to be in existence after restructuring on a regimental basis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

HMS Challenger

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current lay-up costs of HMS Challenger pending its sale.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The identifiable additional costs associated with HMS Challenger's berthing at Portsmouth naval base since her decommissioning are negligible.

Unused Sleeping Accommodation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites in Greater London where there is unused sleeping accommodation in the control of his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Spearhead Battalion

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions over the past five years spearhead battalion has been deployed during its tour of duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The battalion on a spearhead tour of duty has been deployed once in the last five years. Other battalions have also been deployed during this period to meet various short notice requirements when they were considered to be best suited to undertake the task.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution the American Government have made towards the cost in each of the past five years to date of providing (a) external and (b) internal security at Menwith Hill Station, north Yorkshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Security at Menwith Hill Station is the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence Police, but the majority of the costs are reimbursed by the United States.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who employs the civilian patrolmen deployed at Menwith Hill.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The small number of civilian patrolmen working at Menwith Hill Station are Ministry of Defence employees. They are engaged on general duties, and are not responsible for station security.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many people, in each of the last five years, to date, have been arrested at Menwith Hill and Hunter's Stone Tower for byelaw offences; how many have been reported for summons process; and how many people have been (a) convicted and (b) had summonses dismissed by the courts;

(2) how many complaints have been lodged, in each at the last five years, to date, against Ministry of Defence police officers serving at Menwith Hill; how many such complaints have been (a) rejected and (b) upheld; and what disciplinary action was taken in respect of officers against whom complaints were upheld;

(3) who issued instructions not to arrest peace campaigners for breaches of byelaws at Menwith Hill Station; and on what date they were issued.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what powers American military personnel at Menwith Hill are permitted to carry weapons; and in what circumstances such personnel are permitted to fire their weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United States personnel at Menwith Hill Station do not carry firearms.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals he has to improve protection for occupational pensioners against improper use of the assets of the pension funds of which they are beneficiaries;

(2) what proposals he has to improve protection for occupational pensioners against improper use by companies and their directors of the assets of pension funds.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December 1991 at columns 374-75.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to bring forward legislation to prevent the misuse of occupational pension funds; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 9 December 1991]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December 1991 at columns 374-75.

Pension Fund

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what restrictions at present exist on a company's employees acting as trustees of its pension fund; whether he plans any changes; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The trust deed under which an occupational pension scheme is set up will specify who will be the trustees of the scheme and how they will be appointed. There is nothing to prevent employees of the company being included.

Disability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that claim packs for the disability living allowance will be available in bulk to all agencies who advise persons with a disability.

Mr. Scott: We have arranged that all citizen's advice bureaux will receive stocks of a version of the disability living allowance claim pack. In addition, we intend to arrange distribution of these packs to welfare rights organisations, and other groups advising disabled people, who ask for them.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that reviews will not be made by adjudication officers based on medical evidence obtained over the period 1992 to 1993 arising from the transfer of attendance allowance and mobility allowance claims to disability living allowance claims.

Mr. Scott: The transfer of existing attendance allowance and mobility allowance awards to their equivalent levels in disability living allowance will be automatic, without review. No medical evidence will be sought to confirm the validity of an existing award.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the date of claim for the new disability working allowance will be the date on which the coupon is sent in, or the date of despatch of the claim form.

Mr. Scott: Claim packs for disability working allowance will be widely available in post offices, social security offices, jobcentres and advice centres. Therefore, in common with most other benefits, the date of claim will be the date the claim is recieved in an office of the Department of Social Security or Department of Employment.

Newcastle Office

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently employed in the DSS at Newcastle; and what number are expected to be transferred to other departments.

Miss Widdecombe: At 30 September 1991, the Department and its agencies employed about 14,000 people in the Newcastle area. As part of normal career progression 22 staff transferred to other Government Departments in the period 31 March 1991 to 30 September 1991, and similar numbers can be expected to transfer in the future.

Councillors (Attendance Allowances)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what authority local concillors' attendance allowances are treated as earned income for benefit purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The definition of "employed earner" in section 2(1)(a) of the Social Security Act 1975 includes a person who is gainfully employed in an elected office with emoluments chargeable to income tax under schedule E.

EC Social Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those items agreed at Maastricht which have implications for policy on or administration of social security.

Mr. Jack: No changes to the treaty of Rome were agreed at Maastricht affecting the European Community's powers in relation to social security. A protocol to article 119 was agreed clarifying the Barber judgment.

Social Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all those offices that have had additional sums allocated to their social fund budgets this financial year; and the dates the new allocations were made.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is available in the Library.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the total numbers who have received cold weather payments; and if he will make a statement on the operation of the automatic scheme.

Mr. Scott: Under the improved arrangements for cold weather payments introduced in November, 1,424,671 people have received cold weather payments so far this winter.

Income Support

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the total number of items which can now be directly debited from income support prior to claimants' receipt of the benefit; and if he will list the date of implementation of each item.

Miss Widdecombe: The items which may be deducted at source in prescribed circumstances from income support are as follows:

(a) Housing costs.
(b) Residential care, nursing home and Polish resettlement home fees.
(c) Rent arrears and service charges paid with rent.
(d) Hostel service charges.
(e) Fuel charges (electricity and gas).
(f) Water charges.
(g) Community Charge arrears.
(h) Social Fund loan repayments.
(i) Overpayment recovery.

Not all these deductions can apply in a single case. There are ceilings on the amounts that can be deducted for debts. With the exception of those for social fund and community charge, all deductions listed were carried forward from the supplementary benefit scheme, when it was replaced by income support in April 1988. The social fund scheme was introduced from April 1988, while community charge deductions were introduced firstly in Scotland from April 1989, and England and Wales from April 1990.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (i) the numbers of claimants of income support, (ii) their partners, and (iii) their dependants for each of the last six months of 1991; and what numbers and percentages were liable to deductions of benefit for (a) social fund loan repayments, (b) poll tax arrears, (c) fuel arrears, (d) rent arrears, and (e) water charge arrears.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is in the table. Monthly figures and those for partners and dependants could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Water charges	83,964	(1·70)	98,835	(2·00)

Notes:

1. The figures used are based on the DSS Management Information Statistics collected at the end of August and November 1991. These figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.
2. The social fund figures are based on the number of people making repayments over the whole of August and November and not at the end of the statistical month. It is not possible to exclude from the figures repayments made by people not in receipt of income support.
3. The information for rent arrears and service charges, fuel, and water includes cases where a deduction is being made for current charges only.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the official engagements of each Minister in his Department for Wednesday 18 September 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: Those Ministers available on that day each had a number of meetings about a variety of subjects.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether it is his Department's policy to pass on correspondence received from a member of the public to the hon. Member in whose constituency the person resides.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not our policy to do so. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, perhaps he would like to write to me.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 December, Official Report, column 89-90, if he will give the rates of disablement gratuities and pensions since 1979, at 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Scott: The rates of disablement gratuities and pensions since 1979 at 1991-92 prices are shown in the table.

Column A refers to the equivalent value of benefit at April 1991 prices at the date of annual uprating.

Column B refers to the average real value of benefit at April 1991 prices and calculated over the period between the uprating dates.

DNA Testing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any proposals for the use of DNA testing in the identification of responsible fathers for maintenance payments in the work of the Child Support Agency from 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Jack: Under the provisions of the Child Support Act 1991, the resolution of disputes about alleged paternity will remain a matter for the courts when the Child Support Agency comes into operation in 1993.

Family Expenditure

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been in percentage terms, the proportion of the gross income of a family on average earnings of husband, wife, and two children aged five and 10, and living in a council house, for each year since 1979, that was needed for (a) rent of the council house, after allowing for housing benefit, (b) rates and community charge, allowing for any rate rebate or community charge benefit, (c) income tax, (d) national insurance contributions and (e) water and sewerage rates.

Mr Jack [holding answer 16 December 1991]: The figures in the table are for a standard tax benefit model family with children aged four and six. Although they are unlikely to be much—if at all—different, figures for the family type specified could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost.

It is not possible to include figures for water and sewerage charges as some local authorities include sewerage charges in their rates/community charge while others do not.

HEALTH

Health Service Refund Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlie his respective policies in respect of the inclusion or otherwise in the health benefits low income scheme of refunds of (a) dental charges, (b) prescription charges and (c) optical charges, other than the hospital eye service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's policy on NHS charges is that those who can afford to contribute towards their treatment costs should do so whilst those who may have difficulty in paying should be protected. Extensive exemption arrangements on grounds of health or status are underpinned by the NHS low income scheme. The review of the administration of the low income scheme has re-examined the existing arrangements for charge remission including the availability of refunds.

Maternity Services

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 102, what progress his Department is making with improving the quality of the maternity hospital episode system; and whether the information requested will be available in respect of the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) whether reliable information about method of onset of labour, method of delivery, use of anaesthetic for labour and delivery, the place of delivery and the person conducting the delivery, will be available for deliveries to residents of NHS regions and districts in the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is too early to make a precise assessment of maternity hospital episode statistics (HES) coverage in 1990-91, but indications are that about 70 per cent. of birth episodes and 60 per cent. of delivery episodes will be covered. Until the data are finalised, processed, and examined in depth, it will not be possible to comment on the quality and completeness of the data in these records, or to tell whether the specific information requested will be available.

The NHS management executive monitors the data provided by regional health authorities and regularly meets with regional directors of information to discuss the quality of the data. The difficulties surrounding the completeness of maternity data have been identified as a priority. This initiative has resulted in real improvements in most regions. Work has now been successfully completed in the area of linking maternity to other systems and an improvement will be evident when 1991-92 data are available.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the numbers of women resident in (a) Dacorum local government district and (b) St. Albans local government district who gave birth in 1990 in (i) St. Albans City hospital, (ii) Luton and Dunstable hospital, (iii) Queen Elizabeth II hospital, Welwyn Garden City, (iv) Watford General hospital, (v) Royal Buckinghamshire hospital, (vi) RAF Halton maternity unit, (vii) other hospitals, (viii) at home and (ix) elsewhere.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Infant Deaths

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, columns 183-84, what pilot studies his Department is doing to test the feasibility of the proposals for the confidential inquiries into stillbirths and deaths in infancy set out in the report published on 2 July 1991; and whether the results of the pilot studies will be ready in time to be taken into account in finalising plans for the inquiries themselves.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The working group on confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy, set up by the Chief Medical Officer, gave advice about how the enquiry should proceed. That advice was based on experience gained from numerous locally based enquiries and did not recommend pilot studies.

Link System for the Deaf

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement about the device known as the Link, details of which have been sent to the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People;

(2) if he will consult with the organisations of and for the deaf and hard-of-hearing about ways of making the device known as the Link as widely available as possible to people who can benefit from the new aid.

Mr. Dorrell: We are always pleased to learn of new equipment coming on to the market which has the potential to assist people who have disabilities. It would not, however, be appropriate for the Department to promote this or other individual products. It is open to the manufacturer of the Link device to consult consumer organisations about ways in which to promote it.

Tobacco

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the European Commission's proposal for a total ban on tobacco advertising in the European Community.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government consider the proposed EC directive on tobacco advertising is unnecessary for completion of the single market. It believes the present voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry on advertising and promotion provide an effective system of controls. There are other tobacco related issues in the Community which deserve a higher priority than advertising, in particular the need to cut back support progressively for tobacco growing under the common agricultural policy.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when children's playgrounds will be included in voluntary agreements on tobacco advertising.

Mr. Dorrell: Children's playgrounds were included in the provisions of the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising and promotion published on 9 September 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the Government's assessment of the effects of the banning of tobacco advertising in Canada.

Mr. Dorrell: The effects of the ban are not clear. Steep rises in the real prices of cigarettes in Canada account for most of the decrease in consumption.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has consulted with the Government of the Netherlands on the report issued regarding their voluntary agreements on the advertising of tobacco.

Mr. Dorrell: No. We have not yet seen a copy of this report.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 11 November, Official Report, column 408, about organ transplants, if he will make a statement about the meetings between the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority and members of the medical profession about improving the distribution of organs as effectively and equitably as possible among the health regions.

Mr. Dorrell: The United Kingdom transplant support service authority has set up a number of professional groups to advise it on a number of matters concerned with the transplantation of different organs. The first meetings of some of these advisory groups have already taken place. Advice they gave is being taken into account in running the national organ distribution system.

Community Care

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to set national standards for community care;

(2) if he will extend the principle of the citizens charter to include the setting of national standards for community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for individual authorities to set standards on the service which should be provided. Extensive national guidance and advice is available to help them do this.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors will be taken into consideration in deciding the level of funding for community care in each local authority area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be for each local authority to decide the appropriate level of funding for community care in its area, taking account of the available resources. The Government will take a view in the next local authority expenditure round of what is appropriate and affordable for the totality of local authority expenditure, having obtained the views of the local authority associations. This will include the sums to be transferred from the social security system to local authorities for community care. The White Paper, "Caring for people", set out the factors which will be taken into account in calculating those sums. Each social services authority receives a standard spending assessment (SSA) for personal social services comprising three separate elements namely services for children, the elderly and other adults. The way in which SSAs are currently calculated, including the factors taken into account, is set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England), a copy of which is available in the Library. The Government will shortly be having formal discussions with the local authority associations on whether any changes will be needed to the method of calculation of SSAs to take account of local authorities' new responsibilities for community care.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to make available ring-fenced funds for community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Presciption Charges

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage change in the level of prescription charges between 1979 and 1991.

Mrs Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 5 November at column 99.

Health Authority Membership

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names, occupations and addresses of the chairmen and members of (a) the Northern regional health authority, (b) Sunderland health authority, (c) Hartlepool health authority and (d) Durham health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The names of the chairman and members of the Northern regional health authority, and the chairmen of Sunderland, Hartlepool and Durham health authorities, are given in the table. Information concerning district health authority members may be obtained from the regional health authority. Up-to-date information about the occupations of health authority chairmen and members is not held centrally.

It is not our policy to give the private addresses of members of health authorities.

Northern RHA
Chairman: Mr. P. D. Carr CBE.
Non-executive members: Mr. A. G. Brown, Prof. Rawlins, Mr. P. H. Reay, Mr. B. C. Spoor (and one vacancy); Executive members: Prof. L. J. Donaldson, Mr. A. Doran, Mr. T. G. Smith.

Sunderland HA
Chairman: Mr. F. S. Cronin.

Hartlepool HA
Chairman: Cllr. Mr. B. Hanson OBE.

Durham HA
Chairman: Prof. J. I. Clarke JP.

Cancer

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will obtain a copy of the report entitled "From the Billboard to the Playground" published by the Cancer Research Campaign on the effect advertising has on children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that a copy of this report was sent to every Member of the House.

Private Medical Insurance

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the percentage of the privately insured population who also use national health service facilities for the majority of their hospital stays.

Mr. Dorrell: No such estimate has been made.

Nurses' Grading

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the policies of Her Majesty's Government on regrading for nurses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A new grading structure for clinical nursing and midwifery staff was agreed by the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council (NMNC) in 1988, and staff were regraded on the basis of the new structure. Appeals against regrading decisions are being dealt with under agreed procedures, and the NMNC is currently considering whether any changes can be made to those procedures in order to expedite the hearing of appeals. I understand that the management side of the NMNC has no current plans to propose any changes to the grading structure itself.

Operating Theatre Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the ratio of trained theatre staff to patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available centrally in the format requested.

The number of trained theatre staff for whom information is held is shown in the table. The provisional number of in-patient and day cases treated in hospitals in 1990-91 (finished consultant episodes) for all acute specialities was 7,014,000.

HIV and AIDS

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions the Chief Medical Officer has given port medical inspectors with regard to incoming foreigners who have, or are suspected of having, HIV or AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department reissued guidance to port medical inspectors of health in the form of an executive letter (PL/CMO(91)15) in October 1991. A copy of which is available in the Library.

The guidance provides information for port medical inspectors of health on the action to take should the immigration service ask for a report upon a passenger seeking entry to the United Kingdom who has, or is suspected to have, AIDS or other illnesses associated with HIV infection.

The guidance informs port medical inspectors of health that HIV infection (including AIDS) should not in itself be considered justification for a recommendation on public health grounds to refuse leave to enter the United Kingdom. It provides information on how the National Health Service (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Amendment Regulations 1988 apply to HIV and AIDS services. It seeks to ensure that confidentiality is maintained where a passenger with HIV infection is referred to a port medical inspector.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the conclusion of his Department's report on AIDS and life insurance on whether people are deterred from having an HIV test or counselling by the nature of the questions asked by life insurance companies on proposal forms; what representations he has made to the life insurance companies on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs Virginia Bottomley: The report by the British Market Research Bureau jointly commissioned by the Government and the Association of British Insurers, concluded that thousands and possibly tens of thousands of people were put off taking an HIV test because of the questions on insurance proposal forms. We recognise that the insurance industry requires information for risk assessment, but believe that this can be obtained in ways which do not deter people from seeking testing or help. Discussion of this important matter is continuing with the Association of British Insurers.

Teenage Mothers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year from 1980 to 1990 the number of illegitimate births by year to teenage mothers by age.

Mr. Dorrell: The numbers of births outside marriage to women aged 19 and under in the United Kingdom for the years 1980-1990 were as follows:

	Age of mother at birth
Year	15 and under	16	17	18	19	Total under 20
1980	1,418	3,527	7,040	8,553	8,544	29,082
1981	1,276	3,668	6,808	9,056	8,943	29,751
1982	1,306	3,628	7,607	9,719	10,249	32,509
1983	1,397	3,807	7,715	10,212	11,243	34,374
1984	1,469	4,059	8,529	11,156	12,303	37,516
1985	1,544	4,408	9,328	12,719	13,829	41,828
1986	1,517	4,442	9,907	13,840	15,345	45,051
1987	1,458	4,622	10,099	14,906	16,655	47,740
1988	1,444	4,764	11,018	15,355	18,034	50,615
1989	1,472	4,549	10,417	15,435	17,502	49,375

Artificial Sweeteners

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of adverse reactions to the artificial sweetener Aspartame have been reported by Nutrasweet since 1983.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Nutrasweet company has submitted to this Department anecdotal complaints from consumers in the United Kingdom of adverse reactions to the artificial sweetener Aspartame on a quarterly basis since the end of 1988.

Nineteen complaints have been received. The symptoms reported by UK consumers are generally mild in nature and range from sickness and headache to depression, all of which are common in the general population.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the official engagements for each Minister in his Department for Wednesday 18 September 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Two of the Department's Ministers were on holiday that day. The other two had a number of official engagements.

Birth Control

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of the three pilot studies set up in 1986 to evaluate voluntary organisations such as the Brook advisory centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department financed three family planning and pregnancy counselling projects for young people under 25 in three separate health districts. The aim of the projects was to help to reduce the risk of unwanted pregnancy among young people. The projects were independently evaluated by the Policy Studies Institute (PSI) and a report of the findings was published in November 1991. The report titled "Family Planning and Pregnancy Counselling Projects for Young People" provides a valuable contribution to the current family planning debate. Copies are available in the Library.

NHS Trusts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research was instituted by Her Majesty's Government before they introduced hospital trusts and other reforms within the national health service review.

Mr. Dorrell: Since the publication of the White Paper "Working for Patients" in January 1989, there has been considerable work going on throughout the national health service to develop all the proposals contained in it into practical actions. We have always made clear that in implementing the reforms we are aiming for steady incremental progress over a number of years, informed by the lessons of experience.

Accidental Injury

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people die on average, per day, from accidental injury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1990, the latest year available, there were recorded 9,848 accidental deaths due to injuries in England and Wales (excluding accidental poisoning and surgical and medical misadventures). This represents, on average, 27 deaths per day.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the number of vehicles and staff available for 999 calls in the London ambulance service for the period 1 October to 31 December 1991, per shift.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. James Harris, the chairman of the London ambulance service for details.

Hormone Replacement

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for health if he will list preparations currently in use in hormone replacement treatment in which two or more drugs are currently packaged as one item together with the proportion of prescriptions (a) in England and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area which specified (i) both or all the constituent items and (ii) only one of the constituent items in each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The preparations currently used in hormone replacement treatment in which two or more drugs are packaged as one item are given in the table:

Cyclo-Progynova
Estrapak 50
Trisequens
Trisequens Forte
Prempak-C
Nuvelle
Syntex Menophase

Information on the proportion of prescriptions on which different numbers of ingredients are listed is not available.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the items currently in common use by GPs or consultants for which more than one prescription charge is made under current legislation and regulations but which are currently packaged as one item by the manufacturers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed, unless the patient is exempt. In the case of items supplied in a combination pack, therefore, each separate item carries a separate prescription charge. The fact that for convenience two or more individual preparations may be supplied in one pack does not alter the patient's liability for prescription charges.

Unless the patient is otherwise exempt, or holds a valid prepayment certificate, the following items in common use attract more than one prescription charge when supplied against a NHS prescription:

Betadine Pessaries with Applicator and VC Kit
Betadine Vaginal Gel with Applicator and VC Kit
Canesten Duopak
Cyclo-Progynora Combination Pack Tablets
Daktarin Twin Pack
Diprosone Duopack
Ecostatin Twin Pack
Estrapak 50
Flagyl Compak
Gyno-Daktarin Combipack
Gyno-Pevaryl 1 CP Pack
Gyno-Pavaryl 150 Combipack
Lasix + K Combination Pack Tablets
Migraleve Tablets Duo Pack
Migralift Tablets Duo Pack
Napratec Combination Pack Tablets
Nuvelle Tablets
Nystan Triple Pack
Pabrinex Intramuscular High Potency
Pabrinex Intramuscular Maintenance
Pabrinex Intravenous High Potency
Parentrovite Intramuscular High Potency
Parentrovite Intramuscular Maintenance
Parentrovite Intravenous High Potency
Pranavite Slim Diet Plan
Prempak-C Combination Pack Tablets 0·625 mg
Prempak-C Combination Pack Tablets 1·25 mg
Syntex Menophase Combination Pack Tablets
Trisequens
Uvistat Pro-Ski Pack

Sickle Cell Disease

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training general practitioners receive in the control of pain and the nature of sickle cell crises.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 December 1991]: Responsibility for the curriculum for undergraduate medical education rests with the General Medical Council and the Universities. We would expect haematology, pain control and the role of counselling and screening in genetic disease to be covered during the undergraduate syllabus. General practitioner training is decided by the trainer and trainee on the basis of the needs of the trainee and delivered either through direct tuition from the trainer or from formal vocational training sessions. Advice is readily available to general practitioners from local consultant haematologists who can involve other colleagues with expertise in relevant areas such as pain control. The Standing Medical Advisory Committee working party on sickle cell disease includes a general practitioner and so will be able to consider this aspect of treatment.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on sickle cell and thalassaemia services; and what representations he has received about these services; (2) what action he has taken to ensure that people with sickle cell disease and thalassaemia, and carriers, have access to appropriate services; and what guidance has been issued to district health authorities; (3) if he will adopt the 10-point charter on sickle cell and thalassaemia drafted by sickle cell and thalassaemia organisations with community health councils and other user representatives.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 December 1991]: The Government are fully aware of the importance of sickle cell and thalassaemia services. We aim to ensure that a good standard of service is provided by health authorities and others interested in the support and care of people with these conditions and their families. The deliberations of the working party of the Standing Medical Advisory Committee which will meet in the new year will provide a useful basis for developing service further.

The Department is currently providing section 64 funding to the sickle cell (£35,000) and United Kingdom thalassaemia (£28,000) societies. Funding is to help in the provision of information and education material for sufferers and their families, the health care profession and the wider general public, including teachers and employers of the effect which sickle cell anaemia or thalassaemia can have on the lives of those affected. Funding has also been provided to assist in the production of a video aimed at teaching children about sickle cell disease, and for one on thalassaemia featuring an Asian family and dubbed in various Asian languages. It is hoped that the former will be useful for teachers whilst the Asian language video will be a useful source of information and a teaching aid for people of Asian orgin.

Health authorities are responsible for ensuring that appropriate services are provided to meet the needs of their resident populations, including those with sickle cell anaemia and thalassaemia. Evidence from health authorities suggests that genetic screening and counselling facilities are available in those areas where the local population is likely to be susceptible to haemoglobinopathies. Counsellors give advice on services for patients as well as often being the link with local authorities on housing and other problems. The recommendations in the 10-point charter are primarily for consideration by health and local authorities, taking account of advice from health care professionals and other interested bodies.

Regional Health Authorities (Revenue Allocation)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce regional health authorities' revenue allocations for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1991, column 262-63]: Regional health authorities have now been formally notified of their 1992-93 allocations for cash-limited general medical services. The equivalent 1991-92 figures published previously were provisional; the table has now been updated to include final 1991-92 allocations for comparative purposes and is as follows:

GMS cash-limited allocations 1992-93

	Allocation 1991-92[1] £ million	Allocation 1992-93 £ million	Real growth per cent.
Northern	33·268	36·414	4·74

SCOTLAND

Training

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for (a) employment training and (b) youth training in each of the years since 1988-89, and for 1992-93 and 1993-94 the (i) total outturn expenditure of estimated planned expenditure in both cash and real terms and (ii) the total number of planned and filled places in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Decisions about the allocation of planned provision for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for 1992-93 and 1993-94 to specific budget blocks have not yet been taken. Figures for 1992-93 will be published in February 1992 in the departmental report for the departments of the Secretary of State for Scotland. Information for previous years is set out in the tables.

Expenditure £ million

	1988-89 Outturn	1989-90 Outturn	1990-91 Provisional Outturn	1991-92 Estimate
Youth Training (cash)	[1]102	[1]100	[1]83	[2]103

[1] These figures are taken from "The Government Expenditure Plans: 1991-92 to 1993-94: Employment Department Group" (Table 6.5).
[2] These figures are taken from Supply Estimates 1991-92 Class XV Scotland Vote 3.
[3] The figures expressed at 1991-92 cash prices are derived by applying the GDP deflator to the figures for previous years.
[4] Youth Training places are calculated on the basis of trainee weeks; the figures shown represent the average number of young people in training per week.
[5] The Employment Training places information provided gives the planned and actual numbers in training at 31 March for each of the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90, the planned average number in training for 1990-91 and 1991-92 and the actual average number in training for 1990-91.

Liver Transplants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to commence a liver transplant centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I expect to be able to make an announcement on this subject shortly.

Hospital Beds (Highland Region)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the weekly cost of a bed for care of the elderly in (a) Highland health board as a whole and (b) Skye.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The weekly cost per bed for care of the elderly, excluding the elderly with dementia, in Highland health board's area is £499. The equivalent cost in Skye is £418.

Brittania Life Assurance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance, other facilities and resources were given to Britannia Life Assurance when the company obtained premises within the Inverclyde enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No assistance was offered to Britannia Life Assurance in respect of premises within Inverclyde enterprise zone. However, assistance was previously offered to Crusader Insurance in respect of these premises, under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. My officials are considering carefully the status of this assistance.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advance notice and information he was given by the Britannia Life Assurance concerning the decision to vacate the company's premises in the Inverclyde enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My Department was given less than two days notice by Britannia Life Assurance in advance of that company's announcement.

Poll Tax

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his Department's estimates of how much local authorities have spent on publicity and advertising in connection with the poll tax.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The costs of publicity and advertising are not separately identified in local authorities' returns to the Scottish Office of their expenditure on administering the community charge system.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the respects in which the provisions in Scotland for the disposal of fallen and diseased animals diverge from those applying in the EC for (a) animal health and food hygiene and (b) the environment with particular reference to the possible pollution of water resources through on-farm burial and how it is monitored.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Directive 90/667/EEC requires the carcases of fallen animals and those killed in the context of disease control measures to be disposed of by rendering, burning or proper burial. By means of a derogation the directive also permits the continuation of the traditional knacker trade until 1995 at least. The same disposal arrangements apply to such carcases in Scotland. Water pollution is monitored by the river purification authorities and it is an offence to dispose of animal carcases in a manner which causes such pollution.

Sheriffs

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were (a) the total number of full-time sheriffs and (b) the numbers of newly appointed full-time sheriffs in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The full-time shrieval complement and the number of new appointments over the period 1986-1991 are set out in the table:

Year	Initial complement	Final complement	New appointments
1987	90	93	3
1988	93	95	5
1989	95	97	4
1990	97	97	4
1991	97	99	5

Holyrood Palace

Mr. Wilson To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the recent attempted break-in at Holyrood palace; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been no recent attempted break-in at the palace of Holyroodhouse. On 28 June 1991 the security system at the palace detected that an intruder had gained access to the palace grounds and I received a full report on the incident at the time from the chief constable of Lothian and Borders police.

Student Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the Government projections for student numbers in Scotland to the year 2000 based on the assumptions used in paragraph 2.4 of "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm 114).

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 November 1991]: Information in the exact form requested is not available. Projections for student numbers in higher education in Scotland to the year 2000 are given in the "Statistical Bulletin: Higher Education Projections for Scotland (1991) (No Edn/J1/1991/13)" a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of days in each of the last five years when duties in the sheriff courts in Scotland were carried out by temporary sheriffs; and what plans he has to appoint additional sheriffs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of temporary sheriff days provided in each of the last five years to enable the courts to deal timeously with increasing workloads is given in the table:

	Temporary Sheriff Days Provided
1987	1,982
1988	2,855
1989	4,046
1990	4,236
1991	5,109

The need for additional full-time sheriffs is kept under constant review.

Scottish National Heritage

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisations, including voluntary conservation organisations, he consulted before appointing the members of Scottish Natural Heritage.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend sought the views of a wide range of relevant organisations, including national voluntary conservation organisations, before appointing the members of Scottish Natural Heritage.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost to Scottish Natural Heritage of establishing its own science division in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Natural Heritage will have a research and advisory services directorate to provide advice based on commissioned and in-house research for the formulation of policy and the management of the natural heritage. The directorate will be formed in part from the merger of the research and development divisions of the Countryside Commission Scotland and the Nature Conservancy Council Scotland; its costs will be met from within the allocated grant-in-aid.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the likely cost of management agreements in respect of sites of special scientific interest in Scotland in 1992-93.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The cost of management agreements will emerge as they are negotiated and concluded by Scottish Natural Heritage. It will be contained within the budget provided through grant in aid by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take if the cost of management agreements on sites of special scientific interest exceeds the amount allowed for in the budget of Scottish Natural Heritage.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: Scottish Natural Heritage is required to manage its budget and determine its priorities in paying management agreements on sites of special scientific interest. I do not expect Scottish Natural Heritage to exceed its budget.

Scottish National Liberation Army

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the activities of the Scottish National Liberation Army.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The Government deplore any action by any subversive organisation which seeks to undermine the democratic process.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations have been made to the Irish Government in connection with persons purporting to represent the Scottish National Liberation Army.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: There have been no recent representations made to the Irish Government.

School Buildings

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the value of section 94 consents for school buildings in constant and cash price terms since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Local authorities in Scotland receive an allocation of consent to incur capital expenditure on schools, further education colleges and community education buildings. Within their overall level of consent, they are free to determine which educational building projects will proceed. I refer the hon. member to the answer given on 6 December 1991.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the charges against Libyans accused in relation to the Lockerbie bombing were first ready in the Crown Office.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The charges against Abdelbaset Ali Mohmed Al Megrahi and Al Amin Khalifa Fhimah were ready in their final form in the Crown Office on 12 November 1991.

Student Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the Government projections for student numbers in Scotland to the year 2000 based on the assumptions used in paragraph 2.4 of "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm 114).

Mr. Lang [holding answer 25 November 1991]: Information in the exact form requested is not available. Projections for student numbers in higher education in Scotland to the year 2000 are given in the "Statistical Bulletin: Higher Education Projections for Scotland (1991) (No Edn/J1/1991/13)" a copy of which is available in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Speed Limits

Mr. Peter Botomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the European Commission added speed limits to the draft directive on speed limiters.

Mr. Chope: The proposal for fitment of speed limiters to certain vehicles (Document 8046/91), including the speeds at which the limiters should be set, was sent by the Commission to the Council on 31 July 1991 and to member states on 11 September 1991.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on what date the European Commission's speed limit proposal was communicated to (a) the Economic and Social Committee, (b) trade unions and (c) employers for their comments and advice;

(2) when, and by what procedure, the European Parliament considered the European Commission's speed limit proposal.

Mr. Chope: The proposed EC directive on the fitment of speed limiters (Document 8046/91) was communicated to the European Parliament and to the Economic and Social Committee on 22 August 1991. My hon. Friend will note that this was about three weeks earlier than the communication to member states. The European Parliament gave its opinion on 13 December, and the Economic and Social Committee gave its opinion on 27 November. Both supported the principle of the proposal. The proposal was not formally communicated by the Commission to trade unions for comment, but both employers and employees interests are represented in the membership of the Economic and Social Committee.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate has been provided by the European Commission of the benefit in reduced numbers of crashes or reduced severity of injuries of the draft directive involving speed limiters.

Mr. Chope: The Commission proposal on the fitment of speed limiters (Document 8046/91) did not provide estimates of reduced numbers of accidents or severity of injuries.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the environmental benefits of reducing speed limits.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 13 January 1992]: A reduction in speed limits would produce benefits only if it resulted in lower vehicle speeds. The principal environmental benefit of lower speed is a reduction in emissions. This is true of both motor vehicles and trains.

CrossRail

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when it is proposed to commence construction of CrossRail.

Mr. Rifkind: As announced by the joint London Underground/British Rail CrossRail project team on 23 December, a review carried out by the Department of Transport and the operators recently concluded that the Private parliamentary Bill deposited last November would probably not be passed until late 1994. Construction might then be expected to begin in the financial year 1995-96, subject of course to the provision of resources.

National Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what developments have occurred in the former scheme ports since the abolition of the national dock labour scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since abolition, there has been 50 per cent. net reduction in the number of dockworkers in ex-scheme ports. Non-scheme ports, too, have had to review their working arrangements. Flexible working agreements, and the end of restrictive practices, are reported to have led, in some places, to 50 to 100 per cent. improvement in productivity. Management effort is no longer absorbed in industrial relations problems and it can concentrate on giving a better, cheaper service to customers. The competition among ports to provide faster turnround, at lower rates, benefits the whole economy as it prepares to enter the single European market. Trade has revived in major ports. For example, Hull has reopened its container terminal and the Alexandra dock. Prospects for attracting private capital and new industrial developments have improved, now that ports are free from the restrictions of the scheme. This investment will bring further benefits to the economy.

Ivanhoe Railway Service

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed Ivanhoe passenger railway service from Leicester through South Derbyshire to Burton-on-Trent and Derby.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 December 1991]: I am delighted that we are able to give the go-ahead to the Ivanhoe line project, which will mean the restoration of local train services over the lines between Loughborough, Leicester, Burton-on-Trent and Derby, and will involve the opening or reopening of 16 stations.

It will provide an economic boost to the Leicestershire and Derbyshire communities through which the line passes and at the same time it should help ease peak traffic congestion in Leicester.

The resources we are making available to this £16 million project (including a £5 million grant) will allow work to commence in 1992-93, and it is expected to take about three years to complete.

This project is another demonstration of the Government's faith in rail as a means of local transport and is part of a continuing trend in railway development in the United Kingdom.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek powers to challenge the ruling of the courts that any local authority seeking to enforce United Kingdom legislation on Sunday trading will have to give an undertaking to pay the losses of the defendant in the event of that legislation being found to be in contravention of the treaty of Rome.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to seek the powers referred to by the hon. Member. I assume that he is referring to the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Kirklees borough council v Wickes Building Supplies Ltd in which it was held that the Council was required to give a cross-undertaking in damages when seeking, by means of an interlocutory injunction, to enforce the Shops Act 1950. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on this decision because it is shortly to be appealed to the House of Lords.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Fund Manual

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to review the format of the social fund manual.

Mr. Hanley: A revised social fund manual has just been published. The new manual consists of a series of smaller, easier to use guides and booklets which distinguish clearly between directions-guidance to social fund officers and procedural-administrative instructions. The opportunity has been taken to amend social fund direction 16 in line with Government policy that, as a general rule, students should not be funded through social security benefits. During term-time or vacations full-time students will be eligible for crisis loans in future only to alleviate the consequences of a disaster. Copies of the revised social fund manual have been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Business Rates, Southend

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that all outstanding appeals against business rate valuations in Southend will be heard by the end of June 1992.

Mr. Heseltine: Responsibility for business rate appeals rests with valuation and community charge tribunals, which are independent bodies. The Essex (South) tribunal had 8,500 appeals outstanding against the 1990 list as at 30 November. Some 2,000 of these were in respect of properties in Southend. The prioritisation and timing of cases is a matter for the tribunal and I have no formal power to intervene. My Department nevertheless wrote to tribunals in England last June urging them to progress 1990 list appeals as quickly as possible.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he now proposes to revise the guidance given in circular 8/87 regarding demolition of industrial buildings in conservation areas.

Mr. Yeo: Yes. My Department will be consulting local authority associations and other interested parties about a revised version of the circular in the spring.

Coventry Council (Finances)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage change in the total external support for Coventry city council between financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: On the basis of the proposals put before the House on 26 November Coventry city council would have an increase in total external support of 6·9 per cent. between 1991-92 and 1992-93. It is intended that the final details for 1992-93 will be announced later this month.

"Age File The Facts"

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain a copy of Anchor's report, "Age File The Facts" for his departmental library.

Mr. Heseltine: The departmental library already has a copy.

Sheltered Housing

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the role of sheltered housing in community care.

Mr. Yeo: Social services authorities will be responsible for community care assessments and are required to consult other agencies, including housing authorities, when drawing up their community care plans to meet the needs of their area. Similarly, housing authorities should consult social services authorities in preparing their own housing investment strategies each year. When making individual assessments for community care, social services authorities will be expected to involve the housing authority whenever an individual's assessment indicates a possible housing need.

Not everyone who is assessed under the new community care arrangements will be in need of housing, there will be a majority who will be able to go on living in their existing homes with suitable domiciliary care or, perhaps, custom adaptations. Indeed the aim of community care is to allow people to stay in their existing homes wherever possible. Local authorities are able to award mandatory disabled facilities grants for essential adaptations where an applicant qualifies for help under the test of resources. Discretionary grants may also be available for other adaptations, including minor works assistance for the elderly.

Where it is not possible for a person to stay in their own home it will be for social services in consultation with housing authorities to decide on the best way of meeting that person's needs. That may be in some form of sheltered housing. Sheltered housing will therefore be one of a range of housing options available.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department intends to issue regulations limiting the size of performance bonds that local authorities can require of contractors, with regard to compulsory competitive tendering; and whether he intends to consult with local authorities before issuing such regulations.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will consider, in the light of responses to paragraphs 1.21 and 1.29 of the consultation paper "Competing for Quality—Competition in the Provision of Local Services", whether, and if so, how, he should use his powers in clause 9 of the Local Government Bill, in relation to performance bonds. He will consult the local authority associations before using these powers.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) for how many services which his Department is currently considering as candidates for compulsory competitive tendering he intends to introduce de minimis provisions; what levels of de minimis will be set; and whether he intends to consult local authorities on this matter;

(2) What advice his Department received with regard to the extension of compulsory competitive tendering on the issue of de minimis from PA Consulting Group; and what criteria will be used to determine de minimis levels.

Mr. Portillo: PA Consulting Group reported to my Department, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office last year on the feasibility of extending compulsory competitive tendering. That report is not being published.

The question of whether there should be a level of activity below which the requirements for compulsory competitive tendering should not apply, and if so how that level will be defined, will be considered in the light of responses to the consultation document "Competing for Quality—Competition in the Provision of Local Services". I would expect to consult the local authority associations before defining any such level.

City of Birmingham (Bankers)

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the tendering procedures adopted by the city of Birmingham in appointing its bankers.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 January 1992]: The tendering procedure adopted by an authority in appointing its bankers is a matter for it and for its auditor. Questions as to compliance with such procedures, which would be contained in the authority's standing orders and financial regulations, are for the authority's monitoring officer, appointed under section 5 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and may be referred to the authority's auditor. Both the monitoring officer and the auditor have statutory responsibilities in relation to the legality and propriety of an authority's decisions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand Prisoners, Durham

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average period of time remand prisoners are held in Durham prison before being brought to trial in the last two years for which figures are available;

(2) how many people are currently held on remand in police cells in the county of Durham.

Mrs. Rumbold: On Friday 10 January, two unconvicted prisoners, both under the age of 21, were held in police cells in the Durham constabulary area.

Information on the average length of time served by prisoners in Durham prison who are remanded in custody is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prosecution of Juveniles

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was, for each year since 1980, the percentage of cases brought against juveniles in which a conviction was secured;

(2) what has been the number of cases in each year since 1980 in which police identified a juvenile or juveniles as having committed offences but in which (a) the case was not brought to court or (b) the prosecution withdrew the case or offered no evidence or (c) the case was dismissed by the court.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not collected centrally on the number of juvenile offenders identified by the police, for whom no court proceedings were taken. Information in the following tables show (A) the percentage of cases brought against juveniles where a conviction was secured; and (B) the number of juveniles proceeded against at magistrates courts where the case was either dismissed or withdrawn. 1990 data is not yet available.

Magistrates Courts (Delays)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what measures he is taking to reduce delays in proceedings in magistrates courts.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The problem of delays is a complex one which needs to be tackled in a variety of ways and which requires the active co-operation of all criminal justice agencies. Amonst the measures recently taken or now in hand to bring about reduction in delays are the introduction of powers to enable magistrates courts to remand for up to 28 days, which should reduce unnecessary court hearings and encourage effective case management;

a major programme of training, arranged by the Home Office in conjunction with the magistrates courts service, directed to helping court clerks to develop practical clerking skills and a proactive approach to the management of court business;

the issue in July 1991 of best practice guidance on listing of cases, supplementing earlier guidance on the best use of court clerk time;

the encouragement and monitoring of pre-trial reviews on an experimental basis in selected magistrates' courts; action to follow up the report of the working group on pre-trial issues, as announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney General on 11 November, in which the magistrates courts service will be asked to play its full part;

the start of direct data exchange between magistrates courts and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, to be extended in due course to all magistrates courts, which should reduce the time needed to obtain licensing information as well as reducing handling costs; the development of national targets for improvements in performance, as part of the development of the magistrates courts management information system.

These are all important initiatives which we hope will contribute to speedier and more effective local justice.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textile Industry

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to make an announcement on the RETEX scheme to help areas hit by decline of the textile industries.

Mr. Leigh: On 20 December the European Commission agreed a draft proposal for a RETEX scheme on which it will invite comments from member states and the European Parliament in the coming weeks. I have not yet received the draft proposal. The Government will naturally seek to ensure the maximum effective coverage of United Kingdom textile areas.

National Telephone Codes

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 5 December 1991, Official Report, column 205, if he will list those organisations which have expressed concern about the time allowed for the 1994 changes in national telephone codes.

Mr. Redwood: The Director General of Telecommunications, who is responsible for numbering, has not taken a final decision on the transitional period for implementation of the national code change in 1994. I have asked the Director General to write to the hon. Member giving further information concerning the transitional arrangements and any representations he may have received.

Plugs

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will introduce regulations to require the fitting of plugs to all electrical equipment before the point of sale.

Mr. Leigh: As part of a review of the Plugs and Sockets Etc (Safety) Regulations 1987, my Department is currently considering whether legislative controls should be introduced requiring the fitting of plugs to domestic electrical appliances before they are supplied to the consumer.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will institute an inquiry into the profit margins of hearing aid manufacturers; and if he will discuss the prices of non-national health service hearing aids with the organisations of and for disabled people.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 January 1992]: No. It is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading to monitor commercial activities affecting consumers. He may conduct an inquiry to establish whether there are sufficient grounds for formal investigation under competition legislation. If the right hon. Member has information that suggests there are anti-competitive practices, he should bring it to the attention of the Director General.

PRIME MINISTER

Constituencies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards equalising the size of parliamentary constituencies; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: When conducting a review of parliamentary constituencies, the parliamentary boundary commissions are required to give effect to the rules set out in schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986, which include a requirement that constituency electorates should be as close as practicable to the electoral quota for that part of the United Kingdom.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank of England

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the relevant primary and secondary legislation governing relations with the Bank of England.

Mr. Maples: Principal legislation governing relations between the Treasury and Bank of England includes the Bank Charter Act 1844, the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1866, the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1928, the Bank of England Act 1946, the Currency and Bank Notes Act 1954, the National Loans Act 1968, the Currency Act 1983 and the Banking Act 1987. The Bank of England Charter of 1946 is also of relevance.

I regret that to compile a comprehensive list of relevant legislation in all fields would involve a disproportionate expenditure of time and resources.

Trade Deficit

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the United Kingdom's current trade deficit.

Mr. Mellor: The information may be found in table 1 of the monthly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, published on 23 December 1991, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

British Telecommunications plc

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the outcome of the Government's sale of part of its residual shareholding in British Telecommunications plc.

Mr. Maude: As I announced on 9 December at column 299, Her Majesty's Treasury made a total of 1,050 million shares available to applicants in the United Kingdom public offer and 525 million shares to bidders in the international tender offer. In addition, S G Warburg Securities had the option to acquire further shares from Her Majesty's Treasury, up to a maximum of 118·125 million shares, for the purpose of meeting overallotments in the international tender offer.

On 7 January, S G Warburg Securities, as global co-ordinator for the sale, acquired a further 22·5 million shares from Her Majesty's Treasury, pursuant to this option. This brings to 547·5 million the total number of shares sold by Her Majesty's Treasury in the international tender offer and to 1,597·5 million the total size of the BT share sale.

The shares sold in the international tender offer were distributed across the 10 regional syndicates in the following proportions:

	Percentage
United Kingdom	63·6
United States	17·6
Japan	5·3
Switzerland	4·9
Rest of the World	2·6
France	1·5
Germany	1·4
Italy	1·4
Canada	1·1
Benelux	0·6

Following the exercise of the option granted to the global co-ordinator, the Government will hold some 1,343·5 million shares in British Telecommunications plc (approximately 22 per cent. of the total currently in issue), before deducting any shares which may be needed to meet share bonus entitlements under the United Kingdom public offer.

Total gross proceeds from the sale of the offered shares amount to £5·43 billion, of which some £1·84 billion are received in this financial year.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether he has any proposals to raise the advisory cost limit of £250 for answering parliamentary questions.

Mr. Maples: Yes. The advisory limit was last increased in 1988 Official Report 14 March 1988 col. 429. Its purpose is to act as a threshold for disproportionate cost PQs. Any written PQ where the marginal cost of preparing the answer is considered likely to exceed the threshold may be referred to the appropriate Minister and an answer may be refused in whole or in part on the ground of disproportionate cost. Alternatively the Minister may decide that the PQ is to be answered irrespective of cost.

This threshold applies to the marginal cost and not the full cost of a written PQ. For the marginal cost, the divisional costs of preparing the answer are estimated—i.e. the costs in divisions (without taking account of the standing cost of parliamentary branches). The fixed cost of staff accommodation is also excluded from this marginal cost calculation and this also contributes to ease of calculation in Departments.

When the threshold was last increased in 1988, the average marginal cost was £33 and the £250 threshold was a multiple of nearly eight times the average. A survey of costs in 1991 has shown that the average marginal cost of a written PQ is now £50. To reflect this the advisory limit is being raised today to £400 so that the same multiple of eight times the average will apply. There is no advisory cost limit for oral parliamentary questions.

Government Deficit and Debt

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the ratio, expressed as a percentage of (a) the actual Government deficit and (b) Government debt to the gross domestic product at then market prices in each year since 1970.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 January 1992]: There are a number of different ways of measuring the Government deficit and Government debt.

Presentation of the public sector finances in the United Kingdom is generally in terms of the public sector borrowing requirement (PSBR) and net public sector debt.

PSBR statistics on the basis requested were given in reply to the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore) on 2 December 1991, Official Report, column 38. Figures for net public sector debt, which are available only from end-March 1975 onwards, are given in the table.

Net public sector debt as percentage of GDP[1]

	Per cent.
1975	61·00
1976	59·00
1977	57·75
1978	54·00
1979	50·75
1980	46·25
1981	47·75
1982	47·25
1983	46·25
1984	46·75
1985	47·00
1986	45·25
1987	42·75
1988	38·25
1989	32·00
1990	27·75
1991	27·25

[1] Stock of debt as at 31 March expressed as a percentage of GDP adjusted for the abolition of domestic rates in the year centred on that date.

Mortgage Rescue Proposals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify the basis of his calculation that his mortgage rescue proposals will protect 40,000 households next year; and what information he has of the number of households facing repossession next year.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 13 January 1992]: Lenders themselves have estimated that the measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor on 19 December will prevent about 40,000 repossessions this year. They were previously expecting about 80,000 repossessions in 1992.

WALES

District Health Authorities

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to amalgamate the district health authorities in Wales to enable them to exercise greater purchasing power.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No.

Third Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet the Deeside Enterprise Trust to discuss traffic congestion, as it affects Deeside industrial park, and the need for a third Dee crossing;

(2) if he will meet the North Wales Confederation of British Industry to discuss the need for a third Dee crossing;

(3) if he will meet the North Wales Confederation of Engineering and other unions to discuss the need for a third Dee crossing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 20 December at column 361. The meeting arranged for 28 January will provide an opportunity to discuss all issues associated with the third Dee crossing scheme.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the figures offered or given by his Department to each hospital, unit or combination of units in Wales towards the cost of drawing up any application for trust status or any other ways of promoting a move to trust status.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A contribution of £50,000 was provided to Pembrokeshire health authority. As to elsewhere in Wales, those units recently invited to prepare applications to become NHS trusts in April 1993 are aware that financial assistance is available to help with the process. Any bids received will be considered on their individual merits.

Child Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his target for next year and for each of the next five years as to the percentage of children between the age of three and school age in (a) Wales and (b) each county in Wales for whom he wishes to see child care provision from public funds.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Section 19 of the Children Act 1989 places a duty on local social services authorities to review day care services for young children in their areas, including the level of public provision. Each local authority is required to conduct a review and to publish its results within a year of the Act's implementation (14 October 1991). Further reviews are to be undertaken at three-yearly intervals. Guidance to the authorities on the exercise of this review duty is contained in chapter 9 of volume 2 of "The Children Act: Guidance and Regulations—Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children."

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has made of the likely effects on Welsh sheep producers of the MacSharry proposals to reform the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The European Commission's CAP reform proposals would, if implemented as they stand, discriminate against producers in Wales. The proposed headage limits for the sheep annual premium would affect 15 per cent. of sheep in Wales compared with 3 per cent. in the European Community as a whole. I welcome the Commission's acceptance that reform is necessary but this must be on the basis of non-discrimination, budget discipline, control of surpluses and policies which are sensitive to the environment.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet Mr. MacSharry, the EC Agricultural Commissioner, to discuss reform of the common agricultural policy and its effects on Welsh farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I met Commissioner MacSharry on 22 November when I explained very clearly how the Commission's CAP reform proposals would discriminate against producers in Wales. Mr. MacSharry fully understands my view of the impact of the Commission's proposals.

Prescriptions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many prescriptions have been issued in each of the last five years in each (a) county and (b) family practitioner committee area in Wales;

(2) what proportion of prescriptions issued in each county in Wales has been presented and made up in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on the number of prescriptions issued is not held centrally. However, the available information, which relates to the number of prescription items dispensed, is given in the following table:

FHSA/County	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Clwyd	3,568,306	3,732,356	3,895,369	4,051,926	4,139,001

West Glamorgan	3,667,264	3,792,900	3,943,493	4,014,707	4,072,873

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what proportion of prescriptions in each (a) county and (b) family practitioner area in Wales the patient has been liable to make full payment in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the following table:

Percentage of prescriptions bearing full charge

FHSA/County	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990

BBC Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes there will be in the pay and terms and conditions of employment of Dr. Gwyn Jones as chairman of the Welsh Development Agency subsequent to his appointment as chairman-elect of the BBC Wales board of governors.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1991, col 360]: I have considered with Dr. Jones what changes should be made to the terms and conditions of his employment in his capacity of chairman of the Welsh Development Agency (WDA).

Dr. Jones was originally appointed as chairrman of the WDA on the basis of a commitment of two and a half days a week. In June 1989 this was increased to four days a week so that he would be able to oversee the establishment of Welsh Development International and personally lead the drive for inward investment into Wales. Under his leadership, the last two and a half years has been a period of considerable achievement for Wales in inward investment and I congratulate Dr. Jones and his team on this. Dr. Jones has suggested that, as the foundations for continued success are now secure the time is now right for his commitment to the WDA to revert to the original basis of two and a half days a week and for his remuneration to revert from the current level of £64,975 pa to £40,610 pa. I have agreed. Other terms and conditions oif appointment will remain as at present.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Visitors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what initiatives he intends to introduce to improve facilities for hon. Members' parties visiting Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 13 January 1992]: As I advised the hon. Member on 16 December, Official Report column 18, the Catering Sub-Committee is shortly to consider the results of a feasibility study to determine whether reasonable catering facilities for visitors can be provided in accommodation conveniently close to the Palace.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Missions

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley of 6 December, Official Report, column 261, what is the reason in each case for the closure of diplomatic posts; what is the total financial saving; what representations he has received regarding the closure of any of the posts; whether any further consideration has been given to decisions in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All the posts listed in the reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley were closed in order to release resources for redeployment to meet new priorities.

I cannot give a figure for the total financial saving over the 10 years in question. But it would have cost in the region of £12·4 million this year to maintain these posts were they all still open. The savings realised have significantly helped us to maintain a global diplomatic presence, and to open some 10 new posts, despite the significant public expenditure pressures on the diplomatic service over the period. Closing any post is inevitably difficult and is never decided lightly. But it is right that resources should be redeployed to meet new challenges and priorities.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has offered to the new Soviet commonwealth and to individual-republics in their programmes of dismantling nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our NATO allies have made it clear that we are ready to respond as fully as possible to requests for practical assistance in ensuring the safe, responsible and reliable control of nuclear weapons and preventing their proliferation.

Belize

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the Government of Belize and (b) other interested parties regarding the policy surrounding the future of the British military garrison in Belize.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We keep the position of the British garrison in Belize under review and maintain a dialogue with the Government of Belize.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what entitlement to invalid care allowance currently exists for the claimant who provides regular and substantial care to two or more disabled people which does not extend to more than 35 hours for one individual; what proposals he has to review this entitlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Caring that extends to less than 35 hours a week for one individual does not give entitlement to invalid care allowance. We shall continue to keep in mind the position of those who care for more than one person, each for less than 35 hours, when considering how available resources can best be used to meet the needs of carers.

Pension Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of current gross average earnings is represented in the United Kingdom and each European Community country by (a) the basic pension, (b) the earnings-related supplement and (c) the total state pension, for (i) a single pensioner and (ii) a pensioner with a dependent spouse of pension age, where the pensioner had been on average earnings during his working life.

Mr. Jack: There are no comparable statistics available on gross average earnings in the member states of the European Community. As a consequence, it is not possible to provide the pension comparisons requested. Information on the different EC pension schemes can be found in "Social Protection in The Member States of The Community" published by the European Commission, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 10 December 1991 at column 377, he will state whether the entitlement to indefinite payment of mobility allowance, attendance allowance or severe disablement allowance during residence in another member state of the European Community extends to (a) children, (b) adults who have never been able to work and (c) adults who have never been part of the work force; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Scott: The recent European Court of Justice decision in the case of Newton, which related to the exportability of benefits, does not extend to children or to people who have never worked in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 10 December 1991 at column 377, he will introduce regulations to enable people to retain entitlement to invalid care allowance during residence in another member state of the European Community for so long as the person they are caring for is entitled to attendance allowance; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Ex-drug Users

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he has issued to the Benefits Agency regarding the priority to be given to rehabilitating ex-drug users in the allocation of community care grants to the homeless who are allocated unfurnished accommodation.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary of State issues general guidance to social fund officers in the form of the social fund officer's guide, which replaced the social fund manual in December 1991. A copy of this guidance is available in the Library. Area social fund officers (the managers of district DSS offices) also issue guidance which complements that in the social fund officer's guide taking account of local factors.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that sufficient resources are allocated to the Benefits Agency to ensure that rehabilitated drug users who have been treated at a rehabilitation unit are not excluded from community care grants for the homeless who are offered unfurnished accommodation.

Mr. Scott: The circumstances and priority of each individual application to the fund are carefully considered by social fund officers. No group of people who satisfy the basic community care grant conditions are excluded from the consideration of an award.

Since April 1991 we have allocated additional funds of over £43 million to the discretionary social fund budget. This flexible response shows the Government's commitment to ensuring that the social fund will meet the highest priority needs wherever and whenever they occur.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will issue guidelines to the Benefits Agency to ensure that no changes are made to the priority given to rehabilitating ex-drug offenders in the allocation of community care grants for the homeless when they are offered unfurnished accommodation without prior consultation with the relevant county drug advisory committee and other appropriate agencies.

Mr. Scott: We have already issued guidance to social fund officers on the continuing need for constructive and close liaison with Social Services Departments and other interested bodies. The guidance is contained in the social fund officer's guide, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the success rate of (a) applications for community care grants by those leaving homelessness hostels or care and going into unfurnished accommodation and (b) subsequent appeals against refusals in each United Kingdom Benefits Agency region.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Prescriptions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many prescriptions have been issued in each of the last five years in each (a) region, (b) district and (c) family practitioner committee area;

(2) what proportion of prescriptions issued in each (a) region, (b) district and (c) family practitioner committee area has been presented and made up in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of prescriptions issued is not collected centrally. However, the available information, which relates to the number of prescription items dispensed in each family practitioner committee area, is given in the table:

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what proportion of prescriptions in each (a) county and (b) family practitioner committee area the patient has been liable to make full payment in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information relating to England is retained only for three years. The available data, which relates to the percentage of prescription items in each regional health authority for which the patient has been liable to make full payment, is given in the table.

Consultants (Job Description)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to evaluate the success of the introduction of job descriptions for all consultants from 1 April 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Hospital consultants are required to have job plans (formerly referred to as job descriptions) setting out their main duties and work programmes, including their fixed commitments, in the NHS, in order to make clear what is expected of them. General managers are responsible for ensuring that job plans are agreed, reviewed annually, and implemented.

Medical Audit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria his Department will use to determine the success of its investment in medical audit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Investment in medical audit was initially to ensure that the necessary infrastructure would be in place to enable all doctors in the hospital and community health service to participate in medical audit from 1 April 1991 and all general practitioners from 1 April 1992.

All regions and districts have established medical audit committees and all family health services authorities have set up medical audit advisory groups as required by the Department.

The NHS management executive has a duty to ensure that the special funds for medical audit are being spent for the intended purpose. It is discharging this duty by requiring annual reports from the regions, supplemented by visits to all regions by senior management executive staff specifically to review expenditure and progress in medical audit in the primary and secondary care sectors. As far as evaluating value for money is concerned, the Department is examining this complex issue as part of its developing strategy. The criteria have been set out in health circulars and executive letters to the service.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the sharing of the results of medical audit between clinicians and managers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Medical audit committees are required to provide regular reports to both medical staff and management on the general results of audit which have been carried out. These may, for example, include:

- a broad outline of the aggregate results together with any national, regional or other comparison available;
- an account of any problems encountered in data retrieval or analysis;
- an indication of what action is being taken or is recommended.

With the separation of the purchaser-provider functions medical audit has become a provider unit based activity and it is to unit managers that regular reports of the general result of audit are addressed.

GPs' Contracts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for health what discussions his Department is undertaking with the General Medical Service Committee concerning the contract for general practitioners; what is the timetable for these discussions; and which issues are being discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is a continuing programme of discussions between the Department and the General Medical Services Committee dealing, as necessary, with the possible development of aspects of the GPs' contract. Current issues include the further development of the health promotion elements of the contract in the context of the Department's health strategy. The Department and the GMSC are also committed to discussions on the way the GP remuneration arrangements support the contract with a view to submitting evidence to the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body in autumn 1992.

London Ambulance Service

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) for each division of the London ambulance service and (b) for each financial quarter of 1990-91 and for the first three quarters of 1991-92 (i) the percentage of emergencies reached within seven minutes of calls and (ii) the percentage of emergencies reached within 14 minutes of calls.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 January 1992]: The available information is given in the table. From 8 January 1991 new technology installed at a cost of £1·5 million has been available to improve the average response times of emergency ambulance vehicles in London.

[1] Up to January 1991, response times were measured from the end of the initial telephone call. Since February they have been calculated from the moment the telephone is answered in accordance with national standards.
[2] Response times were based upon a sample 3 per cent. up to April 1991 compared with 100 per cent. from May, when the sampling was changed to comply with national standards.

DEFENCE

Live Ammunition Dumping

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to discontinue the dumping of live ammunition at sea;

(2) if he has made any estimate of the environmental consequences of the dumping of live ammunition at sea;

(3) if he has made any estimate of the difference in cost between dumping live ammunition at sea and decommissioning it with the resultant opportunity to recycle scrap metals;

(4) what deadline he has set for the discontinuance of the practice of dumping live ammunition at sea.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: MOD will terminate all sea dumping of redundant ammunition and explosive stocks by 1 January 1993 in line with the Government's general policy, as agreed internationally, that waste should be disposed of on land, where this is safe and practicable, in preference to dumping at sea. Sea dumping of live ammunition is undertaken when demilitarisation on land is impracticable, either because it would pose unacceptable safety risks because of capacity constraints on alternative, environmentally acceptable, land based disposal methods, rather than for reasons of cost. Dumping is carried out in a strictly controlled manner to ensure that it does not cause damage to the marine environment, or interfere with fishing, or other legitimate uses of the sea. Detonators and explosives which contain toxic chemicals are not disposed of in this way and all material is packaged to ensure that it sinks to the sea bed. There is no evidence to suggest that controlled dumping of conventional ammunition and explosives in this manner constitutes a risk to the marine environment.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Parental Involvement)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much Government aid is specifically targeted to increase the involvement of parents in school work and promote teachers' consultation with parents.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are working actively to increase parental involvement in school education. The parents charter makes proposals for improving information for parents, and a new guide for parents—"Your Child and the National Curriculum"—urges parents to take an active interest in their children's education and talk to teachers about their children's progress.

It is not possible to give figures on financial aid from central Government for the generality of school education: Government assistance for the provision of local authority services is channelled through revenue support grant, which is not hypothecated to individual services. In relation to specific Government grants, there are particular initiatives within inner cities programmes that are designed to strengthen home-school links and stimulate parental involvement.

Student Teachers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what numbers of student teachers (a) were in the course of and (b) completed their professional training, respectively, in training institutions in each of the last five years; what ratio of student teachers to nominated practising teachers he expects to require, authorise and pay for when students are on school practice, in accordance with his recent proposals; and by what means he expects to provide experienced replacement teachers for the time spent by the nominated teachers in their additional responsibilities.

Mr. Fallon: Information about the numbers of students enrolled on and completing courses of initial teacher training in each of the last five years is not immediately available. I shall send this information to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

The proposals so far announced by my right hon. and learned Friend relate to secondary postgraduate (PGCE) courses. The ratio of student teachers on such courses to teacher tutors in schools will be determined locally by higher education institutions and their partner schools.

Higher education institutions will be expected to reimburse their partner schools for extra costs resulting from their enhanced role in initial teacher training. The resources available to initial teacher training should increase as the number of student teachers rises and there will have to be a significant shift of funds to schools, within these rising resources, as the changes take effect. Meanwhile, the higher education funding councils have agreed to make extra funds available, from within the resources already allocated to them, to those institutions which provide secondary PGCE courses. My right hon. and learned Friend will be making an extra £3 million available to the funding councils to supplement their allocations to these institutions. The funding councils have been invited to issue guidance to institutions on the procedure for bidding and the basis on which bids will be considered.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Matthew Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to make available a further evaluation report on aid and trade provision projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Evaluation Department of the Overseas Development Administration has carried out a study which synthesises the experience of eight evaluations of ATP projects, approved between 1978 and 1985, and evaluated between 1986 and 1990. It draws most from three evaluations conducted as a series in 1990. I have placed copies of the report "ATP Synthesis Evaluation Study" (November 1991) in the Library of the House.

While ATP procedures have been strengthened since the projects were approved, the findings and lessons of the study will be an important input to the inter-departmental review of ATP which is currently taking place.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by local authority area in Scotland the proportions of local authority finance derived from central Government, business rates and poll tax from 1991-92.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The proportion of total income derived from central Government grants, non-domestic rates income and community charge income for each local authority for 1991-92 are given in the table.

Notes:

1. Central Government grants shown in column 1 consist of revenue support grant, specific grants and community charge grant.
2. The community charge income proportions are calculated from provisional outturn amounts taken from the provisional outturn/budget estimate returns made to the Scottish Office by local authorities, less an assumed reduction in charge income as a result of the Community Charges (General Reduction) Act 1991.
3. The non-domestic rate income proportions are calculated from estimates made by the Scottish Office in November 1990.

Home Insulation

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on home insulation in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Full details of the extent of home insulation in Scotland are not at present available but as part of the national house condition survey at present underway information is being gathered on whether walls, tanks, pipes and lofts in property of all tenures are satisfactorily insulated. The results of the survey are due for publication in the summer of 1993.

EMPLOYMENT

Minimum Wages

16. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he made of the job implications of a statutory minimum wages policy prior to the Maastricht summit.

Mr. Forth: A minimum wage set at the final level proposed by the Labour party of two thirds male median earnings could destroy over a million jobs if pay differentials were half restored. If differentials were fully restored up to two million jobs could be lost.

EC Social Charter

17. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what regulations he proposes to introduce to implement the employment provisions of the EC social charter.

Mr. Howard: The social charter, signed by the 11 other member states, was a political declaration and has no legal effect. Where legislation is required to implement directives agreed under the social action programme, this will be introduced within the timetable for implementation set out in each proposal.

26. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the discussions on the social charter in Maastricht on 10 December.

Mr. Howard: The Maastricht treaty on European union confirms that the social provisions chapter within the existing treaty of Rome will be retained. There will be no extensions of the Community's present powers in employment and social affairs, and no increase in the use within the Council of Ministers of qualified majority voting.

That is the outcome for which the Government argued throughout the negotiations. It leaves the leading responsibility for employment and social policies where it belongs, firmly in the hands of national Parliaments, and is good news for British jobs and for the competitiveness of our industry.

Should other member states wish to go further than provided for in the treaty, they can do so by way of the separate protocol and agreement on social affairs.

Trade Union Training Centres

18. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the TUC to discuss trade union unemployed workers' training centres.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the TUC on 18 December last year. He has no plans at present to meet the TUC to discuss the matter in question.

EC Working Time Directive

19. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from British industry concerning the proposed European working time directive.

Mr. Howard: British industry is virtually unanimous in its opposition to the proposals. I fully agree with the Confederation of British Industry that the directive would be a needless strain on our competitiveness, and a threat to jobs and earnings.

Training

20. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to improve the provision of training for people with disabilities and/or learning difficulties.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise council and local enterprise company operating agreements require "suitable high quality training to be made available for all trainees who have disabilities or other significant personal disadvantages which give rise to special training needs." Each TEC and LEC must show in its corporate and business plans how it intends to meet the training needs of individuals and the local labour market. These plans form the basis of TEC contracts with the Department, and LECs with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

25. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he plans next to meet the CBI to discuss its members' contribution to training.

Mr. Howard: I have regular contact with representatives of the CBI on a range of issues. I have at present no plans for a meeting on the particular subject mentioned by my hon. Friend.

Industrial Action

21. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost due to industrial action in (a) January 1979, (b) 1990 and (c) the latest 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: There were 0·8 million working days lost in the 12 months to October 1991, the latest available period, and 1·9 million working days lost in 1990 as a whole. These compare with 3 million working days lost in the single month of January 1979.

Unemployment

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional action he plans to take to assist those who are unemployed and aged over 50 years.

Mr. Jackson: We have already announced plans to offer help back to work for nearly a million unemployed people in 1992-93 through our employment and training programmes. This includes increased opportunities through employment action, our new temporary work programme, and extra support for jobclubs and the job interview guarantee. All these programmes are open to people aged over 50.

23. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next intends to meet the TUC to discuss unemployment.

Mr. Howard: I have discussed various matters with the TUC on a number of occasions including at the National Economic Development Council. The next meeting of the Council will be on 1 April.

Manufacturing Industry, Sheffield

24. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest estimates of the prospects for full-time jobs, involving at least a 35-hour week, for both male and female in manufacturing industry in Sheffield for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Jackson: The Department, as was the practice under previous Governments, does not publish detailed forecasts of employment nor comment on the forecasts of others.

Age Discrimination

27. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had on the subject of age discrimination by employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have met many of the voluntary sector organisations which speak out against age discrimination by employers, and have received representations from others. We continue to urge employers to abandon arbitrary age limits in recruitment as inefficient and wasteful, and to treat everyone on their merits.

Tourism

28. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in tourism in (a) 1981 and (b) 1991.

Mr. Forth: There were an estimated 1·2 million employees in employment in tourism-related industries in June 1981, and 1·4 million in June 1991. In addition, there were around 163,000 self employed in tourism-related industries in 1981 and around 190,000 in 1991.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to visit Southport to discuss the tourist industry.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans. However, my noble Friend Viscount Ullswater, who has ministerial responsibility for tourism matters, hopes to be visiting Southport next March.

Youth Training

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently undertaking a youth training course in the Greater London area; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Figures are not available for the Greater London area. In November, the latest date for which information is available, there were 15,800 young people in youth training in the London region (of which Greater London is a part).

The programme budget for youth training in the London region for 1991-92 is £492,000.

Unemployment, Greater London

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people registered as unemployed in the Greater London area and the number of job vacancies for the area at jobcentres on 7 January 1992.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available data relate to 14 November 1991 for unemployed claimants and 6 November 1991 for unfilled vacancies at jobcentres. On these respective dates there were on a seasonally adjusted basis, 378,000 unemployed claimants and 6,200 unfilled jobcentre vacancies, in the Greater London region.

Figures for January will be released on 13 February.

Maastricht

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what implications the outcome of the negotiations over the social chapter at Maastricht have for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The treaty on European union agreed at the European Council at Maastricht confirms that the existing social provisions chapter within the present treaty (articles 117-122) will be retained without change. The outcome of the negotiations on the social chapter provides the necessary basis for the development of a sensible Community social dimension and the United Kingdom will continue to participate fully in all relevant discussions.

That is the outcome for which the Government argued throughout the negotiations. It leaves the leading responsibility for employment and social policies where it belongs, firmly in the hands of national Parliaments, and is good news for British jobs and for the competitiveness of our industry.

Should other member states wish to go further than provided for in the treaty, they can do so by way of the separate protocol and agreement on social affairs.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the results of the review of the rates of allowance payable under the job release scheme.

Mr. Jackson: Although the job release scheme closed to new applicants on 31 January 1988, the allowance will continue to be paid to participants for up to five years. Following our annual review, the allowances payable from 6 April 1992 under the job release scheme will be as follows:

Those who are married with a dependent wife whose net income from all sources does not exceed £17 a week: £94·45 taxable. Those who do not have a dependent wife or whose wife's income exceeds £17 a week: £77·80 taxable. The spouses earnings limit which affects whether the higher or lower rate is paid has been raised to £17 from £16.

Employee Participation

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to seek the views of business on the new European Commission proposal for a recommendation concerning the promotion of employee participation in profits and enterprise results including equity participation.

Mr. Forth: Yes. A public consultation document on this subject has recently been issued by the Department. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 15 January 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Takeover Panel

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he will bring forward legislation to remove liability of the takeover panel and its members in defamation proceedings arising from the publication of its bona fide reports.

The Attorney-General: No such legislation is contemplated.

European Court of Justice

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to expedite a decision by the European Court of Justice on the cases referred to it by the House of Lords in May 1991.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the second answer that I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 13 January 1992, at column 417.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Attorney-General if he has submitted evidence on behalf of the Government to the European Court of Justice on the cases referred to it by the House of Lords in May 1991; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the third answer that I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 13 January 1992, at column 417.

Shops Act 1950

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to take steps to give local authorities crown immunity in order to enable them to discharge their responsibilities under section 47 of the Shops Act 1950.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to take the action suggested by the hon. Member. The question whether local authorities should be obliged to give cross-undertakings in damages when seeking, by means of an interlocutory injunction, to enforce the Shops Act 1950 was recently considered by the Court of Appeal in Kirklees borough council v. Wickes Building Supplies Ltd. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on this decision because it is shortly to be appealed to the House of Lords.

TRANSPORT

Tyres

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for road safety of the new regulations on tyre tread introduced on 1 January.

Mr. Chope: The new tyre tread regulations requiring a tread depth of 1·6 mm over three quarters of the width for passenger cars, light vans and light trailers should improve the general condition of tyres and hence have a beneficial effect on road safety.

A36 Bypass, West Wellow

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he will publish the collated results of the consultation survey carried out by MRM Consultants into people's preference for the route of the A36 bypass of West Wellow;

(2) when he expects to announce the preferred route for the A36 bypass of West Wellow.

Mr. Chope: I hope to make a further announcement about the A36 West Wellow bypass later this year. The results of the poublic consultation will be announced at that stage.

High-speed Rail Network

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether Her Majesty's Government has responded to the proposals for a European high-speed rail network prepared by the EC working group; when they will be considered by the Transport Council in the European Community; whether the Government approve the proposals for the Belfast/Dublin/Holyhead/Crewe routes; and what are the longer-term implications for the Belfast/Larne/Stranraer/Carlisle routes.

Mr. Freeman: The proposals of the EC working group were interim ones. The group is doing further studies which are now expected to be ready by the end of this year. I am sending the right hon. Gentleman a copy of the joint statement made on this subject on 2 December 1991 by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and and Scotland.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether London boroughs will be required to subject their new services under the Road Traffic Act 1991 to compulsory competitive tendering from the inception of these services in 1992;

(2) what is the proposed date of the application of compulsory competitive tendering to the new responsibilities of local authorities under the Road Traffic Act 1991.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Tuesday 14 January 1992]: It is the Government's intention that local authorities should be required to subject their new services under the Road Traffic Act 1991 to compulsory competitive tendering. This proposal is included in the consultation paper "Competing for Quality". No decisions on timing can be taken until consultation has been completed.

ENERGY

Land Restoration (UKAEA)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what guidance is given in the most recent programme letters to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's various business groups in regard to the choice of contractors for independent evaluation of land restoration at each of the nuclear establishments operated by the authority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The relevant programme letters between the Department of Energy and AEA Technology assume that AEA nuclear sites will ultimately be cleared to a "green-field" state allowing unrestricted use without prior knowledge of previous use of the site. The extent to which independent evaluation may be required of the work needed to achieve this condition will be assessed at the appropriate time.

Nuclear-generated Electricity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what policy statements have been made by Her Majesty's Government since 1987 concerning the identification by electricity companies in bills sent to consumers of the element that comprises costs from nuclear-generated electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's policy is that the costs of nuclear electricity generation, and of the requirement on the regional electricity companies to contract for non-fossil generating capacity, should be fully transparent. These objectives are achieved through, respectively, the published accounts of Nuclear Electric and the duty on the Director General of Electricity Supply to publish the rate of the fossil fuel levy. However, how the regional electricity companies structure their bills is a matter for them.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has assessed the possibility of the United Kingdom nuclear reprocessors, British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority taking thermal oxide irradiated reactor fuel from countries of eastern Europe for safe management following the collapse of the organisation of the civil nuclear industry of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom nuclear industry is offering a variety of services, on commercial terms, to potential customers both in eastern Europe and elsewhere. Any contract offered for reprocessing spent fuel would need to include options for the return of wastes.

Safeguards Agreement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has received from the International Atomic Energy Agency on the comprehensive safeguards agreement establishing a joint Brazilian-Argentinian agency for accounting and control of nuclear materials.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: On 7 December 1991, the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency approved the text of a safeguards agreement for the accounting of nuclear material between Argentina, Brazil, and the IAEA. On 13 December, the agreement was signed at the IAEA in Vienna by President Menem of Argentina and President Collor of Brazil. The agency has publicly reported these events.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Chief Officers

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions govern the amount of the salary of chief officers of local authorities; and what information he has on the level of pay rises for chief officers for the forthcoming year.

Mr. Key: There are no statutory provisions governing the pay of local authority employees. In the case of most authorities, the pay of chief officers is related to a national pay spine determined by the joint negotiating committee (JNC) for chief officers of local authorities, although authorities decide for themselves the point within this context at which their chief officers' pay is set. About two dozen authorities have opted out of these national negotiations and set the pay of their chief officers locally. Salaries within the scope of the JNC were increased by 6·4 per cent. from 1 July 1991.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the respects in which the provisions in England and Wales for the disposal of fallen and diseased animals diverge from the standards applying in the EC for the environment with particular reference to the possible pollution of water resources through on-farm burial and how it is monitored.

Mr. Baldry: The disposal of fallen and diseased animals from premises used for agriculture is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The disposal of such animals from other premises must comply with the provisions in the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990. These Acts meet the requirements of EC legislation on the disposal of waste. The National Rivers Authority is a statutory consultee for waste disposal licensing and is also responsible for monitoring water pollution in England and Wales in order to ensure compliance with EC legislation.

River Pollution, Rochdale

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority regarding the level of pollution in the rivers and brooks in the Rochdale borough.

Mr. Baldry: The National Rivers Authority (NRA) has the duty to monitor pollution of watercourses and has wide powers to review discharge consents, and to prosecute those that breach their consents, or discharge pollutants without consent. It is the NRA that is responsible for taking action in individual cases. There have been no consultations with the chairman of the NRA on this case.

Community Charge

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance was given to councils to exempt from paying the community charge residents in residential care homes, nursing homes, mental nursing homes or hostels and sheltered dwellings.

Mr. Key: Paragraph 9 of schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988 provides that a person is an exempt individual on a particular day if at any time on the day he has his sole or main residence in a residential care home, nursing home, mental nursing home or hostel and is receiving care or treatment—or both—in the home or hostel. There is no exemption for residents of sheltered dwellings. A practice note prepared jointly between the Department of the Environment and the local authority associations convering the subject of exemptions was distributed to all local authorities in May 1989. A copy was placed in the Library of the House.

Emergency Equipment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when implementing the EEC construction products directive interpretation document TC 2/020 "Safety in Case of Fire", he will require the independent certification of emergency equipment including emergency lighting and fire alarms to the appropriate European standard.

Mr. Yeo: The EC construction products directive, 89/106/EEC, has been implemented in the United Kingdom by means of the Construction Products Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991, No. 1620). These regulations came into force on 27 December last year.

The subordinate requirements for the certification of those construction products within the scope of the directive will be established at EC level. The decisions on this will be taken by the European Commission and the Standing Committee of Member States' representatives set up under article 19 of the directive.

The Department recognises the vital health and safety significance of construction products used to secure protection in case of fire. The line taken in EC negotiations on certification requirements will be determined in the light of negotiations with appropriate United Kingdom trade, professional and regulatory authorities.

Construction Industry

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the construction industry to discuss the effects of the recession in industry.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and his Ministers are engaged in a continuing round of discussions with representatives of the construction industry.

Gulf (Ecological Restoration)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom contribution to ecological restoration in the Gulf region in regard to (a) dugong habitats, (b) coral reef protection, (c) capping of oil wells, (d) oil pollution of the Kuwaiti desert, and (e) removal of Iraqi mines.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom was the first and largest contributor to the International Maritime Organisation's special trust fund to assist environmental recovery in the Gulf. Our £1 million contribution has been successfully used with those of others to clean up some of the Gulf's most sensitive habitats, including salt marsh and mangrove. I understand that no floating oil remains at sea. A United Kingdom expert, flown out with Government assistance to survey important Kuwaiti coral islands, found little evidence of damage.

All oil well fires are now out, some capped by a British group of companies which is continuing work on the reconstruction and repair of pipelines in the Sabriyah and Bahra fields. Other British consortia are bidding for recovery work to clear inland lakes of oil and the Natural Environment Research Council is helping to advise the Gulf states on pollution monitoring. Royal Ordnance plc is carrying out minefield clearance operations in Kuwait.

UN Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial or logistical support Her Majesty's Government have given to the organisers of the '92 global forum to be held in conjunction with the Earth summit at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro in June in the current year.

Mr. Baldry: The Government are contributing to international funding to enable government experts and representatives of non-governmental organisations from developing countries to attend UNCED and its preparatory committees. It is also providing financial support to British NGOs to enable them to contribute to United Kingdom preparations. It is the Government's priority to concentrate effort on ensuring the widest possible participation of governments and NGOs in the United Nations conference itself rather than the other events that are being held in parallel in Rio de Janeiro.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if has has any plans to meet (a) the British chambers of commerce and (b) non-governmental organisations in regard to plans for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside has held a number of meetings with environment and development non-governmental organisations and with representatives of the business community, including the United Kingdom section of the International Chamber of Commerce, on British preparations for UNCED. Further meetings are planned between now and the conference itself.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what preparations or proposals his Department has made for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress made to date in preparing proposals and reaching agreement on international environmental protection protocols and conventions for the Earth summit at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro in June.

Mr. Baldry: The Department of the Environment is responsible for co-ordinating the United Kingdom's preparations for UNCED in close consultation with other Government Departments and the non-governmental community. A number of wide-ranging British proposals have been put forward in the preparatory committees and in the parallel negotiations for conventions on climate change and biological diversity which we hope will be signed in Rio de Janeiro in June. A booklet on the United Kingdom's overall approach to UNCED has been prepared by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Environmental Protection Act 1990

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what draft guidance notes have been issued for consultation, pursuant to the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to date this year; and what further notes are expected to be issued this year.

Mr. Baldry: Consultation has already been undertaken in respect of all 50 process guidance notes for local authority air pollution control under part I of the Act which were published in February and July 1991. The following 27 such guidance notes have also been issued in draft for consultation:

PG1/10 — waste derived fuel combustion processes less than 3MW.
PG6/10 — coating manufacturing.
PG6/11 — manufacture of printing ink.
PG6/16 — printworks.
PG6/17 — printing of flexible packaging.
PG6/18 — paper coating.
PG6/19 — fish meal and fish oil.
PG6/20 — paint application in vehicle manufacturing.
PG6/21 — hide and skin processes.
PG6/22 — leather finishing.
PG6/23 — coating of metal and plastic.
PG6/24 — pet food manufacturing.
PG6/25 — vegetable oil extraction and fat and oil refining.
PG6/26 — animal feed compounding.
PG6/27 — vegetable matter drying.
PG6/28 — rubber processes.
PG6/29 — di-isocyanate processes.
PG6/30 — composting.
PG6/31 — powder coating (including sheradizing).
PG6/32 — adhesive coating.
PG6/33 — wood coating.
PG6/34 — respraying of road vehicles.
PG6/35 — metal and other thermal spraying processes.
PG6/36 — tobacco processing.
PG6/37 — knackers yards.
PG6/38 — blood processing.
PG6/39 — animal by-product dealers.

A further draft note on reheat and heat treatment furnaces (PG1/11) is expected to be issued this year.

Consultation was also undertaken on the six guidance notes published during 1991 by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. The following draft guidance notes have so far been issued by him for consultation:

IPR1/2 — gas turbines.
IPR1/3 — compression ignition engines 50MW(th) and over.
IPR1/4 — waste oil burners 3MW(th) and over.
IPR1/5 — refuse derived fuel burners.
IPR1/6 — tyre burners.
IPR1/7 — poultry litter burners.
IPR1/8 — straw and wood burners.
IPR1/9 — carbonisation and associated processes—coke ovens.
IPR1/10 — carbonisation processes—smokeless fuel plants.
IPR1/11 — gasification of solid and liquid feedstocks.
IPR1/12 — refining of natural gas.
IPR1/13 — refining of natural gas at liquefied natural gas sites.
IPR1/14 — the odorising of natural gas or liquefied petroleum gas.
IPR1/15 — crude oil refineries.
IPR1/16 — on-shore oil production.
IPR3/1 — cement manufacture and associated processes.
IPR3/2 — lime manufacture and associated processes.
IPR3/3 — processes involving asbestos.
IPR3/4 — glass and non-asbestos mineral fibres.
IPR3/5 — glass frit and enamel frit.
IPR3/6 — ceramic processes.
IPR5/1 — merchant and in-house chemical waste incineration.
IPR5/2 — clinical waste incineration.
IPR5/3 — municipal waste incineration.
IPR5/4 — animal carcase incineration.
IPR5/5 — burning out of metal containers.
IPR5/6 — making solid fuel from waste.
IPR5/7 — cleaning and regeneration of activated carbon.
IPR5/8 — recovery of organic solvents by distillation.
IPR5/9 — regeneration of ion exchange resins.
IPR5/10 — recovery of waste oil by distillation.
IPR5/11 — sewage sludge incineration.

The chief inspector is expected to issue further draft guidance notes for consultation this year as follows:

IPR4/1 — petrochemical.
IPR4/2 — production and use of amines, nitriles, isocyanates and pyridines.
IPR4/3 — production or use of aldehydes acids, anhydrides and phenols.
IPR4/4 — production or use of organic sulphur compounds; production, use or recovery of carbon disulphide.
IPR4/5 — batch manufacture of organic chemicals in multipurpose plant.
IPR4/6 — production and polymerisation of organic monomers.
IPR4/7 — manufacture of organo-metallic compounds.
IPR4/8 — pesticide processes.
IPR4/9 — pharmaceutical processes.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations his Department has had with UK Nirex Ltd. between the initial announcement of the low and intermediate level nuclear waste repository plans and the public announcement of substantial revisions in the plans.

Mr. Baldry: None. It is for Nirex to bring forward plans for the deep disposal facility for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste.

Defective Housing

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the payment of loan charge contributions to local authorities in England and Wales in respect of defective housing expenditure.

Sir George Young: It has recently come to light that the statutory basis for making defective housing loan charge contributions to local authorities, originally contained in section 569 of the Housing Act 1985, was inadvertently repealed when making provision for the commutation of loan charge contributions through section 157 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. We have always made it clear to local authorities that they should expect to receive these payments until commutation took place. Local authorities' total audited final claims in respect of 1991-92 are likely to amount to almost £21 million.

To ensure that local authorities do not incur financial loss, it has been agreed with the Treasury that although payments in respect of 1991-92 claims cannot be made under the 1989 legislation, local authorities will be recompensed the full amounts that would have been due to them by means of ex-gratia payments.

We shall be seeking legislation at the earliest possible opportunity in order to restore the original statutory position, and allow the commutation of defective housing payments including sums by way of loan charges to go ahead as quickly as possible.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his timetable for establishing a local government commission.

Mr. Key [holding answer 13 January 1992]: The commission will be formally established at an appropriate point following parliamentary approval of the relevant provisions of the Local Government Bill.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Oil Revenues

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount of money received from North sea oil revenues.

Mr. Maples: Total revenues to the Exchequer from the North sea since 1969-70 have been £72 billion. At 1991-92 prices—by reference to movements in the gross domestic product market prices implied deflator—revenues have been £112 billion.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give figures for the change in the volume of manufactured exports over the last 48 months.

Mr. Mellor: On a balance of payments basis, the volume of United Kingdom exports of manufactures is estimated to have risen by 26 per cent. between November 1987 and November 1991.

Note 1: Standard International Trade Classification (Rev. 3) Sections 5 to 8.

VAT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the calculations for United Kingdom payments to the own resources element of funding of the European Community value added tax-related payments for 1991 and give (a) the expected total yield of value added tax for the 12 months of 1991, (b) the amount payable to the European Community consequent on the calculation and (c) the sum (b) as a percentage of the sum (a).

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 13 January 1992]: Final accounting data for the calendar year 1991 have not yet been produced but payments have been made monthly based on estimates. Using current estimates the United Kingdom's net VAT yield and VAT-based contribution to the European Community are calculated to be:

(a) net VAT yield for the calendar year 1991—£35,796 million;

(b) amount paid to the European Community, net of the United Kingdom abatement—£771 million;

(c) net contribution as a proportion of VAT receipts —2·2 per cent.

The 1991 United Kingdom abatement, referred to above and made under the terms of article 4 of Council decision 88/376 dated 24 June 1988, amounts to £2,497 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection (Voters)

Sir Anthony Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) of 28 November, Official Report, column 570, what progress has been made in removing or mitigating the effects of the draft European directive on data protection on canvassing voters' intentions.

Mrs. Rumbold: The draft directive is still under consideration in the official working group in Brussels. I understand that the Commission will produce a redraft in the light of the opinion of the European Parliament. The opinion is not expected before next month.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward a measure to amend schedule 4 to the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to include offences under section 47 of the Shops Act 1950.

Mrs. Rumbold: I would refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 16 December 1991, Official Report, columns 10-11, to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton).

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for the Benefits Agency to amend the statement in leaflet FB31 that social fund payments do not usually have to be paid back.

Mr. Scott: The wording of leaflets is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

PRIME MINISTER

Foreign Investment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy in regard to selective intervention in circumstances of inward economic investment by foreign companies in (a) the regions of England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland, respectively.

The Prime Minister: Regional selective assistance (RSA) is available to encourage inward investment in the assisted areas of England, Wales and Scotland. Investors with a choice of location are offered the same level of RSA to go to assisted areas of equal status. A similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland but higher levels of assistance are available and may be offered.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what correspondence his office had with Mr. W. R. Burton on nuclear waste disposal over the past three years.

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, none.

World Commission on Environment and Development

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government have to contribute new proposals to the World Commission on Environment and Development when it reconvenes in London on 21 to 24 April.

The Prime Minister: I am delighted that the World commission will reconvene in London in April. The purpose of the meeting is to enable the commissioners to make their independent assessment of the prospects for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. The commissioners are not seeking proposals from Governments but, in view of the importance of the event, Her Majesty's Government are giving financial and other support to the organisers, the Centre for our Common Future.

UN Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what resources have been committed by Her Majesty's Government to ensuring wide public distribution of preparatory committee reports and decisions for the Earth summit at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

The Prime Minister: The Government have provided reports on decisions so far taken at UNCED preparatory committees to a wide range of interested organisations and individuals through the United Kingdom committee for UNEP.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has received on the international meeting of non-governmental organisations held in Paris in December to formulate agreed proposals to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

The Prime Minister: It is important that the views of the non-governmental community should be taken fully into account in preparations for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. I understand that agreement was not reached on all items addressed by the Paris meeting in December but that a partial set of proposals will be forwarded to the UNCED secretariat. These will be discussed at a meeting today between officials of the Department of the Environment and the British representatives of non-governmental organisations who attended the Paris meeting.

"Women and the Environment"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will obtain for his Office's library a copy of the recently published "Women and the Environment" compiled by Annabel Rodda.

The Prime Minister: I have already done so.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Medical Reports

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the guidance given by his Department to medical practitioners providing medical reports under regulation 10 to the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1989; and whether the teacher has the right to access to the report before it is sent to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fallon: Guidance to local education authorities and others on the suspension or termination of a teacher's employment on medical grounds is contained in circular 1/88 "Physical and Mental Fitness to Teach of Teachers and of Entrants to Teacher Training". Copies are available in the Library.

Whenever the Secretary of State requests a medical report to consider a person's exclusion from teaching on medical grounds, individual guidance is given about the nature of the report required. The teacher may have access to the report before the Secretary of State determines his or her case, except where the medical practitioners concerned consider that disclosure might not be in the teacher's best interests. The teacher also has the right to submit a separate report from a medical practitioner of his or her own choosing.

The Secretary of State has no power to require a medical report for the purpose of considering barring a person from teaching or related employment on the grounds of misconduct. However, he may, in appropriate cases, suggest that it would be helpful for the teacher to provide one. In all cases, the teacher's written consent to the report's being seen by the Secretary of State is obtained before the report is commissioned.

Reading Tests

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he made to ensure that the standards of testing by local authorities for seven-year-old readers was of a nationally consistent standard; and if he will state the names of any local authorities not sending in returns.

Mr. Eggar: The teachers who carried out the reading tests used standard materials and marking schemes, and used books chosen from a national list.

Each local education authority was required to secure consistency between its assessment standards and national standards, and training was provided for LEA assessment staff.

Tower Hamlets and Lambeth LEAs did not submit their schools' returns by the due date.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will tabulate in respect of each local education authority making returns of their assessments tests for seven-year-old readers, the number of schools making or not making returns, respectively, and the appropriate number and percentage within each authority contributing to the test results.

Mr. Eggar: The tables published by my right hon. and learned Friend on 19 December were based on the usable returns from the following percentages of maintained primary schools with seven-year-olds in each LEA.

The tables excluded Tower Hamlets and Lambeth, as they had not submitted sufficient returns. Action has been taken to obtain this outstanding data.

Universities

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of his consultations about university titles.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department and the Welsh Office are today writing to higher education institutions in the following terms:

University title beyond the present Polytechnics

1. The Education Department's paper, "Degree Awarding Powers and University Titles" consulted on the Government's proposals concerning:

(a) criteria for the extension of degree awarding powers beyond the present polytechnics:

(b) arrangements for the Secretary of State to secure advice on whether institutions meet those criteria; and

(c) criteria for extending the university title beyond the present polytechnics.

2. My letter of 16 December 1991 set out the Government's conclusions on the first two issues. This letter sets out the Secretary of State's decisions on the extension of the university title in the light of comments received on the consultation paper.

3. The Government's proposal was that the criteria for extending the university title beyond the present polytechnics should be that an institution would normally have:

(a) at least 300 full-time equivalent higher education students in a majority of the PCFC's nine academic programmes (or the Scottish equivalent);

(b) a higher education enrolment of at least 4,000 full-time equivalent students:

(c) at least 3,000 full-time higher education students on degree level courses;

(d) power to award its own taught course and research degrees.

4. Three of the four criteria have been widely welcomed. Some concern was expressed that criterion (c) would act as a disincentive to institutions expanding part-time provision at degree level. The Secretary of State accepts this point. He has decided that the criteria which shall apply are those in paragraph 3 above except that criterion (c) shall read:

(c) at least 3,000 full-time equivalent higher education students on degree level courses.

5. As explained in my letter of 16 December 1991, during the period up to the formal dissolution of the CNAA, the Government will look to the Council to advise on whether institutions validated by it meet the degree awarding criteria. The Government will, in parallel, appoint Ad Hoc Committees to look similarly at institutions which are validated by universities. The Secretary of State will announce later in the year the arrangements which will apply after the dissolution of the CNAA.

6. The procedures by which an institution may change its title will vary between institutions. However, any institution which the Secretary of State by order specifies as competent to grant its own degree-awarding powers for taught-courses and research and which meets the remaining university title criteria will be able to seek the consent of the Privy Council to a "university" title. The Privy Council will write soon to all Colleges of Higher Education explaining the procedures and the timing of applications.

7. A related issue to that of "university" title is that of the use of the title, "university college". This was not covered in the consultation paper because the Secretary of State did not see any cause to review the prevailing policy which was that an institution using a "university college" title should be a constituent part of a collegiate university. However, a number of respondents to the consultation paper commented to the effect that the "university college" title should be more widely available, possibly extending to all institutions of higher education which did not meet the university criteria.

8. The Secretary of State has considered the points made on this matter and has concluded that there should be no change in the current policy. Extending the availability of "university college" to independent institutions which are not part of a university would cause confusion with established "university colleges". The Secretary of State believes nevertheless that Colleges of Higher Education which do not qualify for a university title will be able to maintain their successes over recent years.

Republic of Ireland (Education)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about (a) the number of students from the United Kingdom receiving higher education in the Republic of Ireland and (b) the number of students from the Republic of Ireland receiving higher education in the United Kingdom; whether the United Kingdom Government pay for the fees for the Irish students in the United Kingdom; and whether the Republic of Ireland authorities pay the fees for United Kingdom students in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information is not collected centrally on the number of United Kingdom-domiciled students attending courses of higher education in the Irish Republic. However, according to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation, there were 814 United Kingdom students in full-time higher education in the Irish Republic in the academic year 1988-89. In the academic year 1990-91 there were 4,823 students from the Irish Republic on higher education courses in the United Kingdom. Under article 7 of the treaty of Rome, nationals of other EC states are entitled to have access to higher education on the same terms as apply to nationals of the host state. Accordingly, Irish students who attend higher education courses at United Kingdom institutions, and who fulfil broadly the same eligibility conditions as those applied to United Kingdom students, may qualify for an award which covers the cost of tuition fees up to a prescribed maximum level. The Irish Government have similar obligations under the EC treaty.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russian Federation (Treaties)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current status of (i) the 1963 partial test ban treaty and (ii) the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty in the light of the dissolution of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The rights and obligations of the Soviet Union as a party to the 1963 partial test ban treaty have been inherited by the Russian federation, which has continuity of statehood with the former Soviet Union. The United Kingdom is not a party to the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty, but we would assume that the same considerations apply.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what agreement has been reached with the new Government of the Russian federation to establish Russia as a third depositary state for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in place of the disbanded Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The rights and responsibilities of a depositary Government of the non-proliferation treaty have been inherited by the Russian federation which has continuity of statehood with the former Soviet Union.

East Timor

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review Her Majesty's Government's policy in relation to the supply of all arms and provision of military training to Indonesia in light of the report of the massacre in East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government's policy on the supply of arms and the provision of military training is kept under constant review. All applications to export defence equipment are carefully scrutinised on a case-by-case basis.

Verification

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was made by United Kingdom experts to the United Nations study, "Verification in all its Aspects; a Study on the Role of the United Nations in the Field of Verification", documents A/451372, presented to the General Assembly in August 1990; and what subsequent developments there have been arising from the report that affected United Kingdom policy on international verification.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A consultant from the Verification Technology Information Centre (VERTIC) was appointed to the United Nations Secretary-General's governmental experts' study on the role of the United Nations in the field of verification. The United Kingdom made a significant contribution to the successful outcome of the study.

The experts' report was considered at the United Nations General Assembly's 45th session. Resolution 45/63, adopted without vote, requested member states to give active consideration to the experts' proposals and asked the United Nations Secretary-General to report the outcome at the Assembly's 47th session in 1992.

Iraq (UN Contingent)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial resources the United Kingdom has committed to the United Nations guards contingent in Iraq; and what proportion of the total budget for the contingent is contributed by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom initially committed $6,000,000 in cash and kind to the United nations guards contingent in Iraq. On 17 December 1991 it pledged a further $1,000,000. This constitutes approximately 14 per cent. of the total budget so far committed for the contingent.

Gulf War (Radioactivity)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was made by Her Majesty's ambassador to the United Nations to the plea by Iraq's Foreign Minister to the United Nations on 21 November 1991, that it establish a team of United Nations experts to determine the level and possible danger of radioactive depleted uranium shells used by allied forces in Desert Storm and Operation Granby in 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the next Foreign Affairs Council meeting the issue of weapons usable enriched uranium and plutonium seized by customs authorities in Italy, originating in the former Soviet Union; and if he will instruct the United Kingdom ambassador to the International Atomic Energy Agency to urge an immediate agency investigation into the clandestine commerce in weapons-usable nuclear materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We view all reports of clandestine traffic in nuclear materials with great concern and are active in seeking to prevent such trafficking. In doing so, we naturally consult with our partners and with the IAEA where appropriate. We have discussed the present case with the Italian authorities.

UN Missions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of recent decisions taken at the United Nations General Assembly's fifth committee on budgetary affairs in regard to (a) the United Nation's advance mission to Cambodia and (b) the United Nation's Iraq-Kuwait observation mission; and what contribution the United Kingdom has made in respect of these missions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: At its 46th regular session, the United Nations General Assembly decided, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee (Administrative and Budgetary), to appropriate and assess the sum of $13,967,300 to finance the United Nations advance mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC) for a six-month period beginning November 1991 and the sum of $33·6 million to finance the United Nations Iraq-Kuwait observer mission (UNIKOM) for the period 9 October 1991 to 8 April 1992. Both recommendations were accepted by the General Assembly.

The United Kingdom-assessed share, at the special peacekeeping scale of the cost of both these missions is 6·1 per cent. There are 20 United Kingdom observers serving with UNIKOM and three with UNAMIC.

Somalia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Somalia.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government are deeply concerned by the continuing instability in Somalia. We have called on the parties to halt the indiscriminate shelling of civilian areas in Mogadishu and to allow secure distribution of humanitarian relief supplies. We continue to support international initiatives to bring about a ceasefire. We deplore the refusal of some Somali leaders to accept mediation.

On 8 January I announced a further £2·2 million food aid, raising the total humanitarian aid to Somalia since January 1991 to £7·42 million, including our share of EC assistance.

WALES

Ysgol Gyfun Gwyr

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he sent a letter to the hon. Member for Gower informing him that his Minister of State was to visit Ysgol Gyfun Gwyr, sited in the village of Gowerton, Swansea.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is standard practice for my private office to notify right hon. and hon. Members, in writing and in advance, of my official visits to their constituencies. I regret that owing to an oversight, no letter was sent on this occasion.

A44

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve the A44 trunk road between Gelli Isaf and Dyffryn Castell hotel, Ponterwyd, during the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Consideration is being given to undertaking an improvement scheme on this stretch of road during the next five years.

Chernobyl

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farms were initially put on the restricted list following the radioactive fallout contamination from the Chernobyl nuclear accident in 1986; if he will list the number of farms and their respective acreage taken off the list in each subsequent year; and what steps he is taking to restore to full usage the remaining farms.

Mr. David Hunt: Restrictions were first introduced in Wales in June 1986 and affected about 5,100 holdings and approximately 1,013,000 acres of land. During 1986 and 1987 some 4,684 holdings and approximately 804,000 acres were derestricted, with a further nine holdings and approximately 4,000 acres derestricted in 1991.

The extent of the restrictions depends on the levels of radioactivity found in sheep grazing the area. Monitoring results from sheep leaving the restricted area, under the mark and release scheme, and results from regular monitoring of sheep at selected sites throughout the restricted area are continually assessed. This information assists in the identification of suitable locations for intensive monitoring to assess the prospects for derestriction. As a result of these procedures I was able to lift restrictions on nine holdings in 1991. Work, including research and development, will continue to be carried out to achieve further derestrictions as soon as it can be shown that it is safe to do so. Meanwhile, the "mark and release" arrangements are designed to ensure that normal sheep farming practices within the restricted area continue with the minimum of disruption consistent with the protection of the foodchain.

Prescriptions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) for what reason it is his Department's policy that separate charges are made when a doctor in Wales prescribes a course of treatment which involves two active ingredients when the ingredients are packaged as a single entity by the manufacturers;

(2) for what reason it is his Department's policy that a single charge is made when a doctor in Wales prescribes a course of treatment which involves two active ingredients when the ingredients are formulated together in a single package.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The National Health Service (Charges for Drugs and Appliance) Regulations 1989 provide that a prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed unless the patient is exempt. Where two or more ingredients are supplied in a single tablet or capsule, a single charge is made. If, for the convenience of the patient and to improve compliance, two or more kinds of tablet or capsule are supplied in one package, each carries a separate prescription charge.

The Government are concerned to ensure that patient's liability to meet prescription charges is applied in an equitable manner. It would not be appropriate to allow manufacturers' packaging arrangements, which provide a benefit to some patients, also to determine the number of charges a patient may have to pay.

Education Funding Councils

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the names of the chairmen and chief executive of both the further and higher education funding councils for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Subject to the Further and Higher Education Bill receiving Royal Assent, I intend to appoint Mr. Malcolm Wallace to be chairman of the Further Education Funding Council and Sir Idris Pearce to be chairman of the Higher Education Council. Both will be employed as chairmen designate on preparatory work.

I have also decided after consulting the chairmen designate, that the councils should be serviced by a single secretariat. This should make close working arrangements between the two bodies very much easier. The important post of chief executive of the two councils will be filled by Professor John Andrews.

Tourism

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the Wales tourist board should be able to carry on activities outside the United Kingdom in order to promote Welsh tourism.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government remain concerned that Wales should continue to receive the economic benefits which accrue from a strong and broadly based tourism industry. We have considered carefully that many representations which have been made suggesting that powers should be granted to the Wales tourist board to undertake activities outside the United Kingdom in order to promote tourism in Wales.

The industry is expected to continue to expand rapidly worldwide, and there will undoubtedly be increasing competition for overseas visitors. The Government therefore support the intentions of the Tourism (Overseas Promotion) (Wales) Bill—which was introduced by the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan)—to grant powers to the Wales tourist board corresponding to those enjoyed by the Scottish tourist board under the Tourism (Overseas Promotion) (Scotland) Act 1984. The Government are also prepared to offer drafting assistance if necessary.

I have accepted the Wales tourist board's assurance that it would not exercise such powers unless it had undertaken full consultation with and obtained the agreement of the British Tourist Authority before embarking upon any overseas marketing activity, and that it would not seek a direct overseas presence by opening separate offices in overseas markets. My consent will only be given on this basis.

Home Repossessions

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homeowners in Cardiganshire have suffered repossession of their homes due to mortgage arrears in each year since 1980 until the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The figures for the number of repossessions are not collected. The only information available on mortgage possessions is the number of actions entered and orders made in each county court. Two county courts deal with Cardiganshire cases—Aberystwyth and Carmarthen—and information is available, as set out below, for Aberystwyth county court for each year from 1987 to 1990 and the first 11 months of 1991.

Not all these orders will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrants of possession. Carmarthen county court deals with a wider area than just Cardiganshire and it is not possible to separate these cases.

EMPLOYMENT

Hairdressers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that employers comply with Government guidelines relating to minimum wages for hairdressers and trainee hairdressers.

Mr. Forth: Hairdressers are covered by the Hairdressing Undertakings Wages Council (Great Britain), and workers aged 21 years and over must be paid at least the statutory minimum remuneration agreed by that Council. The wages inspectorate provides information about the requirements of the Wages Act 1986 and checks that establishments comply with the law. A leaflet on the wages council system is freely available to all inquirers.

New Businesses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses are estimated to have been started since May 1979; how many were started in the previous five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Between the end of 1979 and the end of 1990, there were an estimated 2,147,000 new registrations for VAT and 1,727,000 deregistrations—a net increase of 420,000. During the previous five years, between the end of 1974 and the end of 1979, there were an estimated 809,000 new registrations and 724,000 deregistrations—a net increase of 85,000.

The available indicators for 1991 show that there continue to be more businesses starting up than closing down. For example, there have been over 1,000 starts a week under enterprise allowance alone.

Wages Councils

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on progress in his policy to abolish wages councils.

Mr. Forth: The wages councils have no permanent place in the labour market and their operation remains under review.

Tourism

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce powers for the English tourist board to promote England as a tourist destination overseas.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is informing the House separately of the Government's views on whether powers should be granted to the Wales tourist board, corresponding to those enjoyed by the Scottish tourist board under the Tourism (Overseas Promotion) (Scotland) Act 1984. The Government are also considering whether, at an appropriate time, the English tourist board should be granted similar powers. I therefore intend shortly to arrange for representatives of the tourism industry to be consulted on this question.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

United Nations (Distribution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific proposals his Department has for the wide distribution of handtools to agrarian developing economies via the United Nations agencies and institutions.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no such plans. Except in cases of humanitarian need where we occasionally provide handtools via the United Nations system to aid post-disaster recovery, we do not consider the wide distribution of handtools to agrarian developing economies to be sound development policy. This process can distort and damage manufacturing sectors in these economies. We prefer instead to stimulate the local production of such tools.

UN Research Institute for Social Development

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Overseas Development Administration gives to the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development to distribute its publications in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA currently gives no assistance to the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development.

Aid Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the new agenda for Africa in the 1990s adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on 18 December 1991; and what are the implications of this agenda for Her Majesty's Government's overseas aid programme.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Nation's new agenda for the development of Africa in the 1990s encourages African countries to make further progress on economic reform; improve the quality of their public expenditure programmes; and pay particular attention to human resource development and capacity building. It stresses the link between economic and social development and good governance.

These are already the aims of our bilateral assistance programmes to African countries. Almost 50 per cent. of our bilateral aid goes to Africa. We have also taken the lead in promoting international consensus and action on debt relief for the poorest, most heavily indebted countries undertaking economic reforms, many of which are in Africa.

Natural Resources Institute

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what activities have been undertaken by the Natural Resources Institute since its last annual report.

Mrs. Chalker: I have placed in the Library of the House copies of the Natural Resources Institute's report on operational programmes 1989-91 and the annual report and accounts 1990-91. These reports give details of work undertaken by NRI in support of the renewable natural resources sector in developing countries, and of the institute's performance in its first year as a "next steps" agency.

HEALTH

Access to Equipment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Cardiff, West dated 24 October 1991, regarding the enforcement of the right of free access to equipment, including nebulisers.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be responding to the hon. Member's letter of 24 October shortly. The individual cases to which he refers are being investigated by South Glamorgan health authority whose policy and practice in the supply of equipment such as nebulisers complies with the requirements of the National Health Service Act 1977.

Prescriptions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for what reason it is his Department's policy that separate charges are made when a doctor prescribes a course of treatment which involves two active ingredients when the ingredients are packaged as a single entity by the manufacturers;

(2) for what reason it is his Department's policy that a single charge is made when a doctor prescribes a course of treatment which involves two active ingredients when the ingredients are formulated together in a single package.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Health Service (Charges for Drugs and Appliances) Regulations 1989 provide that a prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed, unless the patient is exempt. Where two or more ingredients are supplied in a single tablet or capsule, a single charge is made. If, for the convenience of the patient and to improve compliance, two or more kinds of tablet or capsule are supplied in one package, each carries a separate prescription charge.

The Government are concerned to ensure that patients' liability to meet prescription charges is applied in an equitable manner. It would not be appropriate to allow manufacturers' packaging arrangements, which provide a benefit to some patients, also to determine the number of charges a patient may have to pay.

Haemoglobinopathies

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Standing Medical Advisory Committee working party on the clinical and service aspects of haemoglobinopathies; when the working party will report; and what are its terms of reference.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 20 December 1991]: The membership of the working party is as follows:

Professor A. G. Johnson, Chairman
Dr. E. Anionwu
Professor A. J. Bellingham,
Dr. M. Brozovic
Dr. I Cox
Professor C. J. Dickinson
Dr. R. MacFaul
Dr. B. Modell
Professor A. Spence

The working party is due to hold its first meeting in the new year. Broadly, it will address issues of current good practice, screening, counselling and information for patients in respect of sickle cell disease and make recommendations to the medical profession. Terms of reference and the timescale for reporting to SMAC are currently under discussion.

NHS Budget

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the amount and proportion of the national health service budget spent on acute hospital care, chronic and long-term hospital care, health promotion advice and services and primary health care in each of the years from 1985-86 to 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 January 1992]: Information is not collected centrally in precisely the form requested, but the available figures are given in the table.

[1] Estimated outturn

[2] Expenditure on hospital care is classified by specialty according to the consultant responsible for the care of the patient. Acute services are defined as all specialities except maternity, mental illness and learning disability (mental handicap). Expenditure on the latter three specialities cannot be broken down between short episodes and long stay.

[3] Figures shown are drawn from the Programme Budget. Disaggregated figures are not yet available for years after 1989-90. The HCHS current expenditure covered by the Programme Budget represents around 64 per cent. of total NHS expenditure.

[4] Health promotion and advice form part of many programmes of care, particularly in primary care and community health services and the expenditure shown above under this heading reflects only part of the total expenditure in this area.

[5] From 1988-89, the classification of expenditure on community health services has changed, and it is not possible to provide figures on a consistent basis with those for earlier years. In particular, expenditure on "health visiting" recorded under either "immunisation", "surveillance" or professional advice and support. Expenditure on "district nursing" is now recorded under "general community patient care", which also includes expenditure on paramedical services. Figures for 1988-89 have been provided on both old and new bases, for comparison with earlier and later years.

[6] Expenditure on Family Health Services (excluding administration) provided by family doctors, dentists, community pharmacists and opticians.

[7] 1991-92 figure includes provision of £141 million for drug costs of GP fundholders which is incorporated in the cash limited Class XIII Vote 1.

[8] GP practice expenses cash limited from April 1990.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Policy

13. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet representatives of the west midlands regional CBI to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lilley: I shall be visiting a number of companies in the west midlands in March.

25. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Lilley: From time to time I have met representatives of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, or of individual chambers, to discuss industrial policy.

International Competitiveness

14. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from business men about the importance of maintaining for the international competitiveness of British industry a low regulatory burden.

Mr. Redwood: I regularly receive representations from business on the importance of minimising regulatory burdens on business. In the Government's approach to national regulation and in negotiations on proposals for new EC regulations, the potential costs of compliance and impact on the competitiveness of United Kingdom industry are fully taken into account.

The most recent record of progress under the Deregulation Initiative, "Cutting Red Tape for Business", was published on 13 May 1991 and a copy placed in the Library.

Direct Mail

20. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received about the regulation of direct mail.

Mr. Leigh: I receive a small but steady flow of complaints from individuals and hon. Members about direct mail.

Vehicle Transfer Agencies

21. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take steps to outlaw vehicle transfer agencies; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The existing law, in particular the Consumer Credit Act 1974, contains provisions regulating the activities of vehicle transfer agencies. I welcome the action which the Director General of Fair Trading is taking under those provisions.

Motor Industry

22. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet representatives of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders to discuss the effects of the recession on the motor industry.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders on 11 November to discuss various motor industry issues. While no further meeting is planned for the immediate future, the Department maintains regular contact with the SMMT at all levels.

27. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received from the engineering industry about the state of the motor car industry.

Mr. Leigh: The Secretary of State has regular contacts with the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, which represents component manufacturers as well as vehicle builders, and with individual companies. These contacts, together with those of other DTI Ministers and officials in the DTI's vehicles task force and regional offices, enable him to keep up-to-date on issues affecting the motor car industry.

Maastricht

23. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has carried out amongst the leaders of British industry on their attitude to the Maastricht negotiations; what were the responses he received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The director general of the CBI congratulated the Prime Minister and his colleagues on having "achieved exactly what business needs" from Maastricht. The Government, too, believe that British industry will be well served by the agreement reached at Maastricht.

Investment Location

24. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from business men concerning the impact of the regulatory environment on decisions about location of investment.

Mr. Redwood: None, Sir. However, my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau reports that foreign potential investors have often commented favourably on the United Kingdom's regulatory environment. That is why we are the preferred location in the Economic Community for investment from Japan and the United States.

Eastern Europe

26. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the present availability of export assistance to United Kingdom companies trading with eastern Europe.

Mr. Sainsbury: A range of services is available under the enterprise initiative including support for outward missions and participation in overseas trade fairs, the provision of general information on overseas markets and answers to specific questions about market opportunities. The services are available through the country sections of my Department or our network of regional offices.

Export Credits Guarantee Department credit insurance cover for medium-term business—ie on credit term of two years or more—is available for Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Short-term cover is now provided by the private sector.

Aircraft Industry

28. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the balance of trade in aircraft and aircraft components for the most recent two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Leigh: The latest available figures are for the 12-month period ending September 1991 for which the United Kingdom had a positive trade balance in aircraft and aircraft components of £2·8 billion, compared with £1·7 billion for the previous 12 months ending September 1990.

Plugs and Sockets

29. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to amend the Plugs and Sockets Etc. (Safety) Regulations 1987.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is currently considering a number of amendments to the Plugs and Sockets Etc. (Safety) Regulations 1987 as part of a general review.

Mining Exports

30. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the mining engineering industry to discuss export prospects.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have had no request for such a meeting.

My officials are, however, in frequent contact with the industry and its trade association on this subject.

Aerospace Industry

31. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the British representatives of General Electric to discuss the aerospace industry.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to meet the British representatives of General Electric.

Kuwait

32. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on trade between the United Kingdom and Kuwait since the end of the Gulf war.

Mr. Sainsbury: United Kingdom exports began to recover almost immediately after the end of the war so that by the third quarter of 1991 the value of exports was at the 1989—pre-war—level of approximately £56 million per quarter. Imports from Kuwait are recovering more slowly.

US Investment

33. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's share of investment from the United States into the European Community.

Mr. Leigh: The UK has maintained its successful track record as the preferred location within the European Community for inward investment from the USA. Britain's share of United States investment in the EC stood at 37·5 per cent. at the end of 1990.

Manufacturing Trade Deficit

34. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received about the manufacturing trade deficit.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have received no representations recently on the manufacturing trade deficit. However, I frequently meet representatives from the CBI and industry and a wide variety of subjects are discussed.

Exports and Inward Investment

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support his Department gives to consulate staff in non-EC countries in identifying export opportunities for United Kingdom firms and inward investment opportunities.

Mr. Sainsbury: Commercial staff in Foreign and Commonwealth Office overseas posts provide a wide range of information, advice, and assistance to UK exporters and to potential investors in the UK. They are assisted by the joint directorate and the Invest in Britain Bureau.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council held in Brussels on Thursday 19 December.

Mr. Redwood: I attended the Internal Market Council on 19 December 1991. Political agreements were reached on public procurement (services), the third non-life insurance directive and the second diplomas directive. Common positions were reached on the three remaining vehicle type approval measures, pharmaceutical patent protection and homeopathic medicines. Also, final agreement was reached on insurance accounts, insurance committees, and common positions on sweeteners, two and three-wheeled vehicles and hot water boilers.

The council also held policy discussions on food irradiation and the Berne and Paris conventions along with brief progress reports on border controls, the future medicinal systems, the CE mark and data protection. The council also agree to reject a request for talks on Commission staff pay.

Employee Inventions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many claims for adjudication have been made to the Comptroller of Patents seeking awards for employee inventions as provided in section 40 of the Patents Act 1977 in each year since 1978; in how many of those cases an award was made; and what was the average value of the awards made in each year.

Mr. Leigh: The number of applications under section 40 to the comptroller since 1978 has been 16—one in 1984, one in 1985, five in 1986, one in 1987, four in 1989, two in 1990 and two in 1991. Of these, eight were withdrawn before hearing, three were heard but no award made, and the remaining five are still in the evidence stage. One of the applicants heard but rejected is under appeal to the Patents Court.

Protein Engineering

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many research projects are being funded under the protein engineering link programme in universities and polytechnics; what is their total value; how many universities and polytechnics have research projects funded under the protein engineering link programme; and if he will list them.

Mr. Leigh: There are eight projects with university involvement within the link protein engineering programme; no polytechnics are as yet involved. The total value of these projects amounts to over £3 million—50 per cent. from the Government grant and the rest from industry. The seven universities involved are Bath, Cambridge—two projects—Leeds, Nottingham, Oxford, Sheffield and Sussex.

Takeover Panel

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indemnify the takeover panel against possible liability for defamation arising from the preparation and publication of its pending report on the takeover of House of Fraser; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am not responsible for the takeover panel and the question of indemnification in respect of any of its business does not therefore arise.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made in those parts of the general agreement on tariffs and trade Uruguay round negotiations relating to textiles and clothing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The draft Final Act on the Uruguay round which the GATT director-general recently circulated provides, in relation to textiles, for the multi-fibre arrangement to be phased out over 10 years from 1993. It explicitly links this to strengthened GATT rules and disciplines and market access.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what business incentives are available to support private sector nuclear waste and safety consultants to obtain work through the public civil nuclear authorities operating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: My Department offers no incentives to consultants to help them obtain work of this kind.

Environmental Investment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what invitations Ministers or officials of his Department have received to participate in the Club de Bruxelles forum on environmental investment priorities in Europe on 6 February.

Mr. Leigh: Officials of my Department recently received details of this event but have yet to decide whether or not they will attend it.

Manufacturing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to combat short-termism and its effects on the manufacturing sector of industry.

Mr. Redwood: In recent years there have been many good examples of major long term manufacturing investments in the United Kingdom. The key to this is encouraging competitiveness.

NORTHERN IRELAND

BSE

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cattle were destroyed as a result of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in each of the months of October, November and December 1991; whether the problem of BSE is now in decline; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The answer is:

Month	Total number destroyed
October	21
November	32
December	18
Total	71

There are 1,533,226 cattle in Northern Ireland, and a total of 308 confirmed cases of BSE have been reported to date.

Braniel Estate, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many housing allocations were made in the Braniel estate, Castlereagh, in each of the months of October, November and December 1991; and how many of these allocations in each of the three months were to (a) homeless persons and (b) single-parent families.

Mr. Hanley: These are matters for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that the information requested is as follows:

	October 1991	November 1991	December 1991
Total allocations	7	6	3
Homeless	[1]4	[1]2	—
Single parent	1	1	1

[1] Includes single-parent allocation.

Newtownards (Housing)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applicants there are on the waiting list for homes in Newtownards; how many are categorised as primary cases; how many homes are presently under construction in Newtownards; and how many new homes will be commenced in 1992 in Newtownards.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, whose chief executive has advised that at 31 December there were 856 applicants on the executive's waiting list for the Ards borough council area, of whom 131 were in the priority category. Separate information for the town of Newtownards is not available. There are 66 Housing Executive dwellings under construction in Newtownards and the executive proposes to start building 62 new houses in the town in 1992-93.

"Angel Dust"

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of "angel dust" were detected in animals in each of the months of October, November and December 1991; and how many prosecutions are now pending.

Mr. Hanley: Clenbuterol, commonly referred to as "angel dust", was detected in the following numbers of animals during the periods in question:

	Number of cases detected
October	9
November	2
December	5

Excluding the above, four prosecutions are pending in respect of offences committed prior to October 1991.

SCOTLAND

Appointments

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the paid appointments within his patronage, (b) the annual remuneration paid to each one and (c) the total remuneration costs.

Mr. Lang: Table 1 shows the annual remuneration at 1 July 1991 to my appointees in paid appointments.

Table 2 provides the same information in respect of appointments made jointly with other Ministers. The respective totals, excluding those appointees paid on a fee basis, are £1,458,172 and £603,689.

Hospital Beds (Highland Region)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many unoccupied beds in private nursing homes are being paid for by Highland health board; and at what cost.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that Highland health board has concluded that the negotiation of a contract with a private nursing home in Portree would be a more cost-effective way of providing better care for the elderly in a more central location in Skye. The closure of Gesto hospital is now the subject of public consultation. If meanwhile the board judges it right to reserve accommodation to ensure that its plans can be implemented, that is a matter for it. I will approve the closure of Gesto hospital only if it is clear that the alternative accommodation offers a better service to patients.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications, in terms of compensation, of a decision by Her Majesty's Government not to proceed with the proposed Skye toll bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As is normal commercial practice, termination by one party which constituted a breach of contract could entitle the other party to claim compensation.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the implications for the toll period of any increase in the cost of the proposed Skye toll bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Depending on the circumstances, an increase in costs required by the Secretary of State may result in an increase in the toll period. The length of such an extension would depend on the scale of extra costs and the forecast traffic volumes.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the principal terms, including those relating to compensation, of the contract entered into by the Scottish Office in relation to the proposed Skye bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As is normal commercial practice, the financial details of the contracts are confidential. However, the other principal terms of the contract are set out in the assignation statement published with the draft toll order.

There is provision in the contracts for compensation in the event of default by either party at all stages in both the construction and operation of the crossing.

House Repossessions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many home owners in Scotland have suffered repossession of their homes due to mortgage arrears in each year since 1979 until the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: This information is not available in the form requested. The Council of Mortgage Lenders publishes statistics in its regular newsletters on various aspects of mortgage lending by building societies but this is on a Great Britain basis and no corresponding information is available for Scotland only. No information about other mortgage lenders is held centrally.

Ayr Hospital

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last visited the new Ayr hospital; whether he informed the hon. Member for the constituency which includes the new hospital in advance of his visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: As the hon. Member is aware I last visited the new Ayr hospital on 6 January. I have since written to him on the matter.

Dundee Institute of Technology

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implications for Dundee institute of technology of the Government's proposed reforms of higher education.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), confirming the criteria for the extension of university title to institutions other than polytechnics.

This decision means that Dundee institute of technology does not at present meet the criteria for the right to use the university title. The institute will benefit from my right hon. Friend's announcement of 30 December under which it will acquire degree-awarding powers for both taught and research degrees in recognition of the very high academic standards it has attained. Clearly, the institute will wish to consider how best to build on its record of achievement. The institute can look forward to the opportunity presented by the establishment of the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council to compete for funds on exactly the same basis as all Scottish higher education establishments.

The institute recently submitted proposals to the Secretary of State to merge with Highland, Western Isles and Fife colleges of nursing and midwifery. I wrote to Dr. Cuming, the principal of the institute, on 12 December asking him to review an expanded range of options for its future development. In that letter, I made it clear that, before I could give a considered response to the proposals involving the nursing colleges, I would want to view them in the context of the institute's assessment of the merits and practicality of collaboration with other providers of higher education in the Dundee area. So far as the specific option submitted to my right hon. Friend was concerned, if this were to be pursued I made it clear that I would in due course require to see a more fully argued case which addressed the detailed criteria set out in annex B of the report on mergers by the Scottish committee of the Universities Funding Council published on 25 November.

Universities

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria he will apply in advising the Privy Council on applications for the use of the university title by higher education institutions other than the present polytechnics and universities.

Mr. Lang: My Department has today written to those representative bodies to which copies of our consultation paper on this matter were issued on 31 October. Copies have also been sent to all Members presently serving on the First Scottish Standing Committee considering the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Bill. Given the public interest in this matter the full text of the letter is reproduced below.

"University title

1. The Consultation Paper "Degree Awarding Powers and University Title" issued by the Education Departments on 31 October 1991 consulted on the Government's proposals concerning:

1.1 criteria for the extension of degree awarding powers beyond the present polytechnics;

1.2 arrangements for the Secretary of State to secure advice on whether institutions meet those criteria; and

1.3 criteria for extending the university title beyond the present polytechnics.

2. The Government's conclusions on the first 2 issues have already been set out in our letter of 30 December 1991. This letter sets out the Government's conclusions on the criteria for extending the university title beyond the present polytechnics.

Criteria for University Title

3. Following a generally favourable response to the criteria set out in its consultation paper, the Government has decided that the criteria on which the Secretary of State will base his advice to the Privy Council on any application for use of the university title will be substantially as set out in the consultation paper. The criteria will be that an institution should have:—

(a) at least 300 full-time equivalent higher education students in a majority of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council's 9 academic programmes;

(b) a higher education enrollment of at least 4,000 full-time equivalent students;

(c) at least 3,000 full-time equivalent higher education students on degree level courses;

(d) power to award its own taught course and research degrees.

4. The only change in the above criteria, compared with those in the consultation paper, is that the third criterion is now cast by reference to full-time equivalent student numbers rather than full-time student numbers. In view of the importance of increasing access to higher education through more flexible course structures and, in particular, part-time provision the Government concluded in the light of comments received that this change was desirable. Assessment of the number of full-time equivalent higher education students on degree level courses in an institution will be made by reference to the proportion of students leaving an institution with a full first degree or higher qualification, or a qualification which is equivalent to a full first degree or higher qualification, in the latest academic session for which figures are available.

5. Some institutions asked which students might be included for the purposes of those criteria which include reference to student numbers. The Government does not intend that account should be taken, in assessing applications from individual institutions, of students in associated institutions.

6. The Privy Council Office will write soon to Colleges of Higher Education explaining the procedures and the timing of applications. We are writing in similar terms to all representative organisations which responded to the Consultation Paper of 31 October 1991".

Revaluation

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he intends to make for 1992-93 to continue phasing in the effects of the 1990 revaluation.

Mr. Lang: We are committed to limiting annual increases in non-domestic rate bills resulting from revaluation to a maximum of 20 per cent. in real terms, to 15 per cent. for those ratepayers occupying properties with rateable values of less than £10,000, and to 10 per cent. in the case of part-residential properties with rateable values of less than £10,000.

In order to maintain the level of non-domestic rate income this year, we arranged to limit decreases in non-domestic rate bills resulting from revaluation to 11·5 per cent. in real terms, and to 16·5 per cent. for those ratepayers occupying properties with rateable values of less than £10,000. The limits for those who benefited from the revaluation will reduce by a further 11·5 per cent. and 16·5 per cent. in real terms in 1992-93.

These changes will be set out in regulations which I shall lay before Parliament in the near future. The regulations will prescribe the multipliers to be applied to the rateable values of properties in the valuation roll on 31 March 1990 to determine the upper and lower notional rateable values for the purpose of calculating non-domestic rate bills for 1992-93. The multipliers for the upper limits will be 2·323 for properties with rateable values as at 1 April 1990 of £10,000 or more, 2·045 for those with rateable values of less than £10,000 and 1·871 for part-residential properties with values of less than £10,000. The multipliers for the lower limits will be 0·931 for properties with rateable values as at 1 April 1990 of £10,000 or more and 0·782 for those properties with values of less than £10,000.

DEFENCE

"The Campus Connection"

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain a copy of "The Campus Connection" for his departmental library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The MOD library added a copy of the CND publication "The Campus Connection" to its loan stock on 11 November 1991.

Ms. Lindis Percy

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department is claiming against Ms. Lindis Percy in respect of police costs as part of the proceedings to prevent Ms. Percy from entering Menwith hill; how the amount has been calculated; and under what powers the claim is being made against Ms. Percy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is claiming common law damages from Ms. Lindis Percy, based on the cost of MOD police man hours devoted to dealing with Ms. Percy's persistent trespasses at Menwith hill station. This cost has reached some £11,600 by 21 August 1991.

Defence Arrangements (CIS)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the leadership of the new Commonwealth of Independent States has communicated with NATO Defence Ministers regarding decisions taken at its planning meeting on new collective independent conventional and nuclear defence arrangements in Minsk at the end of December 1991.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No formal notification of the outcome of the meeting was sent to NATO Defence Ministers. The outcome was, however, widely reported in the media, and the Government have followed developments closely.

Mayak (Radioactive Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to give assistance to the Russian military nuclear authorities to decontaminate the radioactive pollution at the Mayak atomic complex and the nearby Tecka river near Chelyabinsk.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In conjunction with our NATO partners, we are ready to consider requests for assistance in the nuclear field from the successor states to the former Soviet Union. NATO is reviewing where best that effort might be directed.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all national and local television and radio broadcasts he and other Ministers in his Department have made since 20 December on the questions of (a) the control of the nuclear weapons of the former Soviet Union by the Commonwealth of Independent States and (b) the future of British nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested.

Nuclear Research

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military nuclear research has been conducted at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich; and what clean up programmes have taken place at former facilities used for military nuclear research or storage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some early research was carried out at various locations at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich. The facilities used have been decommissioned and cleaned up. Current decontamination work at the nearby Woolwich garrison is unrelated to the former facilities at the Royal Arsenal site.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Woodland Premium Scheme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implementation of the farm woodland premium scheme announced in November last year.

Mr. Curry: We are finalising the details of this scheme, which will be introduced on 1 April 1992, in the light of comments received from interested organisations consulted about our proposals. A further announcement will made shortly.

I would also refer the hon. Member to the announcement on 19 December by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), Official Report, column 296 about special arrangements for the payment of higher establishment grants in respect of all planting carried out under the farm woodland scheme since 1 October 1991.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Repossessions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has concerning the number of repossessions adjudicated in the Crown courts in Wales in each of the last four quarters up to 31 December 1991.

The Attorney-General: Possession actions are dealt with in the county court, not in the Crown court. The figures for the number of repossessions are not collected. The only information available on mortgage possession is the number of actions entered and orders made in each county court. The table gives the information for Welsh county courts for the first three quarters, and October and November of 1991, the latter being the latest data available. Not all the orders will have resulted in the issue and execution of warrnts of possession.

Mortgage possession—actions entered and orders made in the Welsh county courts

1991	Total number of actions entered	Total number of orders made
January to March	2,236	1,644
April to June	2,591	1,754
July to September	3,050	1,990
October to November	1,769	1,455

TRANSPORT

Freight Terminal, Isle of Grain

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the new freight terminal at Thamesport, Isle of Grain, is to be opened; and what assessment he has made of the benefits it will bring to residents of Medway.

Mr. Freeman: I visited Thamesport on 7 January to inspect the start of work on the new rail freight terminal which has attracted a £1·77 million grant under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974. I understand that the terminal will be operational by the end of the year and should enable up to 35 per cent. of container traffic to be carried by rail bringing relief to roads in this part of Kent and in particular the A228 which links the port to the A2/M2.

Brownhills Roundabout, Lancashire

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made on the improvement scheme to Brownhills roundabout, A666/A6119 intersection, and the A6119 bridge over the railway nearby; what has caused the delays; and when Lancashire county council will be enabled to go ahead with the scheme.

Mr. Chope: Compulsory purchase orders are to be published shortly. Some of the land to be acquired is public open space and there has been some difficulty in identifying suitable replacement land. We hope that work will start during the 1992-93 financial year.

Vehicle Statistics

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list, using the data in the south-east regional brief published by his Department on 4 December 1991, the number of cars per 1,000 of the population in England excluding the south-east region in 1989 and the number of vehicles per mile of surfaced road in 1989 in (a) the south-east Region and (b) the rest of England.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows:

(i) In 1989 there were 354 cars per 1,000 of the population in England, excluding the south-east region;
(ii) In 1989 there were 149 vehicles per mile of surfaced road in the south-east Region
(iii) In 1989 there were 122 vehicles per mile of surfaced road in the rest of England.

Hastings-Ashford Line

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the electrification of the railway line between Hastings and Ashford has been included in British Rail's programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from British Rail that it is examining proposals for the electrification of the railway line between Hastings and Ashford, for inclusion in its programme of work scheduled to commence in 1994-95.

Bedford Bypass

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current position of (a) the southern bypass for Bedford including a Norse road connection and (b) the western relief road.

Mr. Chope: I hope to be able to make a further announcement shortly.

Clyde Port Authority

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of the parties which have formally expressed their intention to seek to acquire the Clyde port authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. That is a matter of commercial confidence between the Clyde port authority, as vendor of the port undertaking, and the parties concerned.

Speed Limit Order, Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department received the Borough of Chelmsford (A414 Main Road and Maldon Road, Danbury) (Speed Limit) Order from Essex county council for confirmation; and when his Department's confirmation is expected.

Mr. Chope: The application for consent to these speed limit proposals which is currently with the Department was effectively lodged in August 1991 when detailed supporting information was received from Essex county council. This followed earlier lengthy discussions and correspondence leading to my Department's approval in principle being given in December 1990.

There are a number of legal issues in respect of the order itself still to be resolved before the Secretary of State can give formal consent. The Department's regional office has brought these to the attention of the county council.

Progress is dependent on the county council's resolution of these legal problems and I am therefore unable at this stage to specify a date by which consent may be given. Immediate consideration will be given however to the council's response, when received.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he intends to make to the recommendations made by the International Atomic Energy Agency that no further flights of plutonium should take place until the agency's review panel on safety and security of plutonium transport completes its recommendations for new standards for international carriage.

Mr. McLoughlin: The International Atomic Energy Agency has made no such recommendation.

Buses

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to promote the use of buses.

Mr. Freeman: I announced recently a series of measures to promote the use of the bus:

- provision of at least £10 million over the next two years to fund specific local authority bus schemes;
- publication through HMSO of the Department's "Keeping Buses Moving"—a guide for local authorities on the provision of bus priority measures;
- more resources to the traffic commissioners to check that local bus services run in accordance with their published timetables;
- a review by the Department of current arrangements for passenger information with a view to providing guidelines for local authorities and bus operators;
- the Department will seek to fund a local authority demonstration project which utilises fully accessible low floor buses;
- the introduction in 1992 of an instrumented smoke emissions test for in-service vehicles, together with tough road side enforcement.

These measures have been widely welcomed by the Bus and Coach Council and local authority associations.

Coastguards

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the amount of money spent on providing the coastguard service for each of the years for the period 1979 to 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 13 January 1992]: The amount of money spent on providing the coastguard service during the years 1983-84 to 1991-92 is as follows:

Year	£ million
1979-80	6·99
1980-81	7·92
1981-82	10·88
1982-83	11·91
1983-84	14·06
1984-85	18·66
1985-86	21·57
1986-87	21·80
1987-88	23·99
1988-89	25·85
1989-90	28·58
1990-91	29·63
[1]1991-92	31·00

[1] Forecast.

The level of past and planned expenditure on Her Majesty's coastguard is consistent with the commitment to provide a modern, efficient and effective search and rescue service for the United Kingdom.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Single European Currency

15. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement upon the naming of a new single European currency.

Mr. Maude: Under the terms of the proposed treaty on European monetary union, the single currency would be the ecu.

Business Investment

17. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of GDP at factor cost and in current prices is accounted for by business investment also at current prices; and what was the percentage in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: At current prices, the ratio of business investment to GDP at factor cost was 14·8 per cent. in 1990 and 14·3 per cent. in 1979.

Manufactured Goods

18. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was Britain's share of main manufacturing countries exports of manufactures in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) in the lastest available quarter.

Mr. Mellor: As I said earlier today in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey), the UK's share has risen in each of the last three years after decdes of decline, as shown in the autumn statement. Based on a measure that includes the exports of all market economies, the share was 7·2 per cent. in 1979 and 6·1 per cent. in 1985. It is likely to have been 6¼ per cent. in 1991.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the United Kingdom's share of the world trade in manufactured goods; and what has been the trend in recent years.

Mr. Mellor: The United Kingdom's share stabilised in the mid-1980s, increased in 1989 and 1990, and looks most likely to have increased again in 1991. Its current level is 6¼ per cent., almost ¼ per cent. higher than in 1988.

European Central Bank

19. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to secure the location of the proposed European central bank in Britain.

Mr. Maude: The Maastricht summit concluded that it was not necessary to reach a decision now on the sites of the European central bank; that will be decided at a future date.

Manufacturing Investment

20. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in the level of manufacturing investment between the third quarter of 1990 and the third quarter of 1991.

Mr. Mellor: A fall of 12 per cent. in volume terms.

Taxation

21. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about tax levels.

Mr. Maude: Since 1978-79, the combined burden of taxation and public sector borrowing had been reduced by over 1 per cent. of GDP.

Income Tax

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the changes which have taken place in the standard rate of income tax since 1978-79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Since 1979 we have reduced the basic rate in stages from 33 to 25 per cent. We will move towards a rate of 20 per cent. when it is prudent to do so.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much a cut of 1p in the pound off income tax would cost; how much the raising of the top rate of tax to 50 per cent. would yield to the revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: At 1992-93 levels of income a 1p reduction in the basic rate of income tax would cost about £1·95 billion in a full year. Raising the higher rate of income tax to 50 per cent. would yield about £3·4 billion in a full year.

These estimates, however, do not allow for any behavioural effects that might result from such changes to the tax system and do not include capital gains tax.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the loss of revenue from raising the income tax threshold for all income tax payers to £100 per week;

(2) how many extra persons would be exempt from income tax if the tax threshold were raised to £100 per week.

Mr. Maude: At 1992-93 levels of income, the cost of raising the personal allowance to £5,200, compared with the amount due under the illustrative assumption of 4 per cent. indexation given in the Autumn Statement 1991, would be about £10½ billion. About 3·8 million people would be taken out of tax by this change.

Interest Rates

24. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when was the last time he held discussions with the CBI to discuss interest rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend last met CBI representatives at the National Economic Development Council on 8 January. A number of general economic issues were discussed.

Economy

25. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage growth in the economy for the last quarter for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Gross domestic product rose by 0·2 per cent. in the third quarter of 1991, the latest period for which figures are available.

Inflation

26. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the business representative bodies regarding the Government's anti-inflation policy.

Mr. Maude: I regularly receive representations from business on all aspects of economic policy. They consistently endorse the Government's objective of reducing inflation and keeping it down.

28. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current level of inflation.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell).

VAT

27. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much VAT has been raised since November 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On 1 April 1991 the standard rate of VAT was increased from 15 to 17½ per cent.

Income Statistics

Mr. Lester: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an estimate of per capita income in the United Kingdom in 1991 and 1990.

Mr. Maples: Data in respect of income per head are published regularly in table 8 in "Economic Trends", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest available data, for periods up to the third quarter of 1991, will be included in the December issue, due for publication later this month. However, this information is already available on the CSO database which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Repossessions

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the Government's policies on the level of house repossessions in 1992.

Mr. Maude: Lenders estimate that the measures my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced to the House on 19 December will reduce the number of repossessions in 1992 by about 40,000—half the anticipated number.

Football Pools Betting Duty

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the Government's total income from the football pool bettings duty for each of the years 1979-80 to 1990-91 and as a total over the same period.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Receipts from pool betting duty were as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	136·1
1980-81	157·0
1981-82	176·0
1982-83	199·3
1983-84	204·9
1984-85	218·0
1985-86	235·3
1986-87	254·2
1987-88	277·0
1988-89	279·0
1989-90	303·8
1990-91	303·9
Total	2,744·5

Cigarette Duty

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the increase in duty, including value added tax on cigarettes in the 1991 budget had on the retail prices index.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The RPI impact effect was an increase of 0·3 per cent.

Bloodstock Industry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current negotiations taking place within the EC Council of Finance Ministers to seek an agreed reduction in VAT for the breeding and sales of bloodstock in the United Kingdom after 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 January 1992]: The discussions currently taking place are to decide which goods and services may be subject to a reduced rate of VAT within the European Community after 1992. The present list includes goods and services used and supplied by farmers. It has yet to be decided finally whether horses will fall within any of the reduced rate categories.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list details of any alternative schemes being considered by Her Majesty's Government to assist the bloodstock industry in the United Kingdom after 1993.

Mr. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 January 1992]: Detailed discussions are currently taking place between officials and interested parties on the merits of an agricultural flat rate scheme for the United Kingdom.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cohesion Fund

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which regions of the United Kingdom will benefit from the cohesion fund agreed at the Maastricht summit; and which of the six objective regions in the European Community will (a) benefit from and (b) be excluded from the benefits of this fund.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The cohesion fund will benefit those member states with a per capita GNP of less than 90 per cent. of the Community average—that is, Spain, Portugal, Greece and the Republic of Ireland. The fund will provide finance for projects in the fields of the environment and trans-European transport infrastructure.

East Timor

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will initiate discussions with the other countries of the European Community to consider what joint action needs to be taken in relation to the occupation of East Timor by Indonesia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are already in contact with our EC partners on this matter. We continue to believe that the best hopes for a solution lie in the hands of the United Nations Secretary-General.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Portugal regarding the situation in East Timor; and what further discussions he proposes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs sees his Portuguese colleague regularly and has discussed East Timor with him on several occasions, most recently during his visit to Lisbon on 7 January. We remain in close contact on this issue, together with our EC partners.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise at the United Nations the continuing repression by Indonesia of the people of East Timor with a view to agreeing appropriate joint action.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This issue will be considered at the forthcoming session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva from 27 January to 6 March.

Falklands Islands

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with Argentina about the future constitutional position of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There have been no recent discussions; nor is it the Government's intention to engage in any.

Gulf War

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in obtaining compensation from Iraq for losses suffered by British nationals and companies during the Gulf war.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Work has gone ahead well in the governing council of the United Nations Compensation Commission in Geneva which will administer the fund established by Security Council resolution 687: the United Kingdom is playing a leading role. Very good progress is being made in drawing up criteria for eligibility of claims. The commission has also prepared claim forms for expedited claims by individuals up to US$ 100,000. We are now sending them to claimants who have notified us of their losses. Advertisements will be placed in the national press so that the opportunity to make claims is widely known. The commission hopes to begin assessing claims in July this year.

ENERGY

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provisions have been made for the long-term storage, management or disposal of (a) high, intermediate and low-level radioactive wastes arising from foreign reprocessing contracts signed by British Nuclear Fuels plc up to 31 December 1975 and (b) low level radioactive waste arising from foreign reprocessing contracts signed by British Nuclear Fuels plc since 1 January 1976 for processing of spent nuclear fuel in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All wastes arising from overseas reprocessing contracts signed by British Nuclear Fuels plc before 1976 will be dealt with in accordance with the United Kingdom's national waste strategy.

Since 1976, contracts for reprocessing overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that these options will be exercised and wastes returned. As envisaged in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 2 May 1986 at columns 500-01, the option of substituting for less radioactive wastes an equivalent quantity, in radiological terms, of higher level wastes is being considered.

Any low-level wastes retained as a result of such substitution would be disposed of in the same way as equivalent United Kingdom waste.

WALES

EC Committee of Regions

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the representatives from Wales who will sit on the Committee of the Regions within the European Community; and if he will consider making hon. Members of Parliament eligible for such positions.

Mr. David Hunt: The treaty giving effect to the new Committee of the Regions is not intended to come into force until 1 January 1993. No decisions have therefore yet been taken on membership. The Government will however be considering in the course of 1992, the question of allocation of the United Kingdom seats and how individual members will be chosen.

Transplants

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients in Wales are now awaiting transplant surgery; and if he will separately distinguish these by organ by district health area and by length of time they have been waiting.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The requested information is not available centrally.

Land Acquisition

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each of the last 12 years, and for each county in Wales, the area of land that has been used for major highway construction and ancillary purposes; and if he will indicate the total compensation paid to landowners.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

St. David's Hospital, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department received the application for approval in principle for the new neighbourhood hospital on the site of the St. David's hospital, Cardiff; when the reply to South Glamorgan health authority was sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Application for approval in principle for a neighbourhood hospital on the St. David's hospital site, Cardiff, was made by South Glamorgan health authority on 13 November 1991. A reply was sent on 20 December 1991. South Glamorgan health authority is currently reviewing the position in the light of that response.

Drinking Water

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of Welsh Water to discuss the purity of the drinking water in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for the Environment have jointly appointed the drinking water inspectorate to monitor and report to them on water company performance. The inspectorate's report to them of its first round of inspections, including that of Dwr Cymru, was published in July 1991 and confirmed that 99 per cent. of samples taken by Dwr Cymru met the stringent statutory requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989—SI 1989 No. 1147. A second round of inspections, during which Dwr Cymru is again being inspected, is ongoing and the results will be published later this year. My officials are, of course, regularly in contact with Dwr Cymru on various aspects of drinking water quality.

TB Eradication Scheme

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been paid in compensation in respect of cattle slaughtered in Wales under the tuberculosis eradication scheme in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Payments made under the bovine tuberculosis compensation scheme are detailed in the table. The information is only available on a financial year basis.

Year	Total compensation (£'s)
1980-81	35,911
1981-82	7,105
1982-83	6,918

Year	Total compensation (£'s)
1983-84	13,626
1984-85	28,680
1985-86	37,068
1986-87	42,491
1987-88	58,233
1988-89	37,045
1989-90	35,785
1990-91	86,159

Prescriptions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Diumide-K (a diuretic with potassium) or a similar preparation has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents has been prescribed (a) in Wales and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area;

(2) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Burinex A or a similar preparation (bumetanide with amiloride hydrochloride) has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents has been prescribed (a) in Wales and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area in Wales;

(3) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Caprozide or a similar preparation has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents—Captopril and hydrochlorothiazide—has been prescribed (a) in Wales and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area in Wales;

(4) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Prempak-C or a similar preparation has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents—conjugated oestrogens/norgestrel—has been prescribed (a) in Wales and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Valleys Programme

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the percentage unemployment rate for the valleys programme area, for Wales, for each year from November 1988 to November 1991, inclusive.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the table.

Unemployment rates[1]

November	Valleys programme area	Wales
1988	12·4	9·2
1989	9·5	6·5
1990	10·1	6·9
1991	13·1	9·2

Kinnerton Primary School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Kinnerton county primary school; and if he will meet (a) the parent teacher association and (b) the staff and governors.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has any plans at present to do so.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the sale of school playing fields; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Authorities are encouraged to dispose of land and buildings which are surplus to requirements. Local education authorities are responsible for taking decisions about the disposal of school playing fields. In view of public concern about the possible loss of playing fields, I shall be asking local education authorities to consider long-term school and community needs before taking disposal action.

School Land

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales have had portions of their land and buildings sold since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities are responsible for taking decisions on the disposal of school land and buildings. Information about disposals by these authorities is not held centrally.

Patient Funding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the funding of out-of-area patients being allocated operations at the four treatment centres in Wales for the period commencing 1 April 1992.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Decisions on how the treatment centre initiative will be taken forward in 1992-93 will be announced shortly.

British Aerospace

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last visited British Aerospace, Broughton, Clwyd; and if he will visit British Aerospace to meet apprentices in their final year.

Mr. David Hunt: I visited British Aerospace at Broughton, Clwyd on 30 September 1991 to open the new dispatch wing. No date has yet been fixed for my next visit.

NHS Value-for-money Unit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the remit of the NHS value-for-money unit and its programme of work for 1992.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The NHS value-for-money unit operates within the framework of the strategic intent and direction for the NHS in Wales which dedicates the organisation to the pursuit of health gain and the continuous development of people-centred, resource effective health services. Within this framework, the unit's mission is to add value to the use of resources and to encourage enterprise in the delivery of health services.

The main initiatives which the unit will be pursuing in 1992 include: helping providers of service compare their performance with the best; helping managers improve the monitoring of service delivery by focusing on high level indicators; reviewing progress and adding impetus to cash-releasing cost improvement and income generation programmes; undertaking all-Wales reviews; helping the NHS in Wales develop overseas trading activities and the commercial exploitation of innovative ideas and products; establishing the clinical resource utilisation group; reviewing progress and adding impetus to the market testing initiative.

More information is provided in chapter 9 of the document "NHS Wales: Agenda for Action 2" published in December 1991; a copy of which has been placed in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the report from the value-for-money unit on the cost-effectiveness of the treatment centre at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital, Cardiff; and if he will give the terms of reference for the value-for-money unit's exercise.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The study at the Prince of Wales orthopaedic hospital is part of a wider evaluation of the treatment centre initiative as a whole. The purpose of the study is to assess the potential of treatment centres to deliver health care services cost-effectively and also the options for the future funding of such centres. The aim is to complete this exercise before the end of the current financial year.

Hospital Services Study

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the terms of reference of the joint study into the supply and demand for hospital services in south and mid Glamorgan, commissioned by South Glamorgan health authority, Mid Glamorgan health authority and the University of Wales College of Medicine.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 13 January, at columns 510-11

Water Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to clean-up iron oxide and sulphur pollution in streams, rivers and waterways that flow though or close to former mines.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The National Rivers Authority is currently undertaking a study, which includes an examination of the River Pelena in West Glamorgan, to look at the best ways of preventing polluted water from abandoned mines affecting our rivers.

GPs (Night Calls)

87. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from general practitioners in Wales regarding the problem of excessive night-time calls; and what response he has made.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Since the introduction of the revised contract for GPs, one letter has been received from a GP in Wales about increased demand for night visits to patients.

The reply explained that the GPs' remuneration system has been revised to reward those doctors who provide the fullest range of services to their patients. This includes paying a higher fee where doctors undertake night visits to their patients personally, rather than using a deputising service or a large rota.

Cataract Removals

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have been treated for cataract removal at the new treatment centre at Bridgend hospital since its opening in October 1991; how many were from the Mid-Glamorgan health authority; if he will list all other health authorities from which other patients treated at the treatment centre have originated; and how this compares with his Department's agreement with the treatment centre.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Between 1 October and 31 December 1991 the new ophthalmic treatment centre treated 182 patients, of which 54 per cent. came from Mid Glamorgan. The centre is on target to meet the contract agreement that 50 per cent. of the total throughput of 300 patients in 1991-92 should be referred from health authorities other than Mid Glamorgan. In addition to Mid Glamorgan, referrals have been received from South Glamorgan, West Glamorgan, East Dyfed, Powys and Gwent.

Shotton Steelworks

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last visited Shotton steelworks, Clwyd; and if he will visit Shotton steelworks to discuss the impact of redundancies.

Mr. David Hunt: I last visited Shotton steelworks on 27 November. I have not yet fixed the date for my next visit. During my visit I was most impressed by the determination of both management and work force to maintain the steelwork's position as a world leader in steel coatings technology.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

UK World Trade Share

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the United Kingdom's share of world trade, taking visibles and invisibles together, for each of the last 15 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In terms of the value of overseas transactions, the United Kingdom is the fourth largest trading nation in the world.

The information is in the table.

United Kingdom's share of OECD total trade[1] 1975-90 (percentage terms)

Year	Exports	Imports
1975	9·5	10·0
1976	9·1	9·1
1977	9·3	9·1
1978	9·5	9·3
1979	10·3	10·0
1980	11·3	10·4
1981	11·6	10·6
1982	11·7	11·1

Year	Exports	Imports

Radio and Television (Interference)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what help is available for radio listeners and television viewers to avoid interference in reception.

Mr. Redwood: My Department, through the Radiocommunications Agency, provides helpful advice on improving radio and television reception and I am asking the chief executive of the agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress made on a conclusion of the negotiations within the Uruguay GATT round on textiles.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 15 January 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on 15 January, Official Report, columns 598-99.

Maastricht

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement outlining the areas of his responsibility in which the EC will have competence following the implementation of agreements at Maastricht.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 December 1991]: The treaty agreed at Maastricht contains new chapters relating to industry, consumer protection and trans-European networks. The Community already has competence in these areas. The responsibility for policy on trans-European networks is shared between my Department, the Department of Energy and the Department of Transport.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Football Pool Betting Duty

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the meeting held on 9 January between officials in his Department and representatives of the Football Trust to discuss eligibility of football Premier League clubs for funds released through the reduction in the football pool betting duty; and what further meetings, and on what dates, are planned on this issue involving officials and ministers in his Department.

Mr. Atkins: At the request of the Football Trust a meeting was held with officials from my Department and the Treasury to hear the views of the trust on its handling of grant applications by prospective members of the Premier League and arrangements following the establishment of the league. The trust will be informed shortly of the Government's views. Further meetings will be arranged as appropriate.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science further to his letter of 12 July 1991 to the Football Association, if he will set out the precise conditions necessary for Premier League clubs to be rendered eligible for access to funds released through the reduction of the football pool betting duty.

Mr. Atkins: The trust would need to amend its resolution of April 1990 to allow clubs in the Premier League to have access to such funds. My position remains as set out in the letter of 12 July. In supporting such a change I would wish to have regard to how any additional money available to football was to be used for purposes of Taylor implementation throughout the present Football League. I have written to the FA to ask for further information on this objective, together with other relevant matters.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what criteria the national stadiums at Wembley, Hampden park and Windsor park are deemed eligible for assistance through the reduction in the football pool betting duty.

Mr. Atkins: Under a resolution passed by the Football Trust in April 1990 the grounds of clubs in the Football League and the Scottish League and the three national stadia are eligible for assistance from the moneys made available by the reduction in pool betting duty for capital works for the safety and comfort of spectators at football grounds in accordance with the recommendations contained in Lord Justice Taylor's final report on "The Hillsborough Stadium Disaster, 15 April 1989". The trustees also resolved to distribute the money fairly having regard to the differing needs of those clubs and the stadia authorities and the resources available to them.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy concerning the repayment of grants made to clubs through the reduction in the football pool betting duty if relegated from the Football League to the Vauxhall conference.

Mr. Atkins: It is for the trust itself to decide its grant policy. I myself see no reason why the Football Trust should ask for repayment of grants in such circumstances.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what amendments he intends to make to the statement of case pro forma for school closure proposals to take account of the change in procedure for evaluating possible deficiencies in playing field provision at neighbouring schools; when the amendments will be made; and if he will place a copy of the original and amended statements in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend will decide what amendments are required to the statement of case pro forma for school closure proposals in the light of any comments received from the local authority associations to the consultation letter on the disposal of school playing fields. A copy of the original and amended statements will be placed in the Library.

Medical Researchers

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the comparative levels of remuneration for medical researchers in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the rest of the EC and (c) the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My Department does not hold details of the levels of remuneration of medical researchers employed by United Kingdom private companies or charities; nor does it have such information covering medical researchers in the rest of the EC or the United States of America. The pay scale for researchers in universities in the United Kingdom extends from £12,129 to £30,447, although some clinical academic staff are linked to national health service scales which range from about £17,000 to £40,000. Clinical academics holding consultant contracts are also eligible for NHS distinction awards.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make it his policy to increase the funding of research into Alzheimer's disease being carried out at St. Mary's hospital, Paddington;

(2) if he will make a statement on the funding of research into Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Medical Research Council, the main Government agency for the support of medical research in this country, is funded from this Department's science budget. The MRC's grant-in-aid from the science budget has increased by about 28 per cent. in real terms since 1979-80. It is an independent body, however, and our policy is not to intervene in the MRC's judgment of its research priorities. Last month we announced a planned rising profile for the science budget generally over the next three years. That will enable the MRC to launch its "Neurosciences Approach to Human Health", so expanding its programme of research on the treatment of psychiatric and neurological disorders such as Alzheimer's disease.

In addition to research council funding, substantial public funding for medical and other research at universities is provided by the Universities Funding Council as part of its block grant to institutions, which are free to dispose of it in accordance with their academic and research priorities. The distribution of grant between universities is a matter for the UFC. Research funding is also provided through the health departments and health authorities. The Government welcome, moreover, the very important contribution made by the medical research charities and has introduced a more favourable tax regime to encourage support for charities.

HEALTH

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department holds on the increase of morbidity in any population following the fluoridation of water to one part per million.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 November at columns 126-27. There is no evidence that fluoridation of drinking water at the rate of one part per million has any adverse effect on health.

Accident Victims (Organs)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to introduce a scheme whereby accident victims would automatically make their organs available for transplantation unless they have specifically indicated that they wish to opt out.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Transplants

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in England are now awaiting transplant surgery; and if he will separately distinguish these by organ by health region and by length of time they have been waiting.

Mr. Dorrell: The table gives the number of people awaiting transplantation in England by organ and the region in which they expect to be treated. Information on the length of time waiting is not collected centrally.

Calorie Consumption

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on how many calories (a) employed and (b) unemployed men consume on average daily.

Mr. Dorrell: "The Dietary and Nutritional Survey of British Adults" published in 1990 shows average daily calorific intakes for men as (a) employed, 2,520; and (b) unemployed, 2,060. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

Clinical Standards Advisory Group

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work is being undertaken by the Clinical Standards Advisory Group.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Northern Ireland, and Wales and I have asked the Clinical Standards Advisory Group to undertake studies with the following terms of reference:

To advise on access to, and availability of, selected National Health Service specialist services, with particular reference to the referral of patients across District boundaries to regional and national centres. Your investigations will consider, but not be limited to, the effects of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 in a representative sample of National Health Service regions and boards. The four services you have selected are: neo-natal intensive care; cystic fibrosis; childhood leukaemia; and coronary artery bypass grafting.

To advise on standards of clinical care for patients admitted to hospital urgently or as emergencies. Your investigations will consider the time patients wait for diagnosis and treatment in the 24 hours after arrival at a hospital, and the factors influencing these times including events prior to arrival, in a representative sample of National Health Service hospitals. You will select several clinical conditions for more detailed investigation, including if possible the effect on health outcomes of variations in the time patients wait.

To advise on standards of clinical care for women in normal labour. Your investigations will include variations in clinical protocols for and practice in the management of women having their first child in a representative sample of labour wards in National Health Service hospitals. You will also investigate the use of cortico-steroids in cases of premature labour.

To advise on standards of clinical care for people with diabetes. Your investigations will include reviews of existing statements of clinical standards, of the standards specified in National Health Service contracts, and of arrangements for auditing the delivery of services to contracted standards, in a representative sample of National Health Service districts and boards.

I have also welcomed the advisory group's intention to undertake preparatory work on hospital acquired infections and on community health care for the elderly before deciding whether the group wishes to propose studies in these areas; and to keep other areas of clinical care under review.

Brain Injury

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which sites have been selected for the new funding under the Government's initiative to improve national health service rehabilitation services for people with brain injury.

Mr. Waldegrave: Twelve sites will lead our £1 million initiative to improve services for rehabilitation and long-term care for people with brain injury. Each one will be a model from which others will learn to improve services to this group throughout the country.

The selected sites are:

	Funds for 1992-93 (£ thousands)
Regional Rehabilitation Centre, Hunters Moor Hospital, Newcastle-upon-Tyne	40
Leeds General Infirmary and Leeds Community Services	80
Derbyshire Royal Infirmary and Derby City Hospital	75
Nottingham Health Authority	75
Central Sheffield University Hospitals	70
Regional Neurological Rehabilitation Unit, Homerton Hospital, London	150
Rivermead Rehabilitation Centre, Oxford	70
Rayners Hedge Physical Rehabilitation Service, Aylesbury	40
Stroke and Rehabilitation Unit, Royal Cornwall Hospital (City), Truro	65
Frenchay Healthcare Services, Bristol	200
Neurobehavioural Rehabilitation Unit, St Edward's Hospital, Cheddleton and Neurological Rehabilitation Unit, Haywood Hospital, Burslem	90
Community Unit, Worcester District Health Authority	90

Prescriptions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Diumide-K—a diuretic with potassium—or a similar preparation has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents has been prescribed (a) in England and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area;

(2) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Burinex A or a similar preparation—bumetanide with amiloride hydrochloride—has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents has been prescribed (a) in England and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area;

(3) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Prempak-C or a similar preparation has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents—conjugated oestrogens/norgestrel—has been prescribed (a) in England and in each region and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area;

(4) in what number of prescriptions, in each of the last five years, Caprozide or a similar preparation has been prescribed; and in what number of cases one of the individual constituents—Captopril and hydrochlorothiazide—has been prescribed (a) in England and in each region and (b) in each district health authority or family practitioner committee area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available in the form requested. The available data, which relate to the estimated number of prescriptions dispensed in each regional health authority over the last four years, have been placed in the Library.

Deaths (Certification)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will take steps to ensure that every person authorised to certify a human death has first been satisfied that an ether test or an icard test, or similar, has been administered.

Mr. Dorrell: Death is certified by registered medical practitioners in accordance with accepted professional practices. Whether or not a particular test is appropriate will depend upon the individual circumstances of a particular case.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's current policies in regard to the treatment of breast cancer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our objective is to reduce morbidity and mortality from all forms of cancer. The aim of the national breast screening programme is to detect cancer at an early stage when treatment offers the best prospect of success. The treatment of each individual is a matter for discussion between her and her doctor.

Developments in treatment are kept under review by the Department's expert advisers on cancer; and the Government are supporting the "Europe Against Cancer" programme, which pools experience across the Community in the fight against this disease.

Mortality Rates

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing the (a) perinatal, (b) infant and (c) overall mortality rates by social class in London regional health authorities in 1970, 1980 and for the latest date available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 January 1992]: The information is not available in the form requested. The available information is shown in the tables.

Notes:

1. The figures in these tables are based on deaths in the years around the 1971 and 1981 censuses. The top table covers the years 1970-72, the bottom table covers 1979, 1980, 1982 and 1983.
   There was a strike among registrars in 1981 and so no data are available for that year.
2. Figures in these tables are crude death rates and have not been standardised for age differences between men in different social classes in different regions.

PRIME MINISTER

Bingham Inquiry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he has given evidence to the Bingham inquiry.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Espionage

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has recently received with regard to eastern bloc espionage within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The protection of national security against threats from espionage is a statutory function of the Security Service. It remains my normal practice not to comment in detail on security and intelligence matters.

Public Records Act 1958

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what reforms he intends to make to the Public Records Act 1958; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no plans to reform the Public Records Act or to make changes to the provision whereby public records which are selected for permanent preservation are normally made available to the public after 30 years. The only amendment to the Act which is in prospect, when a suitable legislative opportunity arises, is the removal of the statutory requirement for the Master of the Rolls to be chairman of the Advisory Council on Public Records.

UN Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the steps taken by each Department of Her Majesty's Government, respectively, to prepare for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

The Prime Minister: The Department of the Environment is responsible for co-ordinating the Government's approach to UNCED. Within this overall framework other departments have set up their own arrangements for contributing on appropriate matters to preparations for the conference. I am taking a close personal interest as I expect to lead the United Kingdom delegation in Rio de Janeiro.

Amritsar Massacre

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will authorise the release of official papers relating to the Amritsar massacre of 13 April 1919.

The Prime Minister: All official papers relating to the Amritsar massacre on 13 April 1919 have been available to the public since 1968, and are currently held at the Oriental and India Office collection of the British Library.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 16 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Secret Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his practice to give information in reply to parliamentary questions concerning secret intelligence services.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 January 1992]: It remains my normal practice not to comment on security and intelligence matters.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if privately run prisons will take category A prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are no present plans for contracting out the management of prisons intended to hold category A prisoners: neither Wolds remand prison nor Blakenhurst prison will hold such prisoners.

Special Secure Units

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average prisoners spend in the special secure units; what is the longest period a prisoner has spent in a special secure unit; and what was the offence for which he was sentenced.

Mrs. Rumbold: A figure for the average time spent by prisoners in special secure units is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The longest period a prisoner has spent in special security units is 18½ years, following conviction on charges of murder and possession of firearms with intent.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons prisoners are confined in special secure units; and for what offences they have been sentenced.

Mrs. Rumbold: The aim of the special security units is to provide a national resource to accommodate the prisoners assessed as category A—exceptional risk—that is, as posing the greatest risks both to the public and of escape, and therefore requiring the very highest conditions of security. Offences for which prisoners currently held in these units have been convicted include armed robbery, murder, drug importation and offences associated with terrorism.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were being held in special secure units in England and Wales on 31 December 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty-two.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the effect, in terms of their prison career, of persons being confined in a special secure unit.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prisoners in special security units do not have access to prison workshops, but in other respects the regime available to them is comparable to that of other convicted category A prisoners, and includes education, hobbies, exercise, recreation, and association with other prisoners in the unit throughout most of the day.

Categorisation is kept constantly under review, and any prisoner no longer assessed as category A—exceptional risk—is transferred to some other appropriate part of the prison estate.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the improvements in (a) electoral registration and (b) postal vote availability made since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of registered electors in England and Wales has risen from 36,695,180 in 1979 to 38,509,382 in 1991. We provide a variety of publicity material in support of electoral registration officers, and conduct an annual national advertising campaign to encourage people to register. We also carry out annual research into the working methods of electoral registration officers, and produce guidance and advice to assist them in compiling an accurate register.

We have made it easier to obtain a temporary postal vote for a particular election, by replacing the separate and specific categories listed in the Representation of the People Act 1983 with a single provision entitling an elector to a postal vote if his or her circumstances on the date of the election are such that he or she could not reasonably be expected to vote in person at the allotted polling station. This means that those who are away from home unexpectedly on business, on holiday or visiting sick relatives may now have a postal vote in the United Kingdom. The provisions for postal voting have also been extended to elections for parish and community councils.

Life Sentences

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many life prisoners who have been sentenced to life imprisonment are currently in prison; and how many of them are held in low-security prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to the records held centrally about 3,000 persons in prison service establishments in England and Wales were serving life sentences on 30 November 1991. Of these, about 920 were held in low-security establishments, which for adult males are category C or D establishments.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he decided to answer no further questions on the Birmingham pub bombings investigations; and if he will give the reasons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chief constable of the West Midlands Police is responsible for the conduct of these investigations. It would be improper for my right hon. Friend to comment on them while they are continuing, because this might prejudice their outcome.

Football Spectators Order

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all persons and organisations with whom ministers and officials in his Department have held meetings, and the dates, concerning the extension of the measures outlined in the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Italy) Order 1990 to cover offences committed in Sweden; and what further measure he intends to take to extend these measures to Sweden.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are seeking a bilateral agreement with the Swedish Government on corresponding offences under the Football Spectators Act 1989. Details of meetings between Home Office Ministers and officials and their Swedish counterparts are contained in the table.

Date	Home Office representatives	Swedish representatives
18 October 1991	Officials	Mr. Jarbourg, Consul General at the Swedish Embassy and Mr. Wibling of the Arlanda Police Service
28 October 1991	Officials	Mr. Sandström, Head of the Swedish Police Planning Unit for the 1992 European Championship Finals and Mr. Wibling
15 November 1991	Officials	Mr. Wibling
2 December 1991	Minister of State and officials	Mrs. Hellsvik, Swedish Justice Minister

Additionally, diplomats in the Stockholm embassy have met Swedish officials.

Home Office officials will be having further discussions with the Swedish police and with Swedish Ministry of Justice officials next month.

Rugby

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the views of the Association of Chief Police Officers on the extension of mandatory all-seated accommodation to rugby league and rugby union grounds; and when he expects to make a statement on the extension of mandatory all-seated accommodation to these sports.

Mr. John Patten: The views of the Association of Chief Police Officers on the extension of mandatory all-seated accommodation to rugby league and rugby union grounds was received in June 1991.

We have now completed our consultation procedures. While we still require Football League clubs to move towards all seater grounds as recommended by Lord Justice Taylor, for other sports we see no reason to depart from a voluntary approach. We do not therefore intend to introduce primary legislation. However, we shall continue to keep this matter under review.

EMPLOYMENT

Hairdressers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has relating to the average pay for 16, 17 and 18-year-old trainee hairdressers.

Mr. Forth: No information is available.

Emergency Equipment

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, when implementing the workplace directive, he will require the independent certification of all emergency lighting and fire alarms to the appropriate European standard before installation; and if he will make a statement on emergency equipment.

Mr. Forth: Independent certification of equipment is not a requirement of the workplace directive and the Health and Safety Commission has made no such proposal in its consultative document containing proposals to implement the directive which was published on 15 January. A copy is in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people registered as unemployed in the Greater London area on 13 January.

Mr. Jackson: The latest available data for unemployed claimants relate to 12 December. On this date there were on a seasonally adjusted basis, 385,200 unemployed claimants in the Greater London region. Figures for January will be released on 13 February.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to issue contracts to training and enterprise councils for more than one year to enable TECs to sign contracts with core providers of training for more than one year and to bridge the academic year differential year with the financial year.

Mr. Jackson: The process for parliamentary provision of the large sums of public money spent through training and enterprise councils means that it is not possible to agree with them detailed funding for three years ahead. The Department is nevertheless developing a closer understanding with TECs of their longer term activities based on their three-year corporate plans. It is for individual TECs to decide on the duration of contracts with individual training providers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that officers dealing with disability living allowance claims during the period February 1992 to April 1993 do not tag computer records with a view to automatically creating subsequent reviews.

Mr. Scott: Awards of disability living allowance will be made either for life or for a fixed period. There will be no automatic reviews during the course of an award. As now, clients with fixed period awards will be invited to re-apply towards the end of the period. These arrangements will apply to cases determined during the period of transition and will continue to operate thereafter.

Heating Costs

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the notional amount for heating costs included in income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Benefit rates are not composed of set amounts for specific expenditure items. In April 1992 income support will rise by 7 per cent., nearly 3 per cent. more than the retail prices index for the corresponding period. Those over 80, and younger disabled pensioners, will receive further additions over and above this rise.

Invalid Care Allowance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in receipt of retirement pensions are caring for dependent members of their family and ineligible for invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available. Invalid care allowance is intended for people who forgo work opportunities to provide regular and substantial care, and is not normally available to those over pensionable age. However, where entitlement to invalid care allowance has been established before pensionable age it continues to be payable subject to the overlapping benefit rules.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to adjust the cold weather payment system to take account of climatic variations in different parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Scott: The system already fully reflects climatic variation around the United Kingdom, through the links to 63 weather stations. This system of linkages is kept under review, and further refinements were introduced as part of our recent package of improvements to the scheme, introduced in November 1991.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to meet representatives from the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans for such a meeting.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the administrative costs or savings in replacing the current system of cold weather payments by a system of cold weather credits, as recommended by the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Scott: The recommendations of the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits do not contain sufficient details for a proper estimate to be made. They would be likely to be more expensive than the current cold weather payments scheme.

Retirement Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the percentage of retirement pensioners whose total incomes are below (a) £60 per week, (b) £70 per week, (c) £80 per week, (d) £90 per week and (e) £100 per week; and for each of these groups what percentage of their gross income is paid in rent and rates/poll tax.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the tables:

Net income level less than £	Married pensioner units	Single pensioner units	All pensioner units
60	—	35	22
70	—	60	38
80	9	74	49
90	22	79	58
100	36	83	65

Table 2: Gross rent and rates as a percentage of gross income

Net income level less than £	Married pensioner units	Single pensioner units	All pensioner units
60	—	19	20
70	—	24	24
80	18	25	25
90	16	25	24
100	18	25	23

Notes:

(i) Net income is defined as gross income less National Insurance and income tax.
(ii) Pensioner units are defined as single people who are at state pension age or over or married couples where the husband is at state pension age or over.
(iii) Data source is the 1988 Family Expenditure Survey.
(iv) Fewer than 20 units in the sample.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in the light of Commissioner's decision No. CIS/371/1990, he will amend the Social Security (Hospital In-Patients) Regulations so that nursing home residents are not regarded as being maintained free of charge for the purposes of entitlement to income support.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the protocol of the Maastricht agreement which reverses much of the right to equal treatment in occupational pensions that was established by the Barber decision.

Miss Widdecombe: The protocol on article 119 of the treaty of Rome clarifies the retrospective effect of the Barber judgment. The implications of the protocol are still being discussed.

Benefit Payments (Christmas)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what modifications of benefit payment arrangements are made during the Christmas period; and what evidence he has of the extent to which the modified arrangements meet the wishes of claimants.

Miss Widdecombe: Arrangements for benefit payments are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress the Social Security Benefits Agency has made towards meeting the targets set out in the published business plan for 1991-92; and whether there have been any changes to the targets.

Mr. Newton: I am informed by the chief executive of the Social Security Benefits Agency that if current performance is maintained the agency should meet 19 out of the 21 key targets specified in the published business plan with performance improving in the remaining two areas—war pensions disablement claims, where the number of claims has been much higher than expected, and short-term benefits accuracy. This will represent a substantial achievement in the first year of the agency.

I have decided to revise four of the Benefits Agency's published key targets for technical reasons. Changes to two of the published social fund targets are necessary following the increase in provision for social fund grants and loans in 1991-92 which my right hon. Friend the Minister of State announced on 6 November. The revised targets are:

i. to live within a gross budget of £268 million for loans and grants;

ii. to recover £139 million in loan repayments.[1]

The agency's efficiency savings target for the current financial year has been revised to take account of lower than forecast average salaries and a small transfer of savings to the Contributions Agency. The revised target is:

iii. to achieve cumulative running costs efficiency savings of £182·4 million, reflected in the net Budget figure.

I have decided to replace the ARMS Phase 2 milestone target. The ARMS—administrative resource management system—project has been subsumed within the FAMIS—financial and management information systems—project which is an overall strategy to integrate and upgrade the Department's finance and management information systems. The new milestone is:

iv. to complete the FAMIS resource management user requirement by 31 March 1982.

[1]The new target represents the higher cash level of loan repayments which the Benefits Agency is expected to achieve as a result of the increased gross allocations for loans. We do not propose to increase the rate of recovery from individual customers or change their repayment arrangements.

Housing Costs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what provision exists to enable individuals who leave home to take up places on training schemes to claim housing costs during the period of the scheme;

(2) what plans he has to make adequate housing costs available through the benefit system to make it possible for trainees to leave home to take up places on schemes in areas of high housing costs;

(3) what research his Department has conducted to establish the level of need to provide adequate housing costs through the benefit system to enable trainees to leave home to take up places on schemes in areas of high housing costs.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 January 1992]: Housing benefit is normally payable in respect of reasonable rents incurred by people for their home. This includes trainees on employment training and youth training programmes. Although housing benefit is not normally paid for a second home, couples who need to maintain two homes because one member is absent on a training course are able to claim housing benefit for both their main home and temporary accommodation occupied during the period of the scheme. Single people are also able to claim housing benefit for rented accommodation occupied while on a training course if no other liability to pay rent or mortgage exists. Housing benefit is generally available to meet reasonable market rents throughout the country. It is for local authorities to decide whether the rent payable is reasonable in individual cases.

In addition, payment of accommodation costs for people who leave home to take up a training opportunity on a Government training scheme can be made at the discretion of the training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and the local enterprise companies in Scotland. In the case of the Government's priority groups for youth training or employment training, where the trainee can only join in or continue in a suitable training place by incurring certain costs, including housing costs, he is entitled to have these costs met or reimbursed by the training and enterprise council or relevant local enterprise company up to a level which is considered reasonable.

In view of these provisions, there are no plans to conduct any research into the need to provide further housing costs for trainees through the benefit system.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Tuberculosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many badgers were culled by his Department for each of the months of August, September, October and November in each county in England and Wales under the tuberculosis eradication scheme.

Mr. Maclean: The number of badgers killed as part of official badger control operations in the months August to November 1991 was as follows:

County	August	September	October	November	Total
Cornwall	19	33	29	21	102
Devon	35	14	0	0	49
Gloucester	6	0	10	6	22
Wiltshire	11	0	17	3	31
Avon	9	9	8	10	36
Dorset	9	15	16	9	49
Sussex	33	0	0	0	33
Total	122	71	80	49	322

There were no operations in any other county.

It is estimated that some 20,000 badgers are killed in road accidents each year.

Beef Special Premium

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average cost per head of cattle for the facilities provided through the intervention board for the beef special premium scheme in markets where there is a throughput of 20 cattle or fewer.

Mr. Curry: The estimated average cost per head of cattle for all facilities provided through the intervention board for the beef special premium scheme in markets is £1. Separate information is not available at individual auctions but in general the unit costs at auctions with low throughput would be higher than the average.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many markets he expects to be closed as a result of the intervention board's decision to withdraw facilities from market centres where the average throughput for beef special premium purposes is fewer than 10 cattle units per week.

Mr. Curry: The decision to withdraw certification facilities from markets and abattoirs which have an average weekly throughput of fewer than 10 cattle units per week was taken by Agriculture Ministers. It represents the application of long established policy to the circumstances of the ending of the sheep variable premium scheme on 5 January.

Sheep Exports

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has completed its investigation of the transport and subsequent export of sheep from Kent to Pianella, Italy on 18 September and 24 September 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: An investigation into the transport of certain consignments of sheep to Italy is continuing.

Fish Hygiene

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the boiling of freshly caught shrimps in seawater would be banned as part of the implementation of the EC directive on fish hygiene; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: It will not. EC Directive 91/493 setting common public health requirements for fishery products contains no provisions on the water to be used for cooking shrimps at sea. It does require shrimps cooked at sea to be rapidly cooled, and states that the water used for this purpose must be drinking water or clean seawater. "Clean seawater" is defined in the directive as "seawater or briny water which is free from microbiological contamination, harmful substances and/or toxic marine plankton in such quantities as may affect the health quality of fishery products".

Hence, the directive expressly envisages the use of seawater by shrimpers, and recent reports that this will be prohibited are incorrect. The Department of Health has lead responsibility for preparing national regulations which will give effect to the provisions of the Directive by 1 January 1993; the proposed regulations will of course be the subject of consultation.

DEFENCE

RAF Wittering

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library details of the pilot project at RAF Wittering for the purchase of housing by service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I hope to make an announcement shortly concerning a number of measures affecting provision of housing for service personnel.

Belize

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Government of Belize about the future of the garrison there; what plans there are to alter the deployment of men or equipment over the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have made clear to the Belize Government that the Garrison will remain for as long as appropriate. The arrangements for the garrison are kept under review; there are currently no plans to make changes to its size or composition.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current establishment of the garrison at Belize; what changes there have been over the past 10 years; what equipment is deployed there; and what substantive changes there have been in major equipment deployment over the past 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details about the Belize garrison were given in the Eighth Report of the House of Commons Select Committee on Defence on British forces in Belize, session 1987-88. There have been no substantive changes in major equipment deployment in the past ten years.

Antares

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the report from the Commander-in-Chief, Fleet on his consideration of what action should be taken concerning the culpability of members of the crew of HMS Trenchant as described in the board of inquiry report into the loss of the fishing vessel Antares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Commander-in-Chief Fleet is currently considering the matter and will make a decision in the near future.

Submarine Reporting Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the extension of the submarine reporting scheme operating in the Clyde estuary to other fishing areas around the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work is well in hand and I expect to make an announcement shortly.

Indonesia

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions, with whom and on what topics, he had on his recent visit to Indonesia; and what assurances he received that equipment and weapons supplied from the United Kingdom will not be used against the people of East Timor.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State visited Indonesia in September last year, when he met representatives of the Indonesian Government. A wide range of issues of mutual interest was discussed. As regards defence sales, all applications to export military equipment are carefully scrutinised on a case by case basis. We do not allow the export of arms and equipment likely to be used for repressive purposes against civilians. In the case of Indonesia, this covers the possible repression of the population of East Timor.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what licences have been approved for the export of arms to Indonesia in each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to disclose details of United Kingdom defence sales to particular countries.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with United Kingdom military equipment and weapons manufacturers concerning exports to Indonesia following his visit there.

Mr. Alan Clark: All discussions between my Department and United Kingdom defence suppliers are conducted on a confidential basis.

HMS Warspite

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the provisions taken for the safe storage of HMS Warspite.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: HMS Warspite has been decommissioned and will shortly be placed in afloat storage at a suitable berth within Devonport naval base pending final disposal. All appropriate safety provision has been made.

Soldiers (Convictions)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of serving British soldiers convicted of offences of (a) dishonesty, (b) involving violence and (c) any other category for each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on soldiers convicted of offences is given in tables 13, 14, 15 and 16 of the Tri-Service Manpower Statistics Defence Statistics Annual Return TSM32, a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Rowner Housing Estate

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Gosport dated 19 December in which he asked for a joint ministerial meeting involving Ministers from the Department of Defence and the Department of the Environment in order to discuss the defective housing on Rowner housing estate with a delegation from Gosport.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Veal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will ensure that all veal supplied to the House of Commons Refreshment Department is produced in Great Britain.

Mr. MacGregor: The Refreshment Department is aware of the Minister of Agriculture's dissatisfaction with the minimum standards set by the recently agreed Community directive on the rearing of veal calves and of his intention to maintain the British legislation which ensures that calves in this country are reared humanely. In the light of that position, the Refreshment Department will seek to purchase only British veal or veal from other countries where production methods are known to meet the required standards.

Metal Can Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to respond to the offer made by the Save-a-Can scheme of a can collection and recovery service for the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: A number of offers of assistance with can recycling have been made and continue to be received. These have been brought to the attention of the authorities of the House who are investigating what arrangements can be made for that purpose in order that the matter can be considered by the Accommodation and Works Committee.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to provide for the registration of council tax payers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No. There is no need for a register under the council tax.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to run an advertising campaign on his council tax plans within the next six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have still to decide on the timing of a publicity campaign for the council tax but shall observe all the customary conventions concerning Government publicity.

Urban Programme

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources will be made available for the urban programme in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I am pleased to announce an urban programme funding package for 1992-93 totalling some £260 million. This figure excludes the resources top-sliced for city challenge pacemaker authorities.

Initial allocations to the 57 urban programme authorities for 1992-93 total £248 million. An additional £11 million will be made available in 1992-93, through the urban programme, to three police authorities for the urban crime fund. This initiative was announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 26 November 1991.

Urban programme money will be used to support a wide range of projects addressing the issues of job creation, training, health, education, safety and environmental improvement. In 1992-93, it will be targeted to smaller, defined areas of particular need to achieve greater impact.

The urban crime fund will target additional funds on an experimental basis to three police authorities to help in tackling crime and providing a better environment in inner cities.

Urban programme funding demonstrates the Government's commitment to a co-ordinated attack on inner city problems in partnership with the public, private and voluntary sectors. A list of the initial allocations in England for 1992-93 is set out in the table.

Municipal Bonds

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to give local authorities the right to raise capital finance by means of issuing municipal bonds with a maturity of more than five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Local authorities are already able to raise capital finance by issuing bonds with a maturity of more than five years. We are not currently contemplating any change in authorities' powers in this field.

Bedfordshire County Council

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to make a statement on his decision upon the Bedfordshire county council structure plan alterations No. 3.

Sir George Young: We have completed the consideration of the 481 objections received to the proposed modifications to the Bedfordshire structure plan alterations No. 3, published in July 1991. We expect to publish the approval of those alterations, subject to modifications, early in February.

Rowner Housing Estate

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Gosport dated 19 December in which he asked for a joint ministerial meeting involving Ministers from the Department of the Environment and the Department of Defence in order to discuss the defective housing on Rowner housing estate with a delegation from Gosport.

Mr. Yeo: A reply to my hon. Friend's letter was sent to him on 15 January.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require certain local authorities to make a transfer from their housing revenue account to their general fund; if he will list the authorities involved; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Schedule IV to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 requires a local housing authority to make a transfer from its housing revenue account to some other revenue account if its housing revenue account subsidy calculation results in a negative amount. The transfer must be equal to that amount. An authority not entitled to housing revenue account subsidy may also transfer any end-of-year surplus on its housing revenue account to some other revenue account. In 1991-92 the following authorities are expected to transfer an estimated total of £23,286,882 from their housing revenue accounts:

Barking and Dagenham
Newbury
Swale
Suffolk Coastal South Wight
St. Edmundsbury
Wandsdyke
Medina
Epson and Ewell
Sevenoaks
Tonbridge and Malling
North Bedfordshire
Broadland
East Dorset
Mid Bedfordshire
West Oxfordshire
Wycombe
South Bucks

Thamesmead

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Local Government Boundary Commission to submit its recommendations on the future of Thamesmead to him.

Mr. Key: The Commission has issued draft proposals covering the Greenwich/Bexley boundary. Public comments have been received and are being considered by the commission, after which they will submit their report to my right hon. Friend.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce the new membership of the Inland Waterways Advisory Amenity Committee.

Mr. Heseltine: Shortly.

Air Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legislation exists to control (a) toxic mercury vapours from amalgam tooth fillings, (b) radioactive particles from nuclear powered heart pacemakers and (c) PCB contamination from plastic coffin materials given off from crematoria chimneys.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 January 1992]: Under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, crematoria are subject to local authority air pollution control. The Secretary of State's process guidance on the standards of pollution control to be met by crematoria gives guidance on minimising the emission of potentially toxic substances, for example by ensuring complete combustion (clauses 41-44 of PG5/2, available from HMSO). The holding and use of radioactive material and the discharge of radioactive waste is subject to the provisions of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. It is our understanding that heart pacemakers are removed prior to cremation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Crumlin Road, Belfast

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what form of inquiry was held into the bomb explosion in HM Prison, Crumlin road, Belfast; in which room of the prison the explosion occurred; how many prisoners died as a result of the explosion; when he expects to receive the results of the inquiry; how many people have been prosecuted in connection with this incident; and if he will make a statement on the present safety arrangements for remand prisoners at this prison.

Dr. Mawhinney: Two remand prisoners died as a result of injuries received when a bomb exploded in the recreation and dining hall in C wing, HM prison Belfast, on 24 November 1991. To date there have been no prosecutions in connection with the incident. The police investigation is continuing.

Following the explosion two inquiries were initiated. A senior governor in the Northern Ireland prison service was requested to inquire into the effectiveness of search and other procedures at Belfast prison and to consider what changes, if any, should be made. While Lord Colville was asked to review the operational policy at Belfast prison for the management of paramilitary prisoners from opposing factions and to make recommendations.

The internal inquiry, which was completed on 10 December, contained a number of recommendations and these are currently being considered with a view to their urgent implementation. Lord Colville is at present taking evidence and I hope to have his report by February.

The Government are conscious of its duty to take all practical and reasonable steps to ensure the safe custody of all prisoners in the Northern Ireland prisons and safety arrangements are kept constantly under review. In addition to the changes recommended by the internal inquiry, a number of security measures have been introduced at Belfast prison since the explosion to provide greater protection for remand prisoners.

Low Achievers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision and resources he has made for low achievers.

Dr. Mawhinney: All schools are funded by formulae which allocate additional resources to schools in respect of children with special needs and social deprivation. In addition, under the Making Belfast Work and Londonderry initiatives, the Department of Education for Northern Ireland has targeted almost £3 million over the last three years at selected primary and secondary schools. This is aimed at improving educational standards and the employability of pupils.

Roads

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the major capital road schemes and the estimated costs of each scheme which are programmed for the years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Proposed schemes	Estimated cost (£ million)
1992-93	Newry bypass, stage 3 (bridge)	1·9
1993-94	Church street/Scotch street, Downpatrick	1·6
	Newry bypass, stage 2	3·6
	Newry bypass, stage 3 (roadworks)	4·2
1994-95	M2 Crosskannan slip roads	0·5
	Purdysburn road, Belfast, stage 1	0·8
	A4 Ballygawley/Londonderry improvement schemes	0·3
	Omagh throughpass, stage 2	2·9
1995-96	Killead bypass	0·9
	Forster Green, Belfast	1·6
	Ballymaconaghy road, Belfast, stage 2	0·5
	Greenmouth link, Coleraine, stages 3 & 4	0·5
	Strand road, Londonderry, stage 2	1·0
	Balloo road, Bangor, stage 3	0·5
	Northern distributor, Ballymena	2·2
	Great Victoria street/Sandy row, Belfast	1·4
	Comber bypass, stage 2	2·6
	A26 Antrim/Ballymena, stage 2	2·7

The precise timing of all these schemes will depend on the completion of the statutory processes and the availability of finance at the time.

University Applicants

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply on 19 December 1991, Official Report, column 317, how many applicants from Northern Ireland were refused enrolment for the current academic year, 1991-92, into (a) Queen's university and (b) the University of Ulster.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Republic of Ireland (Education)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost to public funds for students from the Republic of Ireland now receiving their higher education in Northern Ireland as a result of European Community regulations.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the estimated cost to public funds of tuition fees for students from the Republic of Ireland in the 1991-92 academic year will be approximately £3·8 million.

Urban Development Programme

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether all the expenditure on the urban development programme is included in public expenditure totals in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The urban development programme is a scheme of assistance wholly funded by the International Fund for Ireland. Expenditure under the scheme is not included in public expenditure totals in Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Cold Weather Credits

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No requests for a meeting have been received from the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has made to the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are already addressing the issues raised by the Campaign for Cold Weather Credits by making significant improvements to the Department of Social Security cold weather payments scheme which came into effect last November. From January 1992, the Department of Energy introduced the home energy efficiency scheme which replaces and improves on community insulation projects and the home insulation scheme; and the Scottish Office "Keep Warm this Winter" Campaign offers free advice and assistance to anyone concerned about the adverse effects of cold weather.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in support of the introduction of cold weather credits.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have recently received written representations from Citizens Advice Scotland and West Lothian district council in support of the scheme.

Dounreay

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on environmental restoration work carried out at the nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay on radioactive waste seepage from the low-activity waste pits since 1985.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1992]: No seepage of liquid containing radioactivity is known to occur from the low activity waste pits and no environmental restoration work is proposed. Leachate from the radioactive waste disposal pits at Dounreay is collected from the pit drainage system and sampled on a regular basis of radioactivity. The leachate is then pumped to the main effluents tanks from where it is discharged to the sea along with other liquid effluents in accordance with the site authorisation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will evaluate the requirement for a programme to renovate the shallow-level radioactive waste disposal pits at the nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay along the lines of the restoration work done at similar disposal trenches at Drigg in Cumbria.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1992]: There is no evidence to suggest that remedial or additional restoration work is required on the four filled pits, or the two pits currently in use.

Coastguards

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of coastguards at each station in Scotland and the number for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement on the future of this service.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 15 January 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

The answer to the hon. Member's question with regard to lists of numbers of coastguards at each station in Scotland for each year since 1979 can only be obtained at excessive cost.

Her Majesty's coastguard will continue to co-ordinate civil maritime search and rescue from the current 21 maritime rescue co-ordination centres and sub-centres for the foreseeable future, including seven in Scotland. Support will continue to be provided by local sector and auxiliary coastguard stations whose effectiveness and efficiency will be enhanced by the formation of 68 additional auxiliary companies at new locations around the coast, including 33 in Scotland. Numbers of pagers and portable radios are being doubled, and improvements in the remuneration, equipment and training of the auxiliary coastguard service are to be made.

EMPLOYMENT

Virus Research

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a summary of the procedures that are now required to be implemented by employers for the protection of employees working in HIV and hepatitis B virus research laboratories and production facilities in England and Wales.

Mr. Forth: Under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, employers are required to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare at work of their employees and others who may be affected by their activities. In addition, under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 employers are required to carry out a risk assessment for all activities which are likely to expose any employee to any substance hazardous to health, including pathogenic micro-organisms, and to introduce appropriate precautions commensurate to the risk.

To assist employers with these provisions, guidance has been published for the protection of employees working in HIV and hepatitis B virus research laboratories and production facilities. The guidance is contained in "Categorisation of pathogens according to hazard and categories of containment" and "HIV—the causative agent of AIDS and related conditions" prepared by the Health and Safety Commission's Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens. Copies of the document will be placed in the Library.

Unemployment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the level of unemployment in the original EC Six countries as a whole each year since 1962, in the EC Nine as a whole after 1973, and in the EC Twelve as a whole since 1986, both in numbers and as a percentage of their total work force.

Mr. Jackson: The following two tables provide the extent of the readily available information:

(i) estimates of the annual average numbers of unemployed for the years 1983 to 1990 produced by the Statistical Office of the European Community (SOEC). Comparable estimates of numbers unemployed are not available on a monthly basis;

(ii) internationally comparable unemployment rates produced by SOEC from 1983-1990. Similar standardised rates, produced by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), are available from 1975. These have been provided for the years 1975 to 1982.

Contaminated Syringes

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will introduce regulations to require contaminated syringes stored in a primary container in health treatment premises to be placed in a secondary container if leakage is possible during handling, storage, transport or shipping.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State, does not consider it necessary to introduce regulations so specific as to cover this matter. Adequate guidance regarding the handling, storage, transport and shipping of contaminated syringes is provided in the publication "The safe disposal of clinical waste" published by the Health and Safety Commission's Health Services Advisory Committee, which was revised in 1991.

This document provides employers in all health care premises with the necessary information for them to comply with their legal obligations under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 (the COSHH regulations) which involve risk assessment and the provision of adequate controls to guard against exposure to infection for both workers and the public.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his reply at 2 July 1991, Official Report, column 121, if he will make a statement on the likely date of the conclusion of the appeal relating to the severe disability premium awarded to Miss M. Hunt of Perry Barr, Birmingham, Ref 401: 33209.

Miss Widdecombe: On 7 January 1992 the Social Security Commissioner gave, with the consent of all interested parties, an interim decision to award the severe disability premium in respect of the period from 11 April 1988 to 8 October 1989. A copy of the decision was issued to all parties on 13 January 1992. The Commissioner has postponed the further decision for the period 9 October 1989 onwards until the House of Lords has given its decision in another case.

Hours of Work

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in 1991 with a physical or mental disability who received income support were working for (a) more than 24 hours a week, under regulation 6 of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 and (b) working for between 16 and 24 hours.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether lifetime awards of attendance allowance and mobility allowance will be reconsidered by adjudication officers under the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Act 1991.

Mr. Scott: Awards of attendance allowance for people aged under 65 and mobility allowance will be replaced by awards of disability living allowance—DLA—from 6 April 1992. Life awards of DLA and attendance allowance for those aged over 65 will not be reviewed by adjudication officers unless the person expressly applies for a review of the award of either or both components, or, in exceptional circumstances, where information comes to light which gives the adjudication officer reasonable grounds to believe that entitlement is either too low or too high.

Medical Evidence

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate total annual cost to social security claimants of providing medical evidence required by the social security appeals procedures which is not provided under the national health service.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's general policy is to provide medical evidence for Social Security claimants free of charge where this is required by the appeals system.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the weather stations which have recorded temperatures triggering cold weather payments in each week in 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

TRANSPORT

Lorry Speed Limits

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the costs to British businesses of the European proposal of a 50 mph speed limit on lorries.

Mr. Chope: The costs for some vehicle operators would have been substantial. In the event the Transport Council decided upon a speed limiter setting of 90 km/h—56 mph —for heavy goods vehicles. This will increase some journey times, although there will be offsetting fuel savings.

Motorway Accidents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has taken place into accidents on motorways caused by motorists falling momentarily asleep.

Mr. Chope: Research has been carried out by the university of Loughborough in this country and by various institutions overseas.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contact his Department has with his opposite numbers in the European Community and the United States of America on research into motorists falling momentarily asleep whilst driving on motorways.

Mr. Chope: My Department has regular contact with other countries to discuss all aspects of road safety and research.

Bus Priority Schemes

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake to review the criteria for Transport supplementary grant funding of bus priority schemes.

Mr. Freeman: Consultations will shortly begin with the local authority associations about the transport policies and plans circular for 1992-93. The references in the circular to bus priority schemes and their eligibility for transport supplementary grant and credit approval will be covered in these consultations.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had concerning the funding of bus priority schemes.

Mr. Freeman: I recently chaired a working group comprising the Bus and Coach Council, the local authority associations, the police, bus manufacturers and the National Federation of Bus Users during which the funding of bus priority schemes was discussed. The group endorsed the statement I made on 16 December announcing the provision of at least £10 million over the next two years to fund specific local authority bus schemes.

Pavements

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to monitor the provisions of the Road Traffic Act 1990 with respect to the condition of pavements.

Mr. Chope: On 31 December 1991 my Department wrote to local authority associations and other interested organisations to consult them about draft regulations and a draft non-statutory code of practice on various aspects of the arrangements for inspection of undertakers' street works. The draft code of practice was prepared by a joint committee of local authorities' and undertakers' representatives.

Utilities' Street Works

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with representatives of local authorities concerning procedures for carrying out the inspection of utilities' street works.

Mr. Chope: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the street works provisions of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. These provide, in sections 71 and 139, for reinstatements of the street, including pavements, following street works to comply with prescribed specifications of materials and standards of workmanship. The Government have commissioned consultants to advise on appropriate arrangements for monitoring the effects of the Act.

Speed Limits

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to issue revised advice on the criteria to be applied for road speed limits in villages and semi-rural areas.

Mr. Chope: Consultation with interested bodies on revisions to the criteria for setting speed limits will take place within the next week few weeks, with a view to issuing the revised criteria as soon as possible thereafter.

Severn Tunnel (Accident)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the effect of drying out of a length of self-healing cable on its usefulness to the railways inspectorate inquiry into the Severn tunnel accident on 7 December.

Mr. Freeman: The cable in question was stored at British Rail's laboratory at Reading for as long as was necessary to arrange a programme of tests, which would identify possible faults without causing further damage or concealing evidence of other problems. Storage of the cable for any length of time in laboratory conditions could cause the latex-like insulation on the individual wires in the cable to reseal, so tests were conducted as soon as possible with both British Rail and HM railway inspectorate engineers being present. The tests have now been successfully completed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct the railways inspectorate to make available immediately to (a) the British Rail national inquiry and (b) independent inspection the length of self-healing cable from signal box 164 suspected to be part of the cause of the signalling failure which may have led to the accident in the Severn tunnel on 7 December.

Mr. Freeman: The accident is being investigated both internally by British Rail and independently by the Health and Safety Executive's HM railway inspectorate. The cable in question has now been examined in detail by engineers from both organisations working together in a British railways laboratory.

Network SouthEast

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 19 December, Official Report, column 239, when he expects the individual objectives for all 15 of the Network SouthEast route groups to be set under the British Rail passengers charter; and who will be the judge and against what criteria as to whether the service delivered falls significantly short of published standards.

(2) whether he has set the new performance standards for the Kent coastal services in 1992 that his hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport said in the House on 12 December, Official Report, column 1143, that he would be setting from 1 January; and whether he will publish those standards.

Mr. Freeman: The individual performance targets for each of the 15 route groups of Network SouthEast and the related compensation arrangements will be set out in the BR passengers charter shortly. Monitoring of performance already occurs and the targets will apply from January 1992.

Job Applicants (Expenses)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances his Department is willing to pay reasonable travelling expenses for applicants to attend job or recruitment board interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department pays reasonable travelling expenses to applicants for many jobs in the Department. For clerical and secretarial posts, recruitment tends to be from the local area, with less need to pay travelling expenses.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in ordering the trains for the north of London daytime passenger services through the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: The seven train sets needed for the north of London daytime channel tunnel services were ordered by the railways on 18 December 1991.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the implementation report of the 1990 efficiency scrutiny of vehicle excise duty enforcement will be available.

Mr. Chope: I have today placed copies of the scrutiny implementation report in the Libraries of both Houses. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency has made good progress in putting into practice the 28 main recommendations. The number of VED evaders caught and penalised through out-of-court settlements has increased by more than 30 per cent. over the past two years and 420,000 offenders will be brought to book in the present financial year. Further efficiency benefits currently under development will be included in a follow up report to be produced in 12 months' time.

Road Schemes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, whether he will be issuing for consultation the criteria he proposes to use in exercising his discretionary power under section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 to acquire property which is seriously affected by his Department's road schemes; and whether he expects to make the criteria public before the end of 1991.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1991, c. 237.]: My right hon. Friend will use the new power of earlier and wider acquisition to alleviate hardship by buying off-line property which in his opinion is suffering from serious "blight by proximity". Until now property not likely to be needed for a scheme could be acquired only if conditions during construction or after road opening would be intolerable. Acquisition will be from as early as the announcement of the preferred route. Each case will be considered on its merits, but as a guideline we would normally expect qualifying properties to lie within about 100 m of the centre of the road.

The other guidelines are as follows:

(a) Where it would be intolerable for the occupier to remain in the property during works or once the road is open the vendor must show that he has made reasonable efforts to sell. The property must have been on offer for at least 20 weeks at a reasonable price and have been impossible to sell other than at a price substantially lower than that for which it might have been expected to be sold but for the scheme. Normally the difference should amount to not less than 5 per cent.

(b) Therre are a variety of reasons why a vendor might need to move without delay, and where they appear cogent, they should be accepted. In the case of owner occupiers of dwellings guidelines set out the following main types of reason which should be accepted:

(i) acquisition of a job outside reasonable commuting distance when unemployed (what is reasonable under this and the next head will vary with the circumstances, including the means of the individual);

(ii) acquisition of a different job outside reasonable commuting distance (it is undesirable for blight to impede job mobility);

(iii) need to move for medical reasons, including need to look after an elderly relative in a different sort of house;

(iv) need to provide for growing family (primarily to be considered in relation to bedrooms—it is undesirable for growing children of different sexes to share);

(v) need to realise assets, perhaps because of serious financial difficulties or dissolution of marriage.

PRIME MINISTER

Oxleas Wood

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister when he last visited Oxleas Wood, south-east London; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not visited Oxleas Wood.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 470, concerning the inclusion in the draft treaty of European union of a reference to the role and significance of European parties, when he expects to receive a draft formulation from the presidency; when he expects to lay this before Parliament; and what is the objective of the provision.

The Prime Minister: The Portuguese presidency has proposed the following draft treaty article:

"Political parties at European level are important as a factor for integration within the Union. They contribute to forming a European awareness and to expressing the political will of the citizens of the Union".

Discussion is continuing in Brussels as to where this article should appear in the treaty. This is one of a number of technical points which will be settled before signature in early February. The text of the treaty will be published in the normal way after signature.

Advisory Council on Science and Technology

Dr. Bray: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the current members of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology; if he will give the date of their original appointment; and what is the date on which their current term of office will end.

The Prime Minister: The current members of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology are as listed. In addition, the chief scientific adviser, Cabinet Office, Professor William Stewart, attends council meetings. Departmental chief scientists/scientific advisers are also invited to attend most meetings.

[1] Not more than four members of the Medical Research Council, Natural Environment Research Council and Science and Engineering Research Council are appointed by the Secretary of State for Education and Science on the nomination of such Ministers of the Government as the Secretary of State shall determine. Up to four members of the Agriculture and Food Research Council are appointed by the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and up to two members by the Secretary of State for Scotland. With the exception of the Science and Engineering Research Council, in the case of members who are officials of Government Departments their length of office is not specified.

[2] Ex-officio members.

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to inform drugs education co-ordinators and teachers about ecstasy, its symptoms and its harmful effects.

Mr. Atkins: We believe that health (formerly drugs) education co-ordinators are generally well-informed about the nature and effects of ecstasy, and are briefing teachers as necessary. It is not the Department's normal practice to distribute information on particular drugs, but we should be prepared to consider doing so if a need became apparent.

Education Reform

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those he has consulted regarding (a) changes to GCSE coursework requirements, (b) the plans for further education in the Further and Higher Education Bill, (c) the plans for the schools inspectorate in the Education (Schools) Bill and (d) the plans for higher education in the Further and Higher Education Bill.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend consulted the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC), which has access to the advice of examining bodies and teachers, on changes to GCSE coursework requirements.

The plans for further education underlying part I of the Further and Higher Education Bill were set out in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" (Cm 1536). This contained an open invitation to interested parties to comment.

The plans for school inspection were set out in the parents charter, which also contained an open invitation to comment. In addition, the Department of Education and Science wrote to local education authorities and relevant national bodies inviting comments on the inspection proposals. A full list is attached to the Department's letter of 2 October, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The plans for higher education underlying part II of the Further and Higher Education Bill were set out in the White Paper "Higher Education: a New Framework" (Cm. 1541). Although the White Paper did not itself invite comments, the Government have since consulted higher education institutions and their representatives on various aspects of the new framework, as foreshadowed by the White Paper.

Mexico (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the purpose of his recent visit to Mexico; who accompanied him in any official capacity; and what was the total cost to the Exchequer for him and those with him.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My visit was in response to an invitation from the Mexican Government. The Mexican Government are giving very high priority to the modernisation of their education system and they wished to share our experience of education reform particularly our policies to raise standards and improve efficiency in post-school education and training. I was also able to assist British suppliers of educational goods and services to benefit from this expanding market. I had meetings with President Salinas and with the Foreign Secretary and the Education Secretary of the Mexican Government and with several state governors.

I was accompanied by a departmental private secretary and a senior official of my department. The breakdown of our costs for the visit is as follows:

—Transport to Mexico and within Mexico: £9,739
—Accommodation and subsistence in the British Embassy and in hotels: £487
—Other costs: £453

I was also accompanied for part of the trip by three British businessmen who covered their own costs.

Great Britain Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current number of staff employed by the Great Britain Sports Council; and what additional numbers of staff over this number he has assumed in proposing a separate Sports Council for England and the United Kingdom Sports Commission.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 542 staff are currently employed by the GB Sports Council. I see no case for additional staff to be employed as a result of its re-structuring.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table setting out the present functions of the Great Britain Sports Council, together with an indication of (a) which of these functions will be carried out solely by the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission, (b) which of these functions will be carried out solely by the proposed Sports Council for England, (c) which of these functions will be jointly carried out by the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission and the proposed Sports Council for England and (d) which functions of the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission and the proposed Sports Council for England are not currently undertaken by the Great Britain Sports Council.

Mr. Atkins: The functions of the Great Britain Sports Council are set out in general terms in its Royal Charter. Annexes A and B of "Sport and Active Recreation" published in December set out the functions of the United Kingdom Sports Commission and the Sports Council for England respectively. These are based on the functions of the Great Britain Sports Council.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 455, if he will make it his policy to request and consider responses to his consultation letter on the disposal of school playing fields from the Sports Council, the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the National Playing Fields Association and the regional councils for sport and recreation before announcing the conclusions of his consultation exercise on this matter.

Mr. Atkins: All these organisations have been sent copies of the consultation letter for information and are free to comment before any announcement is made on the conclusions of this consultation exercise.

Sport Policy

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his written answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 454, and the publication of his review of Government sports policy, what calculations he made as to the likely cost of the additional offices required for a separate United Kingdom sports commission.

Mr. Atkins: As I made clear in my written answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 454, the United Kingdom Sports Commission and the Sports Council for England will be funded from within the provision made available for the Great Britain Sports Council. The size and location of offices required as a result of this re-structuring will be a matter for discussion with the Great Britain Sports Council and its successor bodies.

Primary Education

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date he received the report from Professor Alexander, Mr. Rose and Mr. Woodhead on primary education.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend expects shortly to receive the report he commissioned from Professor Alexander, Mr. Rose and Mr. Woodhead. When it is published it will be placed in the Library.

Virus Research

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will pulish a list of all HIV and hepatitis B virus research laboratories and production facilities in England and Wales.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The main Government agency for funding medical research in this country is the Medical Research Council. Its latest handbook for 1991 gives details of the location of the research which it supports. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Publicly funded medical research is also conducted in universities and through the health authorities and health Departments. Information on such research and on research undertaken by companies and the medical research charities is not collected centrally.

Funding Councils

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what senior appointments he expects to make to the Further Education Funding Council for England and the Higher Education Funding Council for England to be established under the Further and Higher Education Bill [Lords].

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to the passage of the Further and Higher Education Bill, we intend to make the following appointments.

For the Further Education Funding Council for England:

Chairman: Mr. Robert Gunn, former Chairman of the Boots Company plc; and Chief Executive: Dr. William Stubbs, currently Chief Executive of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC).

For the Higher Education Funding Council for England:

Chairman (as already announced): Sir Ron Dearing, currently Chairman of the PCFC; and Chief Executive: Professor Graeme Davies, currently Chief Executive of the Universities Funding Council.

These will be strong teams to help steer the two new councils in funding the effective expansion of both further and higher education.

In advance of these appointments, Dr. Stubbs will be seconded to the Department to help prepare for the new further education funding arrangements. Professor Davies is therefore being appointed also as chief executive of the PCFC.

Open University

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration is given in allocating funds to the Open university, to the teaching and learning difficulties encountered in remote and scattered rural areas.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government recognise the special role of the Open university in serving those living at a distance from other higher education institutions. The Government continue to support the Open university and has funded 3,000 additional undergraduate places at the university in 1992.

The funds given to the Open university are not earmarked to particular areas. However, the university has a commitment to make its services available to those living in all parts of the United Kingdom.

Funding

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to provide an equal level of funding for each school pupil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The schools component of standard spending assessments (SSAs) is already largely based on pupil numbers, but with an allowance, equivalent to about 20 per cent. of standard spending for schools, for the additional cost of educating pupils in areas of relative deprivation and for the relatively high labour costs of London and the south east. Authorities are not bound by SSAs, but are free to make their own decisions about total spending on schools and the distribution of funding between schools and between pupils, subject to the current LMS requirement that at least 75 per cent. of funds delegated to schools must be distributed with reference to pupil numbers. My right hon. Friend welcomes indications that LEAs are beginning to take action to narrow the gap between spending levels per pupil in the primary and secondary phases.

Primary Schools

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the pupil/teacher ratio in primary schools in Staffordshire in each of the past three years.

Mr. Fallon: The "within school" pupil:teacher ratio (PTR) in primary schools in Staffordshire Local Education Authority, for each of the past three years, is given in the following table.

Staffordshire local education authority

	Pupil: teacher ratio[1] 1989	1990	1991
Primary Schools[2]	23·0	23·3	23·1

[1] Excludes nursery schools.
[2] Based on qualified teachers only in schools.

Key Stage One Tests

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the information relating to the attainment of children in key stage one tests in English, mathematics and science, and in all three subjects combined, ranking local authorities by attainment in their area at level three.

Mr. Eggar: The following table ranks LEAs' combined English, mathematics and science results of the 1991 tests of seven-year-olds by the proportion of pupils attaining level three. The other information requested can be derived from the tables at annex B of the full report placed in the Library of the House on 19 December.

ENVIRONMENT

Loft Insulation

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing stock has loft insulation.

Mr. Yeo: It is estimated that over 90 per cent. of the dwellings in Great Britain with accessible lofts have loft insulation.

Local Government Commission

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimate of the annual costs of the local government commission when it is fully operational.

Mr. Key: Provisional expenditure figures for the Local Government Commission will be published shortly in the departmental report.

Housing Courts, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with Nottingham city council regarding the use of housing tribunals or housing courts to process actions against bad neighbours and neighbour nuisance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Urbanisation and Human Settlement

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to consider the issue of human settlement in the preparatory work undertaken by his Department for the forthcoming United Nations conference on environment and development;

(2) what proposals Her Majesty's Government has for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development for addressing the issue of urbanisation and human settlement generally.

Mr. Baldry: Early United Nations meetings concerned with drawing up the agenda for UNCED took little account of urban development and human settlements. However the United Kingdom and the other member states of the EC successfully argued that the subject should be dealt with as a major cross-sectoral issue. The secretariat's proposals to be presented to the final preparatory committee in March are expected to reflect the views put forward by the EC.

Royal Parks

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what initial screening of companies seeking to tender for the maintenance of any of the royal parks took place on grounds of a horticultural quality threshold or the company's financial position;

(2) what account he has taken of the experience of individual local councils who have awarded horticultural contracts to a prospective tendering company, in drawing up short lists for maintenance of the royal parks.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 16 January 1992]: Companies wishing to tender for garden and landscape maintenance work in the royal parks were asked to complete a pre-tender questionnaire providing details of their company finances and their contracts. This information, together with assessments of the horticultural quality of their current work by site visits and the financial viability of each company, was then considered in drawing up a short list of tenderers for each park. The experience of individual local authorities has been a relevant factor in drawing up these short lists of tenderers for garden and landscape work in the royal parks.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will disqualify any contractors proposing staffing levels signficantly below the minimum staffing levels for maintenance recommended in the 1989 consultants' report from bidding for the maintenance contract of St. James's park.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 16 January 1992]: No. But my Department has satisfied itself that the chosen contractor will employ enough skilled and unskilled operatives to tend the gardens and grounds to our high standards—and indeed to improve on our present standards in certain respects.

Environment Policy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution he made towards the "Manual of Environmental Policy: The EC and Britain."

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 16 January 1992]: This Department contributed £12,000 towards the Institute for European Environmental Policy's costs in researching the material for this publication.

HEALTH

Low Income Benefit Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to his Department of administering the national health service low income scheme for health benefits.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS low income scheme is administered by the Department of Social Security on behalf of the Department of Health, on a repayment basis. Figures are available only for the three years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92. The repayments for those years have been £8·107 million, £7·180 million and £5·137 million respectively.

Gene Therapy

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will present to Parliament the report of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government yesterday laid before the House the report of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy (Cm. 1788).

The Committee was chaired by Sir Cecil Clothier KCB, QC. The Government are grateful to Sir Cecil and the members of this eminent committee for producing a clear and comprehensive report on a scientifically complex subject.

The committee's main conclusions and recommendations are:

- Gene therapy offers for the first time in many genetic disorders the prospect of effective treatment and cure. It also has other possible clinical applications. Before introduction into medical practice it must be ethically acceptable and shown to be so.
- Gene therapy raises no new ethical principle but the familiar issues which attend the introduction of any new medical procedure are heightened because of the special qualities of the genetic make-up of individuals. The Committee believe that, all gene therapy treatments should initially be regarded as research and be governed by the existing requirements which already apply in the United Kingdom to research involving human subjects. This is an important safeguard for the patient.
- Gene therapy should be directed to the alleviation of genetic disease in individual patients. It should not be used to change or enhance normal human traits.
- A new expert supervisory body should be established to provide scientific and medical advice on matters germane to the safety and efficacy of human gene modification, and its use. This supervisory body should work in conjunction with local research ethics committees when proposals for gene therapy are made.
- Because there is insufficient knowledge to evaluate the risk to future generations, genetic modification of reproductive cells, or the germ cells which give rise to them, should not at present be attempted.

As the report says, gene therapy offers for the first time the prospect of effective treatment and cure in many genetic disorders. In such an important and sensitive area, Ministers believe that those with an interest—both professional and lay people—should be given an opportunity to respond to the committee's recommendations. We have therefore decided to consult widely on the committee's report and would welcome comments from organisations and individuals. The Government will decide what steps to take once these views are available. The consultation period will end on 18 May 1992.

It is not expected that proposals for gene therapy will be made in the immediate future; but it is judged prudent to make arrangements for handling any proposals that may be made before substantive arrangements are in place. Accordingly the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy has been asked to remain in being.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library and I am arranging for copies to be available in the Vote Office.

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue a definitive circular on fluoridation.

Mr. Dorrell: The fluoridation of water supplies is a matter for local decision. Procedural guidance was issued to health authorities in 1987, HC(87)18, a copy of which is available in the Library. There are no plans to issue any further guidance at present.

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines the chief medical officer has issued to consultants and general practitioners on how best to treat those suffering from the use of ecstasy and similar drugs;

(2) what advice has been given to general practitioners on how best to warn patients on their lists of the risks of illness and death from ecstasy and similar drugs.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has recently published updated "Guidelines on Clinical Management of Drug Misuse and Dependence", a copy of which is available in the Library. These are being circulated to every doctor in England, Scotland and Wales. The guidelines include information for doctors on the problems associated with use of ecstasy and similar drugs and recommend a range of treatments for these problems.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he is funding into the medical and psychological effects of use of ecstasy and similar drugs.

Mr. Dorrell: Exploratory work is being undertaken by a group of doctors at the Institute of Psychiatry and the Maudsley hospital to determine the possible adverse effects of ecstasy. The Department is keeping a watching brief on this and is aware of some interest in this area among other drug researchers.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of illness due to use of ecstasy and similar drugs have been reported by month during 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Health Workers (Infections)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will introduce legislation to require surgeons and dental surgeons to wear masks in combination with eye protection devices whenever splashes, spray, spatter or droplets of blood or other potentially infectious materials may be generated and eye, nose or mouth contamination can be reasonably anticipated;

(2) if he will place in the Library a summary of those requirements that employers are required to meet to protect their employees who work in hospital premises from being infected with blood or other potentially infectious materials;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to increase protection for employees working in health premises who have contact with laundry contaminated with blood or other potentially infectious materials;

(4) if he will introduce legislation to ensure that all health employees who carry out phlebotomies at volunteer blood donation centres are required to wear gloves when (a) the employee has cuts, scratches or other breaks in his or her skin, (b) the employee judges that hand contamination with blood may occur and (c) the employee is receiving training in phlebotomy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Legislation on health and safety at work is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

All employers have legal obligations under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare at work for all their employees, and to ensure that persons not employed, but who may be affected by their undertakings, are not exposed to risks to their health and safety.

Employers are also required by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations 1988, to carry out a risk assessment for all activities which are likely to expose any employees to any substance hazardous to health, including pathogenic micro-organisms.

A range of guidance and codes of practice, published by the Health Departments, the Health and Safety Executive, and by health service professional associations, is available to employers and employees to help ensure appropriate standards of hygiene and minimise the risk of any spread of infection as a result of clinical activities. I would refer the hon. Member particularly to the booklet, published in January 1990 by the UK health departments through HMSO, entitled "Guidance for Clinical Health Workers: Protection Against Infection with HIV and Hepatitis Viruses". A copy of this booklet is available in the Library.

There are no plans for legislation to cover separately the matters referred to by the hon. Member.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the results of energy management schemes in the national health service over the last 10 years; and what energy efficiency targets have been set for the next five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The National Health Service is currently saving £68 million a year through improved energy management. The cumulative savings from this source released to improved patient care in the past 10 years amounts to £379 million. The NHS is committed to achieving further savings of 15 per cent. over the five years from April 1991 as part of the Government's continuing energy efficiency campaign.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make an immediate announcement on the declarations of interest in trust status submitted by the Churchill hospital and the acute services in Oxford.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am currently considering a number of possible configurations for trusts in Oxford. My decision will be made public in due course.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce a freeze on pending trust applications until after the general election.

Mr. Dorrell: There is no intention of freezing the trust programme. The health service reforms are already producing benefits to patients and we wish to see the national health service building on the progress already established.

Cook-chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which district health authorities and trusts have cook-chill systems of hospital catering; and which regional health authorities have a region wide policy of cook-chill catering in hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. It is a matter for district health authorities and trusts to use catering systems that they consider meet their requirements of quality within their available resources.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to amend the terms and conditions of contract of services for general practitioners to include the provision that medical evidence is supplied free to all claimants where this is submitted in relation to a claim for social security benefits;

(2) what measures are in hand to consolidate and review the national health service General and Medical and Pharmaceutical Regulations; and if he will bring forward proposals to make it mandatory that all medical evidence needed by social security claimants in support of their benefit claims is available free.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Where medical evidence is expressly required under Social Security legislation to establish entitlement to a particular benefit, GPs are obliged to provide it free of charge to their NHS patients. Such certificates are listed in the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1974. This obligation will be preserved intact in these regulations which are currently being consolidated.

Social Security Benefits (Hospital Patients)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that hospital patients are made aware of any social security benefits to which they may be entitled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Hospital-based social workers often advise hospital patients about how to claim social security benefits. In addition, depending on local arrangements, hospital staff may sometimes perform this function.

Mental Health Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to health authorities and trusts with regard to involving the police in returning to hospitals patients subject to compulsory detention under the Mental Health Act 1983 who have absconded.

Mr. Dorrell: The code of practice issued under the Mental Health Act 1983 states (at paragraph 21.4) that the hospital should always inform the police if a dangerous or restricted patient absconds. Section 18 of the Act also authorises police officers to detain such patients and return them to hospital.

Medical and Pharmaceutical Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the second draft of National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Once the regulations have been made they will be published and made available to hon. Members in the usual way.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Africa (Assistance)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much financial support is given to African countries by members of the development assistance committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, according to the most recent available information.

Mrs. Chalker: Net official development assistance to Africa were as follows:

Donor	US$ million
Australia	76·27
Austria	47·35
Belgium	220·16
Canada	514·23
Denmark	293·43

Rainforests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the impact of World bank funded projects for soya bean production on south American rainforests.

Mrs. Chalker: The World bank has not funded projects for soya bean production in South America apart from one in Bolivia which was partly concerned with changing the use of existing agricultural land to soya bean production. An overall aim of this project is to develop sustainable agriculture on existing agricultural land, one effect of which would be to reduce pressures for further encroachment into the forest areas.

Know-How Funds

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contributions made to date, and planned under the know-how funds for central and eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement on those countries not yet in receipt of the fund.

Mrs. Chalker: Expenditure under the fund in 1989-90, 1990-91 and commitments to date in 1991-92 by country are as follows:

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91 £ million	1991-92 £ million
Poland	2·3	10·9	11·5
Hungary	n/a	1·6	6·1
Czechoslovakia	n/a	2·0	6·4
Ex-German Democratic Republic	n/a	0·5	n/a
Bulgaria	n/a	n/a	1·3
Romania	n/a	n/a	1·3
Baltic States/Former Soviet Union	n/a	n/a	10·0

Our total budget for 1991-92 is £36 million which, allowing for a small amount of slippage, we expect to spend in full. The budget for 1992-93 has been increased to £46 million which again we hope to spend in full.

We have no plans at present to extend the fund to any further countries.

Czechoslovakia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects and amount of Government aid which have been given to Czechoslovakia since 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: Under the know-how fund, which was extended to Czechoslovakia in March 1990, we provided some £2 million in 1990-91 and expect to spend up to £6 million in 1991-92. For details of the projects supported I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 18 June 1991 at column 93. Additional activities agreed since then are as follows:

Financial services and macroeconomic advice

Title: Assistance for Privatisation.
Description: A team of privatisation advisers from Ernst and Young, Schroders and Denton Hall are advising on privatisation policy and implementation.
Status: An ongoing programme of assistance of which the latest phase has just been agreed.
Cost: £738,000.

Title: Training courses for the State Bank.
Description: Courses on banking procedures run by the Bank of England.
Status: Underway.
Cost: £10,000.

Title: Training on bank-lending, credit analysis and credit control.
Description: Six two week courses on the basic principle and skills involved in lending decision making and credit control for staff of various Czechoslovak banks.
Status: Under way.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Precautions

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Fire Precautions Act 1971 to bring into scope all premises other than domestic dwellings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Certain hotels, boarding houses, factories, offices, shops and railway premises currently require a fire certificate by virtue of designation orders made under section 1 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971. We have no plans to designate further premises as requiring such certificates.

We intend, however, to bring forward regulations to implement the fire safety requirements of the European Community Directives 89/391/EEC and 89/654/EEC relating to the health and safety of workers at work. These will generally apply to every place in which one or more persons work and will take effect on 1 January 1993.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is to be the policy of transfer of prison inmates from privately run prisons to state run prisons; who will decide when such a transfer is to take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Wolds remand prison will hold only unsentenced prisoners. On their receiving custodial sentences, Wolds prisoners will be taken directly from court to the appropriate local prison. Blakenhurst prison is to be a local prison, holding both sentenced and unsentenced prisoners. Arrangements for the transfer to other prisons of sentenced prisoners held at Blakenhurst will be set out in the invitation to tender which is in preparation.

Dog Fighting

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been in each of the last 10 years for illegal dog fighting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences relating to dog fights from other offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) of 20 December 1991, Official Report, column 351, whether the new level of eligibility for criminal injuries compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme will apply to all cases irrespective of the date of the injury for which compensation is sought; and if he will make an estimate of the number of claims that will be disallowed annually as a result of the change in minimum award level.

Mr. John Patten: The new lower limit for eligibility for compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme will apply to all applications received by the board on or after 6 January 1992, irrespective of the date of the injury that led to the application.

It is estimated that up to an additional 6,000 applications will be excluded by the new lower limit in a full year. However, the old lower limit will apply to all applications received by the board before 6 January 1992.

Correspondence

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters of the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East of 17 September 1991 concerning crime prevention in Bolton and 21 October 1991 concerning help for the disabled by his Department; and if he will update his note entitled "Action Against Crime."

Mr. John Patten: I wrote to my hon. Friend about crime prevention in Bolton on 15 January. My hon. Friend also wrote to me on 13 January requesting an up to date copy of the note "Action Against Crime". "Action Against Crime" is updated regularly. I have arranged for a copy of the latest version to be sent to my hon. Friend, and a copy is placed in the Library of the House.

My hon. Friend also asked when he could expect a reply to his letter to my right hon. Friend of 21 October. We can reply only in respect of actions as an employer of people with disabilities and I or my right hon. Friend will do so shortly.

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to control rave parties and young people's clubs where ecstasy use is likely.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police have adequate powers to deal with parties of this sort, including common law powers to deal with a breach of the peace or public nuisance. In addition, the Entertainments (Increased Penalties) Act 1990 has significantly increased the penalties for people convicted of providing music without a licence, where one is required, or being in breach of the condition of such a licence. Any law breaking on such premises, including the misuse of drugs, will of course be dealt with by the police.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths from use of ecstasy and similar drugs were recorded for each of the past five years and for that part of 1991 for which statistics are available.

Mr. John Patten: The number of deaths mentioning dependence, abuse or poisoning with MDMA—"ecstasy"—and similar drugs registered in England and Wales are as follows:

Number of deaths registered

England and Wales	1986	1987	1988	1989	[1]1990	[3]1991
Deaths attributable to:
MDMA (ie ecstasy) or MDA	—	—	1	3	1	2
Amphetamine (not further described)	3	3	1	2	2	8
Other hallucinogens	—	1	—	2	—	[2]—
Deaths which also mention the above in combination with other drugs	4	4	4	2	2	[2]—
Total	7	8	6	9	5	[2]—

Source: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

[1] Provisional.

[2] Not available.

[3] Figures for 1991 only include deaths registered up to September 1991. Deaths of this nature result in an inquest thus delays of registration of up to one year may occur.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports of ecstacy use have been identified by local teams operating within the drugs prevention initiative.

Mr. John Patten: Fourteen of the 16 local drugs prevention teams have received such reports concerning MDMA—"Ecstasy".

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information about the drug ecstasy has been passed to police forces in order to assist analysis of material which has been seized and to pass warning information on to those in contact with potential users.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Drugs seized by police forces are sent to the Forensic Science Service, or in the case of the Metropolitan police, their own laboratories, who have the necessary expertise to identify them.

With regard to the provision of warning information for those in contact with potential users, I will write to my hon. Friend separately.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is being done through the Pompidou group of European countries to control and reduce the international trade in ecstasy and similar drugs and in the chemicals used to make them.

Mr. John Patten: The report of the G7 chemical action task force adopted by the London Economic summit in July 1991, recommended that the four main precursors used in the manufacture of MDMA—"ecstasy"—should be brought under control. This recommendation is being implemented in the European Community by an amendment to Council (EEC) Regulation 3677/90 and a draft Council directive, which are currently before the Council. The Pompidou Group will hold an expert meeting in March to consider how this and the other task force recommendations can be implemented most effectively at the wider European level; and I have asked the British representative in the Pompidou Group to ask the group to consider what further measures might be taken to curb the international trade in this and similar drugs.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been done to inform local drugs prevention initiative teams about ecstasy, its symptoms and its harmful effects.

Mr. John Patten: Each local team has been provided with a copy of "Drug abuse briefing", issued by the Institute for the Study of Drug Dependence, which includes information about the symptoms and harmful effects of a wide-range of drugs, including MDMA—"ecstasy".

Mental Health Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is issued to police authorities with regard to police involvement in returning to hospital patients subject to compulsory detention under the Mental Health Act 1983 who have absconded.

Mr. John Patten: Section 18 of the Mental Health Act 1983 provides that where a patient who is liable to be detained in hospital absents himself without leave, he may be taken into custody and returned to the hospital by certain authorized persons, including any police constable. Home Office circular No. 35/1986—"Consolidated Circular to the Police on Crime and Kindred Matters." which was issued to all police forces on 30 December 1986, drew attention to this provision. Further information about it was contained in a memorandum on the 1983 Act issued by the Department of Health and Social Security in 1983.

Correspondence

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East will receive a reply to his letter of 19 November 1991 concerning Mr. Twomey, prison number 5W 859.

Mrs. Rumbold: I wrote to the hon. Member on 23 December.

Extradition

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on seeking extradition of nationals of another country with which the United Kingdom has no extradition agreement for prosecution in connection with offences committed outside that country.

Mr. John Patten: Such requests are very rare but can be made in respect of offences over which the United Kingdom has jurisdiction if it is considered to be in the interests of justice to do so.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Police Complaints Authority to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 16 to 20 March.

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have applied in each of the last five years for visitors visas in (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Culcutta, (d) Dakha, (e) Karachi and (f) Islamabad; how many applications have been refused; and what is the percentage refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is given in the table.

Poll Tax

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been summonsed for poll tax arrears in England to the latest available date; what is the estimated cost of legal proceedings to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

During the period 1 April 1990 to 30 September 1991 magistrates courts in England issued approximately 7·5 million summonses. The estimated cost of legal proceedings during this period is £5 million.

Settlement Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the lengths of each of the queues for settlement applications in (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Calcutta, (d) Dhaka, (e) Karachi, (f) Islamabad, (g) Dar es Salaam and (h) Nairobi; and in each case what is the waiting time for interview.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

As at 31 December 1991, the number of people waiting for interview for settlement entry clearances were:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
(a) Bombay	0	365	423	201	989
(b) New Delhi	0	222	286	108	616
(d) Dhaka	400	1,345	187	455	2,387
(e) Karachi	6	89	21	4	120
(f) Islamabad	77	1,091	346	586	2,100

There are no queues in Calcutta, Dar es Salaam or Nairobi.

The estimated waiting time for interview in months are:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
(a) Bombay	0	3	9	12
(b) New Delhi	0	3	7	10
(d) Dhaka	3	5	6	10
(e) Karachi	1	2	3	6
(f) Islamabad	3	3	6	9

Settlement queues are organised as follows:

Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependant relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
Q2 All spouses, and all children under 18 years.
Q3 Fiance(e)s and others applying for first time for settlement.
Q4 Re-applicants.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Gas Pipeline, Irish Sea

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the implications for fishermen in area VII/A in the Irish sea of the proposed gas pipeline from Brighouse Bay in Kirkcudbright, Scotland, to Loughshinny, north of Dublin in the Republic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The proposed route for the pipeline from Brighouse bay to Loughshinny crosses a number of fishing grounds. The main fishing activities are trawling for demersal fish, nephrops and scallops with some seasonal trawling for pelagic species. There is also dredging for scallops, beam trawling and seine netting for whitefish. The implications for fishermen, both during construction and thereafter will depend on the exact route of the pipeline, the time of year it is laid and the practicality of measures, such as trenching, to minimise interference with fishing gear. The company sponsoring the project is discussing these aspects with fishermen before finalising proposals.

Where the seabed is soft, the pipeline is expected to bury itself and the company sponsoring the project wish to trench as much as possible of the remaining length. Where the seabed is very hard, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will need to insist on rock armouring with a smooth profile to minimise snagging by fishing gear.

Set-aside

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the workings of set-aside and the level of payments to farmers for land which is set aside.

Mr. Gummer: I have nothing to add to my recent statements on this subject on 12 December 1991, columns 547-50.

Beam Trawlers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many beam trawlers have been inspected at sea within the 12-mile limit to ensure they are complying with a 9m beam length restriction.

Mr. Curry: Every beam trawler inspected at sea has its gear, including beam length, checked and recorded. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of the number of such inspections inside and outside 12 miles, but in 1991, 112 British registered and 139 foreign registered vessels fishing with beam trawls were checked at sea by the Royal Navy on behalf of the Ministry, some on more than one occasion.

Fishing Gear

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to resolve complaints relating to gear conflict within the 12-mile zone off the Sussex coast.

Mr. Curry: My officials had three meetings with the industry, in London and Hastings, on 13 January. There is to be a further meeting with representatives of the netsmen and the trawlermen on 25 January. It will be chaired by the Ministry's district inspector of fisheries and will aim to reach an agreement between the industry parties to reduce the risk of gear conflicts in the area.

Shellfish

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations in England where shellfish samples were taken for testing for paralytic shellfish poisoning; and what was the frequency of such sampling at these locations in 1991.

Mr. Curry: Following is the reply:

Mussels

From April to August 1991, samples of mussels were taken from sites along the North east coast of England at Berwick, Holy Island, Budle Bay, Craster, Croquet, Cresswell, Blyth, Trow Rocks, Sunderland, Hartlepool, Redcar, Saltburn, Staithe Wyke, Whitby, Scalby Mills, Cornellian Bay, Filey, Flamborough and Bridlington.

Sites were sampled once a week. Frequency of testing was increased to twice weekly samples if certain levels of the PSP toxin were reached.

Samples of mussels were also taken, approximately monthly, at the Wash, Kings Lynn, Norfolk; Brancaster, Norfolk; Pandora Sands, Norfolk; Poole, Dorset; River Exe, South Devon; River Teign, South Devon; River Avon, South Devon and Heysham, Morecambe Bay.

Scallops

A small programme of scallop sampling on a research basis is carried out throughout the year. Also, from April to August, samples of scallops identified as those coming from the North east scallop fisheries were taken twice weekly from the main processing plants. If toxins reached certain levels, sampling was transferred to the major scallop ports at Seahouse and Amble on a twice weekly basis.

Queens

During July and August, when Queens were landed at ports along the North east coast at North Shields, Whitby, Scarborough and Bridlington, samples were taken twice weekly.

Crabs and Whelks

If certain levels in mussels were exceeded in a two week period then crabs and whelks were sampled twice weekly at Berwick, Holy Island, Amble, Blyth, North Shields, Redcar, Whitby, Scarborough and Bridlington.

Grant and Advice Schemes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the numbers of staff by grade employed in each of his Ministry's divisional offices in each grant and advisory scheme, and the number of staff employed by grade on the same schemes at each of the new regional scheme centres.

Mr. Gummer: The information is not available in the form requested. The purpose of the regional reorganisation is to provide a more cost effective and efficient service for customers. It is projected that the new structure will result in a net loss of about 150 posts across the country as a whole. Of these, about 40 are the result of efficiency savings that will arise from the concentration of grant and subsidy processing at fewer, larger centres.

Czechoslovakia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice and financial aid from his Ministry has been given to Czechoslovakia since 1989.

Mr. Gummer: Financial aid to the Czech and Slovak Republics is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. My Department has had many contacts at ministerial and official level concerning advice to the Czech and Slovak Republics, particularly regarding state farm privatisation and training in seeds and plant varieties matters. In addition, my Department has arranged the exhibition and donation of agricultural books to universities in the Czech and Slovak Republics.

Trawlers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many inspections his Department has had of individual trawlers who have de-rated engines within the 221 kW limit, to ensure they are complying with existing EC rules and their registration documents.

Mr. Curry: Every vessel inspected at sea has its official documents checked to ascertain its recorded engine power. In 1991, 1823 such inspections were carried out by the Royal Navy on behalf of the Ministry of which 735 were on United Kingdom registered vessels.

WALES

Leukaemia Research

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect he expects the granting of trust status to have in the level of research into leukaemia and associated blood disorders in Wales haematology units.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None.

Enforcement Action Appeals

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish, for each of the last 10 years, by district council area, the number of enforcement action appeals that he has (a) determined and (b) upheld.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Available information, for the whole of Wales, is as follows:

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Appeals determined	142	93	122	126	143	152	141	130	110	128
Appeals upheld (and Notices quashed)	65	29	48	48	63	83	85	54	54	65

In a number of cases where the enforcement notice was not quashed, appeals may have been successful to the extent that the requirements of the enforcement notice may have been varied.

Health Purchasing Consortium

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will reconsider his decision to set up a West Wales health purchasing consortium.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The hon. Gentleman is in error. My right hon. Friend has made no such decision. The existing health authorities remain. East Dyfed and Pembrokeshire health authorities, together with the Dyfed FHSA, have committed themselves to formulating arrangements for a collaborative approach in meeting the health care needs of their local residents. This is a local initiative which has been welcomed.

Land Acquisition

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each of the last 12 years, the public inquiries that have taken place in Wales relating to the acquisition of land for road construction schemes; and if he will separately distinguish each person who received reimbursement from his Department of costs for representation and appearance at such inquiries, together with the sum disbursed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The public inquiries that have been held in each of the last 12 years in respect of trunk road schemes in Wales that included land acquisition are detailed in the following table. Information relating to the reimbursement of costs of persons for either representation or appearance at such inquiries is not available.

Sows

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many breeding sows there are in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for 1971 and 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures from the June agricultural census are given in the following table:

Breeding Sows in Wales

1991	11,950
1981	16,256
1971	36,129

Ewes

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many breeding ewes there are in Wales; what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures from the June agricultural census are given in the following table:

Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue a definitive circular on fluoridation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I am considering this matter and I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

GPs (Night Calls)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department has taken to investigate the extent to which night-time calls pose a problem for general practitioners in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: All aspects of the GP contract are kept under continuous review by Health departments. It is for the General Medical Service Committee (GMSC) as the body properly representative of the profession, to raise any specific concerns through the normal negotiating channels. They have not done so on this matter.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence he has regarding variations in night-time calls made to general practitioners in Wales; and if he will provide the figures for each family health services authority area for each of the past five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Requests for night visits reflect patient demand and this will vary between different GP practices. Although a GP is a responsible for his patients 24 hours a day he is nevertheless free to exercise his clinical judgment on deciding whether a night visit is necessary.

The new GP contract which came into effect on 1 April 1990 introduced a two tier night visit fee payable to GPs by their local FHSA. The higher fee (£45) is payable in respect of night visits made by a doctor from the patient's own practice or from a small rota of local GPs. A lower fee of £15 is payable in all other circumstances. Prior to 1 April 1990 a single fee was payable.

The amounts paid to GPs for night visits in each FHSA area in Wales for the last five financial years are as follows:

Note:
Prior to 1 April 1990, a night visit fee was payable for each visit requested and made to a patient between the hours of 11 pm and 7 am.
Since 1 April 1990, the night visit fee period lies between the hours of 10 pm and 8 am (ie an extension of two hours).

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been done to inform all of those concerned with drugs misuse about ecstasy, its symptons and its harmful effects.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department already has a comprehensive non-specific prevention programme as part of its initiative to combat drug misuse through which information about ecstasy will be disseminated.

In respect of the medical profession, health departments have recently published updated guidelines on clinical management of drug misuse and dependence. These are being circulated to every doctor in England, Scotland and Wales. The guidelines include information for doctors on the problems associated with use of ecstasy and similar drugs and recommend a range of treatments for these problems.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he has made to the terms and conditions of employment of the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency subsequent to the appointment of Dr. Gwyn Jones as national governor for Wales on the British Broadcasting Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Tuesday 14 January 1992 at col. 549-50.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 14 January, Official Report, columns 549-50, if he proposes any alterations in the terms and conditions of the deputy chairman and chief executive of the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Shellfish

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the locations in Wales where shellfish samples were taken for testing for paralytic shellfish poisoning; and what was the frequency of such sampling at these locations in 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: During 1991, no specific programme of sampling shellfish for paralytic shellfish poisoning was carried out in Wales. Maritime environmental health departments routinely monitor shellfish for a variety of microbiological and chemical contaminants.

Apprentices

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take to assist apprentices in their final year of training to obtain employment.

Mr. David Hunt: The Employment Service offers a range of services aimed at helping people to find employment.

DEFENCE

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Union flag was not flown on the flag poles at Drumadd barracks, Armagh on Christmas day 1991; what new arrangements will be made to fly the Union flag on appropriate dates at this location; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The flying of flags at Army establishments is governed by Queen's regulations for the Army. Drumadd barracks, Armagh is not one of the locations in Northern Ireland which is listed in Queen's regulations as authorised to fly the Union flag. The list has not been revised for some time however, and it is now being reviewed.

Nuclear Convoys

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policy and precautions his Department implements when a convoy carrying nuclear warheads travels on United Kingdom public roads in adverse weather conditions; and what other public authorities and emergency services are informed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is our policy not to undertake nuclear weapon convoys when adverse weather conditions are forecast along the route. Local police forces are always informed in advance when convoys will enter their area of responsibility, and close contact is maintained throughout a convoy movement.

Injury Insurance

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain an estimate, on the open insurance market, of the approximate annual premium required to provide blanket insurance cover against injury whilst on duty—equivalent to that generally accepted in industry—for (a) all armed service personnel, and (b) all civilian personnel under the command of the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Service and civilian personnel are eligible for benefits under the Armed Forces pension scheme and principal civil service pension scheme respectively where injury or illness results in premature retirement. In addition, the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security provides benefits to former service personnel who experience disability attributable to their service in the Armed Forces. Civilian personnel are eligible for an enhanced pension for loss of earning capacity resulting from injury or illness attributable to their employment. All personnel are eligible for compensation when the injury or illness results from MOD negligence. A voluntary personal accident insurance scheme is available for service personnel and a similar scheme is likely to be offered to civilian personnel.

Simon Britten

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to decide on the release from medical cadetship of Simon Britten, currently a senior house officer in accident and emergency at Queen Alexandra hospital, Portsmouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The earliest that a decision can be made on Captain Britten's application for premature voluntary retirement is 7 February 1992.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorist Firebomb Attacks

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each year or financial year since 1972 in (a) Belfast and (b) the rest of Northern Ireland, the number of terrorist firebomb attacks, the amount of damage, the number of persons who have (i) been arrested, (ii) charged and (iii) convicted in respect of the attacks and the rate of convictions.

Dr. Mawhinney: I regret that the information requested is not available from existing records.

The best available relevant information is set out in the table. This shows, for each year since 1974, the number of incendiary devices which have exploded or have been defused in Northern Ireland. It also shows the number of persons charged with and convicted of explosives offences (it is not possible to identify separately explosives offences in which an incendiary device was an ingredient).

Note:
(a) Statistics on charges and convictions are kept according to the most serious offence with which an individual has been charged. The figures above do not therefore include persons convicted of explosives offences who have also been charged or convicted of a more serious offence, eg. attempted murder.
(b) A person convicted in a particular year was not necessarily charged in the same year.

Disability Allowances

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what work is being considered or begun, or for which funding is earmarked by the Department or the Social Security Agency for publicity in connection with the introduction of disability allowance and disability working allowance.

(2) how much money will be allowed for public education to be undertaken by his Department and/or the Social Security Agency prior to and following the introduction of the disability allowance and disability working allowance so that those who are disabled, informal carers and advice workers with caring professions are aware of the changes; and how the funds available will be spread over the number of staff/hours, print and broadcast media work, and printed materials on the benefits.

Mr. Hanley: A comprehensive publicity programme is planned to launch disability living allowance and disability working allowance in Northern Ireland. This will complement national advertising and will include local television commercials, advertisements in both the press and specialist publications for general practitioners, consultants and other health professionals. Education and awareness programmes aimed at carers, advisers, health professionals and the social security office staff will also run throughout 1992.

The Social Security Agency has established a communications team to take forward the publicity and education and awareness programmes. Leaflets explaining basic entitlement and eligibility criteria for the new benefits and the dates from which new claims will be accepted have been sent to organisations concerned with disabled people. A special disability living allowance leaflet for potential claimants with a tear-off coupon to obtain the claim pack will be available in post offices and social security offices from the end of January 1992. The disability working allowance claim pack will be available from the same sources from February 1992.

The Social Security Agency will be writing to people who are currently getting mobility allowance and/or attendance allowance to tell them that they will be transferred automatically in April to disability living allowance at the same rate of benefit and to inform them how to claim extra help if they think they are eligible. A benefits inquiry line will be established to provide specific information about the new benefits and where a caller is experiencing difficulty completing a claim form arrangements can be made for an officer to visit his or her home.

Information about the cost of these measures is not readily available.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the projected targets of people to be in receipt of disability working allowances in 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Hanley: It is estimated that by October 1992 approximately 1,700 people in Northern Ireland will be in receipt of disability working allowance and that this will increase to around 1,900 by October 1993. A further increase for 1994 is not anticipated at present.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people he expects to be in receipt of disability living allowance on its introduction in April; and how many people currently receive attendance allowance and mobility allowance.

Mr. Hanley: The total numbers of people in Northern Ireland in receipt of attendance allowance and mobility allowance at the latest date for which information is available are 37,991 and 16,600 respectively.

It is estimated that some 32,600 attendance allowance and mobility allowance recipients will transfer automatically to disability living allowance when it is introduced on 6 April 1992. Additionally it is estimated that in the first year around 9,500 disabled people who currently do not get either attendance allowance or mobility allowance will qualify for the new benefit.

Terrorism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each year since 1 January 1968 the number of terrorist incidents by category in which they were recorded in police records, the sums of (a) criminal damage and (b) personal injury, assessed by his Department in each year as arising from those incidents, the sums claimed, and the sums paid in each year to the latest available date.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 14 January 1992]: It is not known precisely how many terrorist incidents there have been since 1968. However, information about terrorist crime is published in the annual report of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and his 1990 report, a copy of which is in the Library, provides information for the years 1969-1990. Information about criminal damage and criminal injury claims is not held in the form requested but such information as is readily available is set out in the following table:

Total compensation paid in settled claims which were terrorist related

Shellfish

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the locations in Northern Ireland where shellfish samples were taken for testing for paralytic shellfish poisoning; and what was the frequency of such sampling at these locations in 1991.

Mr. Hanley: In 1991 samples were taken from the northern and southern sides of Belfast lough between May and September at intervals of a week to a fortnight. Strangford lough, Carlingford lough, Dundrum bay and Lough Foyle were sampled on two occasions during this period and the North coast at Portrush once.

SCOTLAND

University of Dundee

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many undergraduates entered the University of Dundee in the 1991-92 academic year; and how many of these were from (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) the Republic of Ireland and (e) Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available information, which relates to 1990-91, is given in the table:

Ecstasy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been done to inform all of those concerned with drugs misuse about ecstasy, its symptoms and its harmful effects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A comprehensive programme of information and education to prevent and discourage drug misuse is undertaken by the Health Education Board for Scotland. Material is regularly updated and contains information about "ecstasy". The Chief Medical Officer recently issued to every doctor and final year medical student in Scotland revised guidelines on the clinical management of drug misuse and dependence, which include information on the problems associated with the use of "ecstasy". The Scottish Office Education Department makes specific grant available for the in-service training of teachers in health education, including education about drugs, which keeps abreast of trends in drug misuse. Training for police officers covers aspects of drug misuse including current trends in drug taking and symptoms and harmful effects. The Scottish Drugs Forum, which is funded by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department, has produced a comprehensive guide to drugs currently used by drug takers, for use by drug workers.

Royal Parks

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the companies that have tendered for each of the royal parks maintenance contracts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The issue raised concerns operational matters within Historic Scotland, the executive agency within the Scottish Office which maintains the royal parks at Holyrood and Linlithgow Peel, and I have therefore asked the director to write to the hon. Member. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Shellfish

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the locations in Scotland, outside Orkney waters, where shellfish samples were taken for testing for paralytic shellfish poisoning; and what was the frequency of such sampling at these locations in 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The basic programme for monitoring for PSP toxins around the Scottish coast which began in April 1991 was based on 46 primary sampling sites (listed). In addition, secondary sites were included if certain levels of PSP toxin were detected.

The frequency of sampling necessarily varied from site to site according to local conditions, but areas where PSP problems were detected were targeted for intensive weekly sampling. Between April and September an average of 64 sites per week were tested (this figure includes Orkney, since data on sampling frequency at individual sites cannot readily be disaggregated). After September, sampling was largely confined to primary and secondary sites in areas which had known PSP problems.

GP Contracts

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of the introduction of the new general practitioner contract on general practitioners' incomes and the service offered to the public.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the first year of the new contract GPs average incomes have risen substantially.

Despite the reservations expressed by the profession there has been a positive and impressive response to the new contract which was designed to encourage and reward improved performance by GPs. It is already clear that the range of services offered to the public has expanded. In particular, the introduction of new target payments has proved very successful in helping to stimulate high levels achievement by practice teams; as at 1 April 1991 over 97 per cent of GPs in Scotland had achieved target levels for primary immunisation, over 88 per cent. for pre-school boosters and over 96 per cent. (excluding Greater Glasgow where comparable figures are not available) for cervical cytology. Where GPs undertake their own night visits, for example, or offer a wider range of services such as a minor surgery, health promotion or child health surveillance, this has been reflected in their income; during the year ended 31 March 1991 GPs in Scotland undertook over 76,000 minor surgery procedures and over 69,000 health promotion clinics. And most importantly of all, we are seeing high levels of patient satisfaction

Electoral Registration

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of electors in the 1992 provisional electoral register for each constituency in Scotland and the equivalent number on the 1991 register.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 January 1992]: The information requested by the hon. Member is set out in the table. I must emphasise, however, that the numbers in the draft registers are likely to differ from those in the final registers because of late returns. The final registers will be published in a few weeks' time.

HLCA

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average length of delay in 1991 and 1990 respectively for the dispatch of hill livestock compensatory allowance applications forms; when he hopes this year's application forms will be sent out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1992]: Application forms for the 1992 HLCA scheme were issued to producers on 13 January. The corresponding dates in 1991 and 1990 were 8 February and 28 December respectively.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to review the administrative arrangements governing the sending out and subsequent processing of hill livestock compensatory allowance applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 16 January 1992]: We aim to ensure that 85 per cent. of HLCA payments are made by the end of March each year. That remains our target for the 1992 scheme.

Committee of the Regions

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the places allocated to the United Kingdom in the Committee of the Regions will be allotted to Scotland; how he intends to ensure fair geographical distribution and fair political balance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 16 January 1992]: Membership of the Committee of the Regions will be determined unanimously by the Council of Ministers acting on a proposal from each of the member states. The committee is not expected to be established until 1993. Over the coming months the Government will be considering how the 24 United Kingdom seats will be allocated as between the different parts of the United Kingdom and how those seats should be filled.

THE ARTS

Lyceum Theatre

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to assist towards the establishment of a dance theatre on the present Lyceum theatre site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Foundation for Sport and the Arts has given a grant of £65,000 to the Lyceum theatre dance house project for a preliminary study on the possible operation of the theatre as a national dance theatre. We must now await the outcome of that feasibility study.

I look forward to the eventual restoration of this magnificent, but sadly deteriorated, theatre. Although it is a splendid idea, I understand that the dance house project is not the only possibility for the future of the Lyceum.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those goods and services which the Council of Ministers of the European Community currently agrees can be subject to a reduced rate of 15 per cent. VAT, showing those that are currently exempt from value added tax, or zero rated respectively, in the United Kingdom and any commodity of each category not featuring in the Council's current list.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There has been no discussion by the Council of Ministers on the application of a reduced rate of VAT of 15 per cent. However, a political agreement was reached at ECOFIN on 24 June 1991 to apply a minimum standard rate of VAT of 15 per cent. from 1 January 1993. Agreement was also reached providing for the retention of existing United Kingdom zero rates. It was further agreed that member states may apply either one or two reduced rates of VAT below their standard rate, and that these reduced rates may not be less than 5 per cent. The reduced rate shall only apply to supplies of goods and services defined in a list of categories, the basis of which was agreed at ECOFIN on 18 March 1991. The list is as follows. Items included in each category which are zero-rated in the United Kingdom under schedule 5 of the Value Added Tax Act are identified by reference to the group number of that Act.

Category Number and Description		Zero-rated under Schedule 5
1.	Foodstuffs for human and animal consumption (excluding alcoholic beverages).	Group 1
2.	Water supplies.	Group 2
3.	Pharmaceutical products.	Group 14
4.	Medical equipment for the disabled.	Group 4 and Group 14
5.	Passenger transport.	Group 10
6.	Books, newspapers and periodicals.	Group 3
7.	Admissions to shows, theatres, circuses, fairs, concerts, museums, zoos, cinemas, exhibitions, libraries and access to television.
8.	The output of writers, composers, performers etc. and copyright
9.	Social housing.	Group 8
10.	Farm inputs.	Group 1
11.	Hotel accommodation.
12.	Hire of camping sites.
13.	Admission to sporting events.
14.	Use of sporting facilities.
15.	Welfare and charitable activities.	Group 16
16.	Funeral undertakings, cremation.

Category Number and Description	Zero-rated under Schedule 5
17. Medical care in hospitals, spas etc., dental services.	Group 14
18. Street cleaning, refuse collection.

At ECOFIN on 24 June 1991 Ministers agreed that the list of categories be extended to include supplies of natural gas and electricity.

Ministers also agreed that for supplies of restaurant services, young children's clothing and footwear, and all housing; a reduced rate may continue to be applied by those member states applying a reduced rate [1]to these products on 1 January 1991; and for Spain and Luxembourg a reduced, or super reduced rate may be applied.

The goods and services which are zero-rated in the United Kingdom and which are not included in the list of reduced-rate categories are sewerage services; fuel and power for domestic and charity use; housing not provided as part of a social policy; reconstruction, and supplies of services in connection with the alteration, of protected buildings; residential houseboats and caravans; clothing and footwear for young children; protective boots and helmets for industrial use; motor-cycle helmets.

Negotiations are continuing on the reduced rate list.

The inclusion in a reduced rate list of goods and services which are specifically exempted from VAT, or for which a technical zero rate may apply, by provision in the 6th VAT directive is not necessary. Other exemptions are provided for by derogation under article 28(3) of the 6th VAT directive.

[1] Note: Zero rates do not fall within the definition of reduced rates.

Energy Tax

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to receive results of Treasury models of the social effects of the EC energy tax proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The European Commission has yet to produce a formal proposal for a carbon/energy tax and the communication presented to the Council was not specified in sufficient detail to allow the likely social impact of the measure to be estimated. The effects would depend both on the specification of the tax and the use made of the revenue it would generate.

Mortgage Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the letter on mortgage payments given in his answer of 18 July 1991, Official Report, columns 251-52, and give the information on a monthly basis.

Mr. Maude: The current costs net of basic rate tax relief for average new building society mortgages in the second quarter of 1988 are shown in the table.

Region	Average new building society mortgages quarter 2, 1988	Monthly interest payment[1] June 1988[2]	Current[3]	Increase

[3] At an interest rate of 11·50 per cent.

Company Cars

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the income tax, and where applicable, national insurance contributions, payable on the benefit conferred by possession of a typical company car in each of the financial years (a) 1979-80, (b) 1984-85, (c) 1989-90 and (d) 1991-92; and what would have been the amount payable (i) in 1984-85 if the car scale benefit rates had remained those applicable during 1979-80, (ii) in 1989-90 if the car scale benefit rates had remained those applicable during (1) 1979-80, (2) 1984-85 and (iii) in 1991-92 if the car scale benefit rates had remained those applicable during (A) 1979-80, (B) 1984-85), (C) 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 16 January 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

	Basic rate of tax	Scale charge for a typical company car[1]
	Per cent.	£
1979-80	30	250·00
1984-85	30	480·00
1989-90	25	1,850·00
1991-92	25	2,650·00

Income tax charge at basic rate due on car scale charge applicable for:
1979-80	75·00	75·00	62·50	62·50
1984-85	—	120·00	120·00	120·00
1989-90	—	—	462·50	462·50
1991-92	—	—	—	662·50

[1] A typical company car is taken as one which is less than four years old, in the middle range of cylinder capacity (1301cc to 1800 cc for 1979-80 and 1984-85, 1401 cc to 2000 cc for 1989-90 and 1991-92) and with an original market value below the relevant limit (£8,000 for 1979-80, £16,000 for 1984-85 and £19,250 for 1989-90 and 1991-92). It is also assumed that business mileage is between 2,500 and 18,000.

Employers' national insurance contributions on the car scale benefits rates were introduced from 1991-92. The contributions payable in respect of 1991-92 for the car scale benefit rates at levels applicable in 1979-80, 1984-85, 1989-90 and 1991-92 for a typical company car would be £26, £49·92, £192·40 and £275·60 respectively.

Iraq Supergun

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to investigate the business connections between the British firms Walter Somers (Halesowen) and Forgemasters (Sheffield) and the Swiss firm Von Roll Steel Products, regarding the provision of recoil systems and breechblocks to Iraq for its supergun project.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 16 January 1992]: The hon. Member should be aware that the business activities of Walter Somers (Halesowen) and Forgemasters Engineering Ltd. (Sheffield) in relation to the Iraqi supergun project were the subject of an investigation by Customs and Excise in 1990 which was brought to a halt when criminal charges were withdrawn in the magistrates court on 15 November 1990. Customs and Excise will take account of any new information not already covered in their investigation in deciding what, if any, further investigation would be appropriate.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Southwark Diocese

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the net income over expenditure or expenditure over income contributed to the funds of the Church by the diocese of Southwark for the last year for which records are available.

Mr. Alison: The total cost of ministers' stipends in the diocese of Southwark in 1991-92 is expected to be nearly £6 million, 46 per cent. of which is likely to be met through giving by Church people in the diocese, 40 per cent. by Church Commissioners' allocations and 14 per cent. from fees and other local income.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to review economic or military aid to Sri Lanka in light of its record on human rights.

Mrs. Chalker: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated in his written reply of 24 July 1991 to a question from the hon. Member, following the Sri Lanka Government's expulsion of our previous high commissioner in Colombo we took a number of measures including delaying consideration of major new aid commitments pending the appointment of a new high commissioner and a further review of the human rights situation.

Our new high commissioner took up his post in November, and the review will take place in the near future, with the benefit of his advice.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received on the Students for Human Rights organisation in Sri Lanka; and what efforts he has made on behalf of its secretary Camunu Yasus Senviratne who disappeared on 9 December 1989.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are aware of the Students for Human Rights organisation but have had no recent contacts with them. Our High Commissioner and other heads of mission in Colombo made representations to the Sri Lankan authorities about Mr. Senviratne's disappearance at the time. The Sri Lankan Government are in no doubt about our deep concern at the number of disappearances in recent years.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many political prisoners he estimates to be in Sri Lankan jails; and if he will call through the United Nations for the abolition of the emergency regulations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Authoritative figures are not available, and estimates vary considerably. We have regularly encouraged the Sri Lankan Government to review the need for all its emergency regulations, but have no plans to raise the matter in the United Nations.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding human rights abuses in Sri Lanka in the past three months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I receive regular reports on the human rights situation in Sri Lanka. The most significant recent development has been the Sri Lankan Government's undertaking on 12 December to implement most of the recommendations made by Amnesty International in its September 1991 report on "Sri Lanka —The North East". We welcome this and will continue to watch the situation closely.

Visa Office (Tehran)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide a full-scale visa issuing office in Tehran, and when the facility will be opened.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Visas for some categories of visitors from Iran are already issued by our embassy in Tehran. I do not envisage a full scale visa operation at the embassy in the near future, but it may be possible to expand the operation in stages as circumstances allow.

Visa Office (Taipei)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visas have been issued in Taipei since the visa handling office has been established there; and whether the income received equals or exceeds the cost of operating this facility in Taiwan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The numbers of visas issued by the visa handling office in Taipei from 1989-1991 was 78,782. The income during this period was:

1989-90	824,456
1990-91	1,019,975
[1]1991	689,903

[1] April-October.

The total cost of the visa operation was:

1989-90	56,917
[1]1990-91	206,030

[1] April-October costing figures not yet available.

Cambodia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving to the Cambodian Government with clearing their minefields.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: UN Security Council Resolution 728 of 8 January expanded the mandate of the United Nations advance mission in Cambodia (UNAMIC) to include training in mine clearance and the initiation of a demining programme. The United Kingdom will contribute financially through payment of our assessed contribution (6·1 per cent.) to the costs of UNAMIC and later to the costs of the UN transitional authority in Cambodia (UNTAC).

In response to a request from the UN Secretariat, we have agreed in principle to provide additionally a number of experts to UNAMIC's mine clearance training unit. We have also donated £60,000 to the Halo trust, a British non-governmental organisation, to help its mine survey work in Cambodia on behalf of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

New Embassies

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European Community partners with a view to sharing the responsibilities in the new embassies to be established in eastern and central Europe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We favour practical co-operation between EC missions in third countries. EC missions are already co-operating practically in fields such as emergency planning and medical care. We hope that the responsibilities opening in central and eastern Europe will extend the scope for practical co-operation. We are therefore discussing this with several of our EC partners.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the new Turkish Government on a new initiative for a settlement to the present dispute in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We remain committed to the search for a solution in Cyprus, and continue to work actively in support of the UN Secretary General's mission of good offices. We maintain regular contact with all parties to the dispute. I have had valuable discussions recently with both the Turkish and Cyprus Foreign Ministers and also discussed the next steps with the UN Secretary General.

Lockerbie

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the efforts of the Government of Libya to prosecute the Libyan nationals alleged to have committed offences in connection with the Lockerbie bombing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We believe that Libyan intelligence services are heavily involved in the functioning of the Libyan judiciary. As is clear from the Lord Advocate's announcement on 14 November, it is alleged that the Libyan intelligence services are implicated in the bombing of Pan Am 103. There can therefore be no confidence in the impartiality of a Libyan court.

Libya

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extradition agreement exists between the United Kingdom and Libya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no extradition agreement between the United Kingdom and Libya.

Foreign Affairs Council

Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held between 10 to 11 January.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 10 January.

The Council agreed that the Community and member states should play a full part in the Washington conference on help to the former Soviet Union planned for 22-23 January. The Council had a preliminary discussion on the Community's relations with the newly-independent states of the former Soviet Union and invited the Commission to make specific proposals.

Ministers issued a statement welcoming the reconvening of the peace conference on Yugoslavia in the presence of all parties to the conflict. They noted the contribution by Montenegro towards creating the conditions necessary for the continuation of the conference. Ministers expressed their readiness to apply positive measures to Montenegro, similar to those agreed for Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia-Herzogovina and Macedonia.

Ministers also discussed my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's proposal to hold a special meeting of the UN Security Council on 31 January. In a brief discussion of South Africa, Ministers confirmed their agreement that the EC ban on imports of iron, steel and krugerrands should be lifted and invited the Commission to submit a proposal to this effect to a future Council for formal adoption.

After the Council, Trade and Agriculture Ministers had an informal discussion on the GATT Uruguay round and reviewed the prospects for a successful conclusion of the round in the light of the draft agreement proposed by Mr. Dunkel, the GATT Director-General.

ENERGY

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of Nuclear Electric regarding the extension or amendment of the existing nuclear plant operating agreement to cover Sizewell B PWR nuclear power station; and if he will place a copy of the agreement in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no such discussions. He is unaware of any agreement with the title "existing nuclear plant operating agreement".

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has given guarantees to the chairman of Nuclear Electric concerning the relationship of the Sizewell B PWR nuclear power station with the National Grid Company and the electricity generator and distributor pool and operating arrangements on completion of the Sizewell B station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There will be no unique arrangements in respect of output produced at Sizewell B. The non-fossil fuel obligation and levy arrangements will treat the output from Sizewell B in the same way as output from Nuclear Electric's existing portfolio of stations. The arrangements run until 1998. The Government will undertake a wide ranging review of the future prospects for nuclear power in the United Kingdom in 1994.

Energy Management Assistance Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many small and medium companies he anticipates will be assisted under the energy management assistance scheme—EMAS—what provisions he is making for publicising the availability of consultancy advice under EMAS; what steps he is taking to ensure an even distribution of awareness of the availability of EMAS grants in each United Kingdom region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My energy efficiency office has set itself the target of 500 successful applications for grants under the energy management assistance scheme during the 1992-93 financial year, with 1,000 grants in each of the subsequent two years. The scheme will be open to applicants throughout Great Britain and I understand that the Department for Economic Development is considering a similar scheme for Northern Ireland.

There was some preliminary publicity about EMAS at the national energy management exhibition and conference in December, when consultants and equipment suppliers from throughout the United Kingdom were able to learn about the principles of the scheme. This information was reported in four trade journals, leading to over a hundred inquiries from all parts of the United Kingdom.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy will launch the scheme formally through the technical press in February and detailed guidelines and application forms for EMAS will be printed in preparation for this. The Energy Efficiency Office's own journal "Energy Management", which has a very wide circulation, will also publicise EMAS.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rubber (Recycling)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance his department is giving to United Kingdom firms in recycling used motor tyres into rubber granules.

Mr. Leigh: Companies engaged in recycling activities, including firms recycling used motor tyres into rubber granules, are able to apply for grant aid from a number of schemes run by the Department. For example, the Department offers, on a regional basis, assistance via its enterprise initiative. The Department also operates two specifically environment-related schemes: the environment technology innovation scheme—ETIS—which aims to support pre-competitive industrial research on a collaborative basis; and the DTI environmental management options scheme—DEMOS—which encourages the wider adoption of proven best practices in environmental technology.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he is giving to market United Kingdom produced rubber granules to substitute for imports.

Mr. Leigh: It is open to United Kingdom manufacturers of rubber granules to apply for assistance for marketing consultancy under the Department's enterprise initiative.

EC Regional Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the regional share of successful applications for assistance under SPUR, support for products under research, SMART, the small firms merit award for research and technology, LINK and other innovation schemes, for each United Kingdom standard region in 1989-90, 1990-91 and up to 31 October this year.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 20 December 1991]: The table gives the share of successful applications for assistance for the major schemes falling under the Department of Trade and Industry's innovation budget for each region of the United Kingdom for 1989-90, 1990-91 and until 31 October 1991 in the current financial year.

Notes:

1. SPUR was not launched until 1991-92.
2. Figures for the year to date are not necessarily representative of the expected full-year picture.
3. Figures for LINK, EUREKA, ATP (Advanced Technology Programmes), and GICP (General Industrial Collaborative Programmes) have been aggregated because they share the characteristic of collaborative schemes that information is recorded on the region of the lead organisation but not on the location of other collaborators. Care needs to be taken therefore in interpreting the regional significance of the figures.
4. Other activities under the innovation budget—notably technology transfer—do not have the location of the work recorded because they are conducted on a national scale.
5. Support for activities in Northern Ireland is largely provided through other budgetary mechanisms by the Northern Ireland Department.

Iraq (Military Nuclear Programme)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to investigate the links identified by the United Nations special investigation commission in Iraq between the London-based Meed International Company and the Technology and Development Group and the German companies H. N. Metalform of Drensteinfurt, Machinenbau Technikhandel Magdeburg, Dieburg, Schenk Werkzeug Machinenbau and Rittal-Werk Rudolf Lok in supplying high technology equipment to the Iraqi military nuclear programme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 15 January 1992]: I am aware that the inspections in Iraq by the United Nations Special Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency has revealed the names of many companies around the world which have traded with Iraq, including some from Britain. It is possible that more names will be revealed as time goes on.

Any indications of wrongdoing will be investigated urgently.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will refer the opening of large stores on Sundays to the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 16 January 1992]: No. Competition legislation is not designed to apply to the opening of large stores on Sundays.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 201

SESSION 1991–92

16th December 1991—17th January 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
